The American medical-care system has not settled on a mechanism to evaluate technology that is satisfactory to the disparate interested parties; as a consequence, an increasing number of organizations, public and private, are engaging in assessment in one fashion or another. Manufacturers of drugs and devices develop products and are required by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to conduct tests for premarket approval of them. Teaching hospitals and clinics have long led the way in determining the effective use of medical technologies.

The American Academy of Pediatrics has developed recommendations concerning immunization practices, and the American Public Health Association periodically compiles a list of effective preventive and therapeutic procedures for infectious diseases. The American Hospital Association and the American College of Radiology have been involved in similar activities, as has the American Medical Association (AMA). Most recently, the AMA has sought to fill the vacuum left by the demise of the National Center for Health Care Technology—an end that the AMA abetted—with a new project, the Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technology Assessment Program. This is a mechanism designed to enable the AMA, with the use of physician panels, to answer quickly questions that arise concerning the safety and effectiveness of medical technologies.

The American College of Physicians is engaged in what is perhaps the most ambitious private exercise in technology assessment: its Clinical Efficacy Assessment Project. This project is funded largely by a three-year grant of $650,412 from the John A. Hartford Foundation and is directed by Dr. J. Sanford Schwartz. The college, which endorsed more readily than most professional societies the concept that medical practice should be sensitive to cost, has worked closely with the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association's Medical Necessity Project since 1976. The Clinical Efficacy Assessment Project, which focuses on procedures, tests, and therapeutic interventions within the purview of internal medicine, represents an expansion of this earlier work. As the funding runs out, its stewards now seem bent on scaling down the project, even though they concede that the need for technology assessment is greater than ever.

Obviously, there are other organizations engaged in forms of medical-technology assessment that I have not catalogued in this short list. But even a comprehensive compilation, as the congressional Office of Technology Assessment noted in a recent publication, does "not constitute a coherent system for assessing all classes of medical technologies. The present approach is characterized by multiple participants from the public and private sectors, and by uncoordinated activities. Complicating matters further is the large number of medical technologies appearing every year. The result is an overload and confusion among decisionmakers and consumers." [1]

This report will focus on new expressions of concern over the chaotic state of medical-technology evaluation in the United States. These expressed concerns may further complicate an already complex mix of forces at work in technology evaluation, but they also hold some promise for increasing the importance attached to technoloigy assessment in polilcy circles. In other words, such concerns may represent the beginnings of a more influential constituency for technology assessment—an important political ingredient whose absence has thwarted development of a more coherent assessment process.

Politicians, like most Americans, have an abiding faith in the value of medical care. Thus, it came as something of a surprise to members of the House Science and Technology Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations when they learned at recent public hearings that some third-party payers were not financing liver transplantations because they still regarded the procedure as "experimental," even though survival rates for patients who had recently received transplants had improved dramatically. Vivid in the minds of legislators were newspaper accounts of children suffering from biliary atresia who needed liver transplantations to have a chance for survival.

Representative Albert Gore, Jr. (D-Tenn.), subcommittee chairman, expressed the greatest concern over the failure of current evaluative mechanisms to review expeditiously the efficacy of liver transplantation. Gore articulated his view as the leadoff witness on July 29 before the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and the Environment. (Representative Henry A. Waxman, [D-Calif.], chairman of this subcommittee, organized the hearing in order to build a record that would document the need to develop more effective procedures for procurement of human organs. Waxman will soon introduce a bill that he hopes will achieve this goal.) In a subsequent interview, Gore pinpointed his concerns:

"There are serious shortcomings in the national system of health-care technology assessment. Among these is the fragmentation between the federal government, a variety of professional groups and third-party insurers, all with distinct, overlapping priorities. In this fragmented system, technologies selected for review do not reflect a systematic identification process but rather a reaction to questions of fiscal reimbursement. Thus, new technologies such as organ transplants are disproportionately selected for review while equally expensive, older procedures with questionable outcomes are uncritically reimbursed. . . . I believe that a vigorous and broadly based health-care technology process must be put in place as soon as possible. Ideally, such a process should include the federal and private sectors, should provide authority and ample funding for a systematic and ongoing review of all technologies, old as well as new, and should be separated from reimbursement decisions."

The Reagan administration requested no budget and Congress appropriated no funds for the National Center for Health Care Technology, and as a consequence, it folded in 1981. Since then, the DHHS has lodged its principal technology-assessment activities within the National Center for Health Services Research, in a tiny enclave called the Office of Health Technology Assessment. Headed by Dr. Harold Margulies, it has four professionals—two registered nurses and two health-service researchers—working on assessment issues. These four staff members turn out judgments for the Health Care Financing Administration on the safety and efficacy of technologies. The office does not calculate economic, ethical, or social considerations in its assessments.

Because of the size and standing of the Office of Health Technology Assessment in the bureaucratic pecking order of the DHHS, It cannot begin to accomplish in a timely fashion the technology-assessment task that it faces. The office draws on other entities within the DHHS, the most important of which is the Office of Medical Applications of Research at the National Institutes of Health, but it is nevertheless overwhelmed by its mandate. It is worth mentioning in passing that the Health Care Financing Administration is highly dependent on the judgments of the National Institutes of Health concerning scientific issues that involve technology and its value in medical care.

Exacerbating the plight of the Office of Health Technology Assessment is the presence of a staff that is basically not trained in the complex ways of assessment. Most of the staff members ended up in this office because they had lost jobs in other DHHS programs that were curtailed by the administration. Also, the process of assessment is very cumbersome and time-consuming; in most cases, an assessment takes more than one year to complete. For example, in April 1982 the Health Care Financing Administration requested that the Office of Health Technology Assessment evaluate the safety and efficacy of liver transplantation. The office anticipates that the DHHS will render a judgment by this fall. In testimony given on April 27 before the Gore panel. Dr. Edward N. Brandt, Jr., assistant DHHS secretary for health, conceded that "there is no defined accepted process for assessing new medical technologies except devices and drugs, fundamentally, which go through the FDA. . . . I do not argue with the fact that our process for looking at technology assessment needs re-examination. To that end, over a year ago, we convened a meeting involving professional societies, insurance carriers, and other groups to look at that whole question, and then went with the results of that to the Institute of Medicine, and we have asked them . . . to look at the issue."

Expressing the Reagan administration's philosophy, which favors less rather than more federal involvement in the Nation's medical-care system, Brandt testified that technology assessement "is not really a federal responsibility. This is a private sector responsibility, and one that the federal government should certainly participate in, because we have a fairly major stake in the outcome of it, but it is one that ought to be done on the outside."

Reflecting its own concern over the absence of an adequate assessment mechanism, the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences last year constituted the Committee to Plan a Private/Public Sector Entity in Technology Assessment in Medical Care. Unlike most of the institute's study committees, which approach subjects without an end result fully in mind, this one was given a name that left no doubt about the intended outcome of its deliberations.

The committee, which is chaired by Dr. Jeremiah A. Barondess, a professor of clinical medicine at the Cornell University Medical College, has drafted a report that calls for the establishment of a technology-assessment consortium that would be affiliated with the Institute of Medicine. The consortium would be directed by a board of 15 members drawn from the public and private sectors. The initial governing board and its chairman would be appointed by the president of the National Academy of Sciences. Thereafter, the consortium's board would nominate and elect its own members, according to its own bylaws.

The consortium's scope as an assessor of technology would include the development and evaluation of evidence concerning the efficacy, safety, cost, cost-effectiveness, and when appropriate, policy implications of the development or use (or both) of a specific technology. The consortium's role would involve not only the promotion of effective technologies but the retirement of inappropriate or obsolete medical technologies as well. Perhaps its central function would be to serve as a clearinghouse of information on medical technologies and their assessment—a role that reflects the Institute of Medicine committee's recognition that coordination among public and private assessment bodies does not now exist.

The committee's recommendation for creation of a private-public assessment body derives from a concern that some balance be achieved between the two sectors if both are to accept the new organization. The draft report spoke to this delicate political consideration:

"In medical technology assessment, a strong federal authority backed by generous appropriations would have the potential of unquestioned dominance in the area. Along with that potential for dominance, however, there are distinct liabilities for government technology assessment entities. The potential for industry-government antipathy is high. . . . it is very difficult to draw in industry and the private sector generally to a governmental entity so that those nongovernmental parties really feel a partnership exists. Governmental technology assessment entities inevitably are seen as regulatory. This is not to suggest that such governmental initiatives are inappropriate or are de novo doomed to failure. The possible need for an expanded unilateral governmental effort in medical technology assessment was not specifically addressed by the committee. It was, however, the sense of the committee that a unilateral governmental initiative in this area probably could not meet the need for an entity that could assure parity in representation, control and responsiveness between the public and private sectors."

Assuming that it is approved by the governing bodies of the Institute of Medicine and the National Academy of Sciences, the committee's recommendation will face an uncertain reception once it has been unveiled publicly. The leading questions are these: What organizations will be willing to provide funds to underwrite the consortium—an amount that, at a minimum, will total $1 million annually? Will the federal government and private organizations accept the Institute of Medicine as a neutral sponsor of a new assessment organization? How will the private and public enterprises that are already in the assessment business react to the prospect of a new organization intended to serve as a clearinghouse?

Brandt has expressed his support for creation of a private-public assessment body that would operate under the aegis of the Institute of Medicine. Although Brandt, who is a member of the institute, is a central figure in the administration's health-policy-making apparatus, he is only one of many voices. Other administration officials, both within the DHHS and at higher levels, view the Institute of Medicine more skeptically, as either an organization that leans toward government solutions or an organization whose policy council is dominated by academic medicine, which has its own interests to preserve.

The precipitate action of Congress, in enacting legislation to reform the system that Medicare uses to pay for hospital care, has reverberated through the healthcare sphere in a variety of ways, as recently reported in the Journal.[2] The fundamental consequence of this policy judgment was to change Medicare's hospital-payment approach from cost-based, retrospective reimbursement to per-case payment. Under this new approach, hospitals are paid a specific amount for each patient treated, regardless of the number of types of services rendered. Thus, on October 1 hospitals will be rewarded for reducing the cost of treating a patient over the course of a hospital stay.

In the present context, however, the important consequence of per-case payment will be its effect on the diffusion of technology and the new interest it has generated in technology assessment. Per-case payment will remove the incentive to provide more technologies and will encourage hospitals (and perhaps physicians, though this payment method is not directly applicable to them) to consider explicitly the benefit of additional services against their added costs. Medicare will use 467 disease categoreis, called "diagnosis-related groups" (DRGs), as a measure on which to base its per-case payment.

The Office of Technology Assessment, in an instructive technical memorandum, prepared by Senior Analyst Judity L. Wagner, on the implications of DRG payment for medical technology, estimates that technology use will be affected in several ways.[3] The memorandum enumerates the following ways:

"Overall, the number and intensity of ancillary procedures provided to inpatients can be expected to decrease, but the use of procedures that can be shown to lower the cost per case will increase. The settings of technology use are likely to be influenced by DRG payment, but the incentives work in conflicting directions and are sensitive to the key features of program design. It remains to be seen which incentive will dominate for which procedures. DRG payment will encourage the movement of technologies into the home, particularly those for post-hospital care. DRG payment is likely to influence the specialization of services, but the magnitude and direction of these effects is unknown. The incentives to reduce costs encourage concentration of capital-intensive technologies in fewer insitutions. Conversely, the increasing competition among hospitals for physicians and patients will create incentives for the widespread acquisition of some technologies. A change in technology product mix is likely to result from downward pressure on the price and quantity of supplies and, if capital is included in the DRG rate, capital equipment. Greater product standardization can be expected as more expensive models and producers are eased out of the market through competition."

Perhaps even more important than how DRG payment affects the use of current medical technologies is how this payment mode will affect technological change in medicine—that is, the adoption of new technologies and the discarding of old ones. As Wagner notes, there are essentially three basic approaches to recalibrating relative DRG payment rates: empirical cost-estimation techniques central policy-decision adjustments, and provider appeals. The new Medicare law calls for changes in DRG rates at least every four years, but the methods to be used to recalibrate the DRG's are unspecified. During the brief congressional debate over the prospective pricing provision, DHHS went out of its way not to dicuss possible payment rates under a DRG system, but there seems to be little likelihood that the subject will be kept out of the political arena for long.

Indeed, even before DHHS unveiled its DRG rates, Senator John Heniz (R-Pa) introduced legislation on July 14 that would eliminate what he characterized as "excessive payments" by Medicare for heart pacemakers. Heinz said the bill could save the Medicare program $200 million by reducing the amount that the program pays for the purchase of pacemakers, their insertion, and follow-up services. Heniz, who chairs the Senate Special Committee on Aging and is also a member of the Senate Finance Committee, which oversees Medicare, said that "fraud by physicians and others in the pacemaker industry totalled more than $1 billion, and had triggered investigations by 35 FBI field offices and two federal grand juries."

As noted earlier, the new Medicare law establishes an independent panel of experts to recommend changes in DRG prices to DHHS. The director of the Office of Technology Assessment, John H. Gibbons, was charged by Congress with appointing the 15 members of the commission—a task he hopes to complete by November. However, two key questions concerning the future of the commission remain unanswered: How much money will Congress appropriate to operate it? Where will the commission ultimately reside in the bureaucracy? The law is not altogether clear on these questions.

Washington lobbyists for the Health Industry Manufacturers Association and their member companies have aggressively lobbied the House and Senate Appropriation Subcommittees on the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies. These panels must approve an appropriation. The association's president, Harold O. Buzzell, said in a June 3 memorandum to member companies: "The new prospective payment law signals emergence of health care economics as the industry's chief priority."

The Association of American Medical Colleges has also urged Congress to approve an appropriation for the commission. The association's president, Dr. John A. D. Cooper, said on July 14 in his "weekly activities report":

"I wrote Representative William H. Natcher [D-Ky.], chairman of the Labor/HHS Appropriations Subcommittee, and all the other subcommittee members July 1 urging that they vote to appropriate funds for the new Medicare Prospective Payment Assessment Commission. * * * I pointed out that it is imperative that a body such as the commission exist to monitor the changes in the health delivery system brought about by the switch to DRG-based prospective payments 'to ensure that they do not adversely affect the quality of care rendered to Medicare beneficiaries or unintentionally jeopardize the fiscal stability of needed hospitals.' I reminded the subcommittee members, 'absent this commission, the DHHS would be payer, regulator and evaluator' simultaneously."

At this point, certainly more questions than answers abound on the future configuration of medical-technology assessment in the United States. Brandt has expressed concern over the adequacy of the current instruments, but other administration officials have been silent. One development seems certain, though. As the purchase of technology is tied more directly to payment approaches that change the traditional incentives of providers to acquire innovation without serious regard to its cost, interest in technology assessment will grow. This phenomenon has already been well demonstrated in the unfolding saga of DRG payment.●

CARGO PREFERENCE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, on Tuesday I testified at hearings held by the Senate Merchant Marine Subcommittee. The hearings continue today and focus on several bills dealing with cargo preference. Two of the bills, S. 1616 and S. 1624, would subject an expanded proportion of U.S. oceanborne trade to cargo preference. Most importantly, these bills would affect U.S. commercial trade, not just Government cargoes. I ask that my testimony at Tuesday's hearing be printed in the RECORD.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR RUDY BOSCHWITZ, MERCHANT MARINE SUBCOMMITTEE, SEPTEMBER 27, 1983

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine to discuss the implications of several cargo preference bills. Cargo preference laws are a major interest to all of those who are concerned with U.S. commercial trade: shippers, trading companies, domestic industry and agriculture and the merchant marine. Their interests and their concerns about cargo preference are especially aroused whenever there are proposals—bills, resolutions, etc.—which alter the application of existing cargo preference laws to U.S. commercial trade. This helps to explain why two of the bills before this subcommittee, S. 1616 and S. 1624, have been the subject of a great deal of discussion. Very simply, these two bills dramatically alter the application of cargo preference to U.S. commercial trade, to the detriment of many concerned. Mr. Chairman, I ask that two items be added to the Record: the first is a letter to me signed by 19 agricultural groups and associations urging my support for S. Con. Res. 56, which I have cosponsored and which expresses the sense of Congress that cargo preference should not be expanded; the second contains the views of the U.S. Great Lakes Shipping Association, and indicates that shipping in the Great Lakes would be adversely affected by legislation such as S. 1616 and S. 1624 and would threaten the viability of all ports in the Great Lakes region. These two items are just a sampling of the widespread opposition to expanded cargo preference under S. 1616 and S. 1624.

This is not to say that these bills are intended to impact negatively on those involved in U.S. commercial trade. The underlying objective of both S. 1616 and S. 1624 is to promote a strong and viable U.S merchant marine and shipping industry. This is a laudatory objective. Proponents of these bills argue that cargo preference is a useful tool for promoting the U.S. merchant marine and the shipping industry and that other U.S. industries will benefit from strengthening of the U.S. maritime industry. For example, the U.S. steel industry, and labor, would benefit from increased domestic U.S. shipbuilding. By this reasoning, the proponents of these bills conclude that an increase in the proportion of U.S. oceanborne trade subject to cargo preference will generate net economic benefits for the United States.

In my view, and in the view of many others, existing cargo preference laws have not accomplished their original objective—promoting a strong and viable U.S. merchant marine and shipbuilding industry. It follows, therefore, that expansion of cargo preference laws to cover a larger volume of U.S. oceanborne trade will likewise not promote a more strong and viable U.S. shipping industry. At the same time, other sectors of the U.S. economy involved in and dependent on commercial trade will be adversely affected by more comprehensive cargo preference laws. For these reasons, legislation such as S. 1616 and S. 1624 would not accomplish the objective of promoting a more viable U.S. shipping industry and would simultaneously disrupt and disadvantage many trade dependent sectors of the U.S. economy.

CARGO PREFERENCE HAS NOT PROMOTED A STRONG AND VIABLE MERCHANT MARINE AND SHIPPING INDUSTRY

There is nothing in the historical record to suggest that cargo reservation for U.S. flag vessels has promoted a strong and viable U.S. merchant marine and shipping industry. As a result, there is no reason to believe that expanded cargo preference, as provided for in S. 1616 and section 104 of S. 1624, would help strengthen the U.S. merchant marine and shipping industry. Indeed, there is good reason to deduce that the opposite will occur. Let's just take a look at the numbers.

Comprehensive statistics are available on the transportation costs of the P.L. 480 program (Food for Peace). The P.L. 480 program was enacted at nearly the same time as P.L. 664, the Cargo Preference Act of 1954. P.L. 664 for the first time attached mandatory cargo preference requirements to non-military shipments. These requirements pertained primarily to the P.L. 480 program. The objective, quite similar to that in the legislation under discussion at today's hearing, was to promote the U.S. merchant marine and shipping industry by assuring that U.S. flag ships had cargoes. This was to offset the trend, at that time, of a declining proportion of U.S. oceanborne trade moving on U.S. vessels.

What has happened since the enactment of P.L. 480? The transportation costs of the P.L. 480 program escalated from $9.6 million in fiscal year 1955 to $314.4 million in fiscal year 1982, a more than 30-fold increase.[1] During the same period, the value of commodities purchased under P.L. 480 increased only moderately, from $206.2 million in 1955 to $1,033 million in 1982.[2] What this means is that during the first year of operation of the 1954 Cargo Preference Act, transportation charges for using U.S. flag ships comprised only four percent of total P.L. 480 program costs, but by fiscal 1982 these transportation charges had zoomed to nearly 25 percent of total P.L. 480 program costs.[3]

Unfortunately, the burgeoning transportation charges resulting from the Cargo Preference Act of 1954 had not served to promote a strong and viable U.S. maritime industry which is competitive in international markets. In 1955, the United States flag merchant marine comprised 27 percent of the world's total deadweight tonnage and 22 percent of the world's total number of vessels.[4] By 1982, the United States flag merchant marine comprised only 3.3 percent of the world's total deadweight tonnage.[5] The proportion of U.S. oceanborne foreign trade carried on U.S. flag vessels declined by a comparable magnitude, from 23.5 percent of total volume in 1955 to about 3.5 percent of total volume in 1982.[6] Employment numbers for the merchant marine likewise declined percipitously, from 57,500 in 1955 to 18,000 in 1982.[7] Finally, the number of merchant vessels completed by U.S. shipyards, declined from an average of 30 during the late 1950's to an average of 10 during the 1980's.[8] These numbers clearly show that a precipitous and rapid decline in the U.S. maritime industry has accompanied the enactment in 1954 of permanent cargo preference legislation. Either this legislation was the cause of the declines or it was not the proper prescription for alleviating the maladies of the U.S. maritime industy.

Not only has the enactment of permanent cargo preference legislation been followed by major declines in the size and viability of the U.S. maritime industry, but it has also been accompanied by a decline in U.S. competitiveness, most especially in terms of U.S. shipping rates. In 1955, the year following enactment of the Cargo Preference Act, the average differential between U.S. flag shipping rates and foreign flag shipping rates under P.L. 480 was $2.35 per ton.[9] By 1982, this differential had skyrocketed to $60.50 per ton, nearly a 30-fold increase.[10]

What I am saying here is that we had better rethink our original prescription, that outlined by the 1954 Cargo Preference Act, before we apply larger and larger doses of the same medicine under the expanded cargo preference provisions of either S. 1616 or S. 1624. It is clear to me, and the numbers support this very well, that cargo preference has not been and will never be the source of recovery and rejuvenation for the U.S. maritime industry.

EXPANDED CARGO PREFERENCE UNDER S. 1616 OR S. 1624 WOULD ADVERSELY AFFECT THE TRADE DEPENDENT SECTORS OF THE U.S. ECONOMY

Both S. 1616 and S. 1624 would expand the proportion of U.S. oceanborne trade subject to cargo preference. Section 104 of S. 1624 would increase this proportion from its current level of about 3.5 percent to at least 20 percent by the year 2000. More important, S. 1624 extends cargo preference to all U.S. oceanborne trade—including for the first time, private commercial sales. Since U.S. commercial imports and exports have never been subject to cargo preference laws, section 104 of S. 1624 is unprecedented in scope.

Section 4 of S. 1616 expands existing cargo preference laws to shipments which indirectly involve the U.S. Government. Section 4 essentially makes Public Resolution 17 mandatory. Previously, Public Resolution 17 had only been applied toward Eximbank generated shipments. Section 4 of S. 1616 would mandate that any U.S. commercial shipments which have been facilitated in any way by U.S. government financing must be shipped on U.S. flag vessels. This would make any government credit or financing program—loans, credit guarantees and direct credits—subject to cargo preference.

Proponents of S. 1616 and S. 1624 argue that there will be beneficial multiplier effects which will result from the increased shipbuilding that is expected to be encouraged by expanded cargo preference. For example, the maritime trades department and the seafarer's international union of the AFL-CIO estimate that S. 1624 will add 112,000 jobs to the economy, in shipbuilding and related industries.[11]

There are two problems with this argument, one of which I've already touched on. The first problem is in the presumption that cargo preference will promote increased shipbuilding. As I indicated earlier, there is nothing in the historical record to lead one to believe that such a correlation exists. In fact, the numbers lead you in the opposite direction.

The second problem is in attempting to estimate "beneficial multiplier effects" for the U.S. economy by concentrating only on one of the sectors affected by cargo preference, namely, shipbuilding and related industries. By relying on this type of approach, one gets what amounts to severe tunnel vision and cannot possibly begin to appreciate the ramifications of more comprehensive cargo preference laws.

The S. 1624 requirement that, eventually, 20 percent of U.S. commercial exports and imports must be shipped on U.S. flag vessels, translates into an enormous volume of trade. During the 1980's, the U.S. trade volume has averaged about 800 million metric tons, of which less than 30 million tons on average has been transported on U.S. vessels.[12] The 20 percent requirement translates into at least 160 million tons on U.S. flag ships, and this assumes that the U.S. trade volume stagnates over the next 15 years.[13] This S. 1624 provision would do one of two things:

(a) increase the overseas landed cost of U.S. products and decrease the foreign demand for U.S. products; or,

(b) increase the budgetary outlays necessary to offset any sort of adverse impact that the S. 1624 cargo preference provisions have on U.S. exports.

There could, of course, be some sort of combination of these two effects.

The potential decline in exports has a "multiplier effect", namely, a corresponding decline in U.S. domestic employment in the trade dependent sectors—agriculture, mining and certain manufacturing industries. The number of domestic jobs associated with each $1 billion of exports varies, from 20,000 for various industrial sectors to over 30,000 for agriculture.[14] The 20 percent requirement under S. 1624 would, assuming that about half of the affected 160 million tons were exports valued at average 1982 prices per ton, translate into about a $5.7 billion decline in U.S. exports (more or less depending on whether or not foreign demand for U.S. products is more or less "elastic").[15] This, in turn, implies a decline in U.S. domestic employment of 114,000 to 171,000 depending on which sectors of the economy were most affected.[16] Of this amount, agricultural exports would comprise about $2 billion of the export decline and generate about 60,000 of the employment decline.[17]

These numbers are cursory, at best, but they show that we must simultaneously consider all of the sectors affected by this legislation. For example, S. 1624 would also affect importers and employment and prices in import dependent sectors. The American Petroleum Institute estimates that the 20 percent requirement would increase domestic energy costs by $29 billion ($125 per person) a year, all because of the increased cost of importing petroleum of U.S. flag vessels.[18] The rise in energy costs would lead to price increases and employment impacts in energy dependent sectors of the economy. The same would be true for other imports, but most likely the effects would not be nearly as large as those which would be associated with petroleum imports.

In any event, the economic implications of S. 1624 are negative not only in terms of potentially declining employment, declining exports and increased inflation, but also in terms of the massive disruption and dislocation of individual lives which would follow. This legislation entails a tradeoff which should be closely examined and scrutinized, namely, under what justification do we attempt to promote and support the maritime industry at the expense of production and employment in the efficient, trade dependent sectors of the economy? How, in this day and age, can we justify support for legislation which has the clear potential for causing a net decline in jobs, a net increase in prices and a net decrease in exports?

Some of the employment and trade effects of S. 1624 could be offset, but only with increased budgetary outlays. For example, the government could dole out an ocean freight differential to importers and exporters. The cost: Based on the 20 percent requirement and 1982 ocean freight differentials and trade volumes, about $4.5 billion a year for exports and about $5.1 billion a year for imports—or an annual outlay of $9.6 billion for ocean freight differential subsidies alone.[19] This is 80 times as much as fiscal 1982 outlays of $120 million for ocean freight differential subsidies.[20] There would also be increased government outlays for shipbuilding, which have been estimated at nearly $6 billion a year.[21] That is, under S. 1624 it would cost $15.6 billion annually just to subsidize shipbuilding and to offset the negative trade effects of higher shipping rates for U.S. flag vessels. This compares with an outlay of about $10 billion dollars in total to subsidize the maritime industry over the past 45 years—that is, one year of government subsidization for programs offered under S. 1624 would exceed by over 50 percent the costs of subsidizing the maritime industry over the past 45 years.[22]

S. 1616 would have the same basic economic effects as S. 1624. That is, it would lead to some combination of reduced exports, increased unemployment and increased budgetary outlays. It is not possible to detail all of the government credit programs that would be affected by S. 1616. The legislation would invite a great deal of research and investigation in determining the number of programs to be covered by cargo preference.

However, in order to get an idea of the potential magnitude of impact that S. 1616 would have on exports, it is worthwhile to take a look at just one sector—agriculture—which would be particularly adversely affected. Section 4 of S. 1616 applies directly to certain export credit programs administered by the Department of Agriculture. These are the credit guarantee (GSM-102) and direct credit (GSM-5) programs. In fiscal year 1983, $4.8 billion was authorized for credit guarantees and $350 million was authorized for direct credits.[23] All the credits are used to finance overseas commercial sales of U.S. farm products.

The fiscal 1983 credit authorizations are particularly large. This is because exports are projected to decline for the second year in a row, from $39.1 billion in fiscal 1982 to $34.5 billion in fiscal 1983.[24] Financial constraints in certain importing countries are responsible for the decline, and additional export credits help to alleviate the downward pressure on exports.

Furthermore, part of the export decline derives from price cutting and export subsidies practiced by our export competitors. To counteract this practice, a "blended credit" program was developed. This program mixes credit guarantees at commercial rates of interest with direct credits at a zero rate of interest to produce a lower rate of interest on an overall credit package. The two types of credit are "blended" at a five-to-one ratio (guarantees to direct credits). As a result, in fiscal 1983, $2.1 billion was used for blended credit ($1.75 billion of credit guarantees and $350 million of direct credits) and $3.05 billion was used for credit guarantees. These two programs helped to assure that U.S. agricultural exports did not decline any further than they did.

The $5.15 billion in total credits financed commercial, not concessional sales of farm products. This $5.15 billion in sales would have been subject to section 4 of S. 1616, had S. 1616 been enacted during fiscal 1983. If that had been the case, then exports would have declined even lower than $34.5 billion. Blended credits could facilitate sales of 14.0 million tons of grain at an average of $150 per ton.[25] The credit guarantees could facilitate commercial sales of 20.33 million tons of grain at an average of $150 per ton.[26] There is no provision in S. 1616 which would offset the ocean freight differential of $60.50 per ton. However, S. 1616 applies cargo preference to the entire tonnage and, moreover, requires the credit recipient to agree to terms of 100 percent cargo preference. The only way that any of these cargoes would have moved is if the U.S. government paid the ocean freight differential. This is because the $60.50 per ton differential on a $150 per ton commodity translates into an additional 40 percent interest for one year credits and an additional 19 percent interest for two year credits.[27] After adding on commercial rates of interest of about ten percent, the lending institution would have ended up offering the commercial customer for U.S. farm products a credit package with either 50 percent interest on one year terms or 29 percent interest on two year terms.[28] In short, no one would have asked for credits, $5.15 billion in commercial sales would have been lost and exports would have declined to $29.35 billion.[29] The additional $5.15 billion decline in exports would also have led to a 154,500 decline in U.S. domestic employment.[30]

The loss in commercial export sales which would be caused by S. 1616 could be counteracted only by increased budgetary outlays. If the outlays were made additional to the $5.15 billion in export credits, and the ocean freight differential was paid on the entire volume of shipments, then commercial exports would not decline. However, there would be an additional budgetary outlay of $2.08 billion.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

I have concentrated in my testimony on the economic implications of S. 1616 and S. 1624. Of course, this legislation has other, very specific implications, perhaps of equal importance. For example, section 105 of S. 1624 outlines a procedure for calculating "guideline rates" on U.S. flag vessels. MARAD's previous experience with guideline rates (1955-1917) indicates straightforward that administration of the rates will be a bureaucratic nightmare. The red tape and paperwork associated with administering the rates could easily interfere with and interrupt normally smooth trade flows.

However, I have tried to concentrate on more basic issues, including the costs and benefits to our society of more comprehensive cargo reservation schemes. I am thoroughly convinced that cargo preference is a crutch which prevents the U.S. maritime industry from becoming fully viable and competitive in international markets. I am equally convinced that giving maritime industry and additional crutch—expanded cargo preference—will perpetuate the industry's inability to become competitive. More importantly, it would affect a broad spectrum of American society—workers, shippers, traders, industry, agriculture—in ways which are detrimental to the U.S. economy and society as a whole. In all likelihood, legislation such as S. 1616 and S. 1624 would increase prices, decrease employment and depress exports.

What we should be looking at and developing is a method to make the maritime industry more competitive. What we need is an alternative to cargo preference, not more cargo preference.

[15] The $5.7 billion is a "ballpark" figure, as indicated in the next paragraph. Primary source for calculating the decline is U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, data on 1982 U.S. oceanborne export volume and value (f.a.s. basis). An export unit value for U.S. oceanborne exports is derived from the latter data. the export unit value is comparable to an "average price" of U.S. exports, and for 1982 it was about $310 per metric ton. Current ocean freight differentials on PL-480 are equivalent to about 23 percent of this export unit value. The $5.7 billion figure is derived by assuming that there is a "unit elasticity of demand" for U.S. products in overseas markets. It could be more or less—no one has made such an estimate, that's why this one is a "ballpark" figure. The 23 percent ocean freight differential would amount to a 23 percent price increase on the exports subject to cargo preference. Under S. 1624, this is conservatively estimated as one-half of 20 percent of the annual 1980's average of 800 million metric tons of U.S. oceanborne trade (20 percent is the S. 1624 requirement, or 160 million metric tons, and it is assumed that one-half of this is exports, or 80 million metric tons). The "unit elasticity of demand" tells us that the 23 percent rise in the effective price of this tonnage will lead to a decline in export volume of 23 percent, or a volume decline of 18.4 million metric tons. Finally, 18.4 million metric tons times a 1982 average f.a.s. export unit value of $310 per metric ton (in this analysis, the export unit value does not change) equals $5.704 billion, the figure in the statement.

[16] 20,000 per $1 billion drop in exports times $5.7 billion equals 114,000, the lower range of the employment decline, and 30,000 per $1 billion drop in exports times $5.7 billion equals 171,000, the upper range of the employment decline.

[17] Calculated using the same procedure as that outlined in note 15. In 1982, the f.a.s. agricultural export unit value was about $245 per metric ton and export volume was about 160 million metric tons. Under S. 1624, 32 million metric tons would be subject to cargo preference. Recent ocean freight differentials are equivalent to about 27 percent of this unit value. Thus, there would be an effective 27 percent price increase on 32 million metric tons of agricultural commodities, implying, using the unit elasticity, a 27 percent volume decline on the 32 million metric tons—or, a decline of 8.64 million metric tons. The 8.64 million metric tons times $245 per metric ton equals $2.117 billion, or "about $2 billion" as indicated in the text. 30,000 per $1 billion decline in exports times $2 billion provides the employment decline of 60,000.

[18] American Petroleum Institute, Testimony on H.R. 1242, May 5, 1983. The $125 per person figure is $29 billion divided by 230 million.

[19] The $60 per metric ton fiscal year 1982 ocean freight differential under Title I, PL-480 (U.S. Department of Agriculture) times 20 percent of an average 800 million metric tons of U.S. oceanborne trade (or about 160 million metric tons; U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census) gives the total ocean freight differential subsidy of $9.6 billion. The distribution between costs for imports and exports is based on oceanborne export volume as a percentage of total oceanborne trade volume (U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census).

[21] Rounded off from $5.87 billion in total government outlays, Federation of American Controlled Shipping, Testimony on H.R. 1242, May 5, 1982.

[25] $2.10 billion divided by $150 per metric ton.

[26] $3.05 billion divided by $150 per metric ton.

[27] $60.50 is 40.33 percent of $150 on a one year basis and $60.50 as a percent of $150 when discounted for two years is 18.56 percent (compounded).

[28] 50 percent on one year terms is 40 plus an assumed commercial rate of 10 percent and 29 percent on two year terms is 19 plus an assumed commercial rate of 10 percent.

[29] U.S. Department of Agriculture fiscal year 1983 forecast of $34.5 billion, minus $5.15 billion.

[30] 30,000 per $1 billion in export decline times a decline of $5.15 billion.●

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are one or two items that need to be cleared in the wrap-up, and then I think we are ready to go.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has stated, has he not, there will be no more rollcall votes tonight?

Mr. BAKER. Yes; I have so stated.

Mr. President, I have a few things in the wrap-up file today.

If the minority leader is prepared to consider all or any part of these, I wish to go forward with them at this time.

First, we have now completed the clearance on this side on the sequential referral requests earlier submitted by the Senator from Idaho (Mr. SYMMS) and I am prepared to make that request if the minority leader is similarly prepared.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am delighted to state that there is no objection on this side of the aisle.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

ORDER FOR SEQUENTIAL REFERRAL OF H.R. 3103

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 3103 as reported by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee be sequentially referred to the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs to consider section 7, for the period of 1 week. The sequential referral will enable the Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee to review and approve the portion of the interstate substitute cost estimate relating to transit substitute projects.

ORDER FOR PRINTING OF H.R. 3103

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in that same connection, I ask unanimous consent that the reported bill H.R. 3103 be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. 3103

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in addition to any amounts authorized to be appropriated by section 125 of title 3, United States Code, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of the Highway Trust Fund, for such fiscal year $150,000,000 to carry out such section.

SEC. 2. (a) Section 125 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) For purposes of this section, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall be considered to be States and parts of the United States, and the chief executive officer of each such territory shall be considered to be a Governor of a State.".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section 125 is amended by inserting "(1)" before "obligations" and by inserting after "$30,000,000 in any State" the following: ", and (2) the total obligations for projects under this section in any fiscal year in the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall not exceed $5,000,000.".

SEC. 3. The proviso in the first sentence of subsection (b) of section 125 of title 23, United States Code (as amended by section 2(b) of this Act), limiting the aggregate amount of obligations for projects under such section, shall not apply to funds authorized to be appropriated by the first section of this Act.

SEC. 4. A project to alleviate flooding conditions caused by an inadequate box culvert under an Interstate highway in the vicinity of Carencro, Louisiana—

(1) by removal of such box culvert and construction of one or more bridges; or

(2) by construction of drainage ditches, at a cost of not to exceed $2,000,000, shall be eligible for assistance under section 125 of title 23, United States Code.

SEC. 5. A project to repair or reconstruct any portion of a Federal-aid primary route in San Mateo County, California, which was destroyed as a result of a combination of storms in the winter of 1982-1983 and a mountain slide and which, until its destruction, had served as the only reasonable access between two cities and as the designated emergency evacuation route of one of such cities shall be eligible for assistance under section 125 of title 23, United States Code.

SEC. 6. Construction of any bridge—

(1) which will be part of a four-lane expressway on the Federal-aid primary system in the vicinity of Valley City, Illinois, and Florence, Illinois;

(2) construction of which received discretionary funding in fiscal year 1979 under the third sentence of section 144(g) of title 23, United States Code; and

(3) construction of which, on May 1, 1983, was prohibited by judicial injunction; shall be eligible for assistance under section 144 of such title.

SEC. 2. (a) Section 125 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) For purposes of this section, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall be considered to be States and parts of the United States, and the chief executive officer of each such territory shall be considered to be a Governor of a State.".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section 125 is amended by inserting "(1)" before "obligations" and by inserting after "$30,000,000 in any State" the following: ", and (2) the total obligations for projects under this section in any fiscal year in the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall not exceed $5,000,000".

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall take effect April 15, 1983.

SEC. 3. The proviso in the first sentence of subsection (b) of section 125 of title 23, United States Code (as amended by section 2(b) of this Act), limiting the aggregate amount of obligations for projects under such section, shall not apply to natural disasters and catastrophic failures occurring in the States of California and Utah in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983.

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (f) of section 120 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking "shall not exceed 100 per centum of the cost thereof:" and inserting in lieu thereof "on account of any project on a Federal-aid highway system, including the Interstate System, shall not exceed the Federal share payable of a project on a system as provided in subsections (a) and (c) of this section: "Provided, That the Federal share payable for eligible emergency repairs to minimize damage, protect facilities or restore essential traffic accomplished within 30 days after the actual occurrence may amount to 100 per centum of the cost thereof: and further".

(b) Section 120(f) of title 23, United States Code, as amended by this section is effective for all natural disasters or catastrophic failures which occur subsequent to enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. Upon application by the State of Maryland, and after approval of withdrawal by the Secretary of Transportation of unbuilt portions of Interstate route I-83 in Baltimore, Maryland, under section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, the Secretary shall transfer $100,000,000 from the apportionment of such State under section 104(b)(5)(A) of such title to the apportionment of such State under section 104(b)(5)(B) of such title. Upon transfer of such funds, the estimate of the cost of completing substitute highway projects in such State prepared under section 103(e)(4) of such title shall be reduced by $100,000,000. Of funds apportioned to such State under section 104(b)(5)(B) of such title, $100,000,000 shall be obligated for resurfacing, restoring, rehabilitating, and reconstructing portions of such Interstate route open to traffic. Any funds transferred under this section shall continue to be available for expenditure in such State until the last day of the second fiscal year following the fiscal year in which such transfer is made. Any amount of funds so transferred which have not been obligated by such last day shall lapse and shall be made available by the Secretary for projects under section 118(b)(3) of such title.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Transportation shall apportion for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, and September 30, 1986, the sums authorized to be appropriated for such fiscal years by section 108(b) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, as amended, for expenditure on the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways, using the apportionment factors contained in table of the committee print numbered of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary of Transportation shall apportion for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1984, and September 30, 1985, the sums authorized to be apportioned for such years by section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, for expenditure on substitute highway and transit projects, using the apportionment factors contained in the committee print numbered of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives.

(b) Section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code is amended—

(1) in the fifteenth sentence by striking out "fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "fiscal years", and by inserting ", and September 30, 1985" after "September 30, 1984";

(2) in the sixteenth sentence by striking out "years" and inserting in lieu thereof "year", and by striking out "September 30, 1985, and";

(3) in the twenty-first sentence by striking out "fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "fiscal years", and by inserting ", and September 30, 1985" after "September 30, 1984"; and

(4) in the twenty-second sentence by striking "1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "1985" and by striking "years" and inserting in lieu thereof "year", and by striking out "September 30, 1985, and".

SEC. 8. Section 118(b)(2) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "which is not open to traffic" the following: "and high cost projects which are eligible for Federal assistance with funds apportioned under section 104(b)(5)(A) of this title and are on an Interstate segment which is on a common alignment of more than 7.9 miles with any other Interstate segment and on which actual construction with funds apportioned under such section is under way on the date of enactment of this Act;".

SEC. 9. Section 307(c)(1) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "section 104" the following: "and section 103(e)(4) for highway projects".

SEC. 10. (a) The last sentence of section 139(a) of title 23, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "The designation of a highway as part of the Interstate System under this subsection shall create no Federal financial responsibility with respect to such highway; except that any State may use funds available to it under sections 104(b)(1) and 104(b)(5)(B) of this title for the resurfacing, restoring, rehabilitating, and reconstructing of any highway designated as a route on the Interstate System under this subsection before the date of enactment of the Surface Transportation Technical Corrections Act of 1983.".

(b) Subsection (a) of section 119 of title 23, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary may approve projects for resurfacing, restoring, rehabilitating, and reconstructing routes on the Interstate System designated under sections 103 and 139(c) of this title and routes on the Interstate System designated before the date of enactment of the Surface Transportation Technical Corrections Act of 1983 under section 139(a) of this title; except that the Secretary may only approve a project pursuant to this subsection on a toll road if such road is subject to a Secretarial agreement provided for in section 105 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1978. Sums authorized to be appropriated for this section shall be out of the Highway Trust Fund and shall be apportioned in accordance with section 104(b)(5)(B) of this title. The Federal share for any project under this subsection shall be that set forth in section 120(c) of this title.".

SEC. 11. Section 165 of the Highway Improvement Act of 1982 (23 U.S.C. 101 note) is amended to read as follows:

"BUY AMERICA

"SEC. 165. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Transportation shall not obligate any funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act or by any Act amended by this Act and administered by the Department of Transportation, whose total cost exceeds $500,000, unless only such unmanufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been mined or produced in the United States, and only such manufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been manufactured in the United States substantially all from articles, materials, and supplies mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States, will be used in such project.

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply where the Secretary determines—

"(1) their application would be inconsistent with the public interest;

"(2) in the case of acquisition of rolling stock their application would result in unreasonable cost (after granting appropriate price adjustments to domestic products based on that portion of project cost likely to be returned to the United States and to the States in the form of tax revenues);

"(3) supplies of the class or kind to be used in the manufacture of articles, materials, and supplies that are not mined, produced, or manufactured in the United States in sufficient and reasonably available quantities and of a satisfactory quality; or

"(4) that inclusion of domestic material will increase the cost of the overall project contract by more than 10 per centum in the case of projects for the acquisition of rolling stock, and 25 per centum in the case of all other projects.".

SEC. 12. (a)(1) Section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, is further amended by striking out the sixth, seventh, and eighth sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The sums apportioned and the sums allocated under this paragraph for public mass transit projects shall remain available for the fiscal year for which apportioned or allocated, as the case may be, and for the succeeding fiscal year. The sums apportioned and the sums allocated under this paragraph for projects under any highway assistance program shall remain available for the fiscal year for which apportioned or allocated, as the case may be, and for the succeeding fiscal year. Any sums which are apportioned or allocated to a State for a fiscal year and are unobligated (other than an amount which, by itself, is insufficient to pay the Federal share of the cost of a substitute project which has been submitted by the State to the Secretary for approval) at the end of such fiscal year shall be apportioned or allocated, as the case may be, among those States which have obligated all sums (other than such an amount) apportioned or allocated, as the case may be, to them for such fiscal year. Such reapportionments shall be in accordance with the latest approved estimate of the cost of completing substitute projects, and such reallocations shall be at the discretion of the Secretary.".

(2) The last sentence of section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking out "designed" and inserting in lieu thereof "designated".

(b)(1) The second section 126 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982, relating to bicycle transportation, is amended by striking out "Sec. 126." and iserting in lieu thereof "Sec. 126A.".

(2) Section 133 of such Act is amended by striking out "(a)" the first place it appears.

(3) Section 163 of such Act is amended by striking out "appropriated" and inserting in lieu thereof "apprortioned".

(4) Section 415 of such Act is hereby repealed.

(5) The third sentence of section 108(d) of such Act is amended by striking "this title," and inserting in lieu thereof "title 23, United States Code,".

(c)(1) The analysis of chapter 1 of title 23, United States Code, is amended (1) in the item relating to section 127 by striking out "and width", and (2) by striking out the item relating to section 146 and inserting in lieu thereof: "146. Carpool and vanpool projects.".

(2) Section 120 of such title is amended by redesignating the second subsection "(i)", and subsections "(j)" and "(k)" as subsections "(j)", "(k)", and "(l)", respectively.

(3) The first sentence of section 122 of such title is amended by inserting "or for substitute highway projects approved under section 103(e)(4) of this title" before "and the retirement".

(4)(A) Subsection (b) of section 125 of such title is amended by striking out "the Interstate System, the Primary System, and on any routes functionally classified as arterials or major collectors," each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "the Federal-aid highway systems, including the Interstate System".

(B) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "routes functionally classified as arterials or major collectors" and inserting in lieu thereof "on any of the Federal-aid highway systems".

(5) Subsection (e) of section 144 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Funds apportioned under this section shall be available for expenditure for the same period as funds apportioned for projects on the Federal-aid primary system under this title. Any funds not obligated at the expiration of such period shall be reapportioned by the Secretary to the other States in accordance with this subsection.".

(6) The second sentence of section 204(b) of such title is amended by inserting "the Secretary or" before "the Secretary of the Interior".

(7) The last sentence of section 402(j) of such title is amended by striking out "chapter" and inserting in lieu thereof "section".

(d) Section 111 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by inserting "(a)" before "All agreements" and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), any State may permit the placement of vending machines in rest and recreation areas, and in safety rest areas constructed or located on right-of-way of the Interstate System in such State. Such vending machines may only dispense such food, drink, and other articles as the State highway department determines are appropriate and desirable. Such vending machines may only be operated by the State. In permitting the placement of vending machines, the State shall give priority to vending machines which are operated through the State licensing agency designated pursuant to section 2(a)(5) of the Act of June 20, 1936, commonly known as the 'Randolph-Sheppard Act' (20 U.S.C. 107a(a)(5)). The costs of installation, operation, and maintenance of vending machines shall not be eligible for Federal assistance under this title.".

(e)(1) Section 145(c) of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The total amount which may be obligated for qualifying projects in any State under subsection (a) for each of the fiscal years 1983 and 1984 shall not be greater than the excess of—

"(1) the sum of the amount of obligation authority distributed to such State for such fiscal year under section 104(b) of ths Act, plus the amounts, if any, available to such State for such fiscal year under section 157 of title 23, United States Code, pertaining to minimum allocation, over

'(2) the amount of obligational authority distributed to such State for fiscal year 1983 under section 3(b) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1981.'.

(2) Section 145(e) of such Act is amended by inserting "section 108 of this Act and" after "such State under", and by striking out "104(b)(1) of title 23, United States Code," and inserting in lieu thereof "108 of this Act".

(f) Section 154(e) of title 23, United States Code, is amended—

(1) By striking out "criteria which takes" and inserting in lieu thereof "criteria which take";

(2) by inserting after "posted" the following: "on January 1, 1983,"; and

(3) by inserting before "in accordance with" the following: ", and on public highways built after such date with speed limits posted as 55 miles per hour,".

SEC. 13. This Act may be cited as the "Surface Transportation Technical Corrections Act of 1983".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next I propose to ask the Senate to turn to the consideration of the conference report on H.R. 3415 if the minority leader is prepared to do so.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION, 1984—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 3415 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3415) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of September 22, 1983.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the conference report now before us contains $600.8 million in Federal funds portion of the bill and $2.2 billion in District of Columbia funds. The House conferees were led by Congressman JULIAN DIXON and my colleague from Pennsylvania Congressman LARRY COUGHLIN. Mr. DIXON and Mr. COUGHLIN represented the House positions very ably and with the support of their able staff, Migo Miconi, Mary Porter, and Kenny Kraft.

Mr. President, the entire conference report and statement of the managers appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 22, 1983, at H7423 to H7426. Thus, I will not ask that it be reprinted here but will summarize the key items for my colleagues.

The conferees agreed to the Senate level of $386 million for the Federal payment to the district. This is the same as the budget request and amount authorized by Public Law 98-65, approved on August 2. In addition the conferees agreed to two initiatives which were contained in the Senate bill.

The first addresses an emergency in the criminal justice system in the District. The Senate provided $22.3 million for the D.C. Department of Corrections to take immediate measures to manage the severe overcrowding that exists at the D.C. jail and to expand the basic educational and vocational training programs at the city's prison facilities.

Like many other jurisdictions the District has a number of habitual offenders who were released from detention after the first or second offense without a trade or a skill and had little expectation that they could avoid further criminal activity. These funds are intended to reach those individuals with an opportunity to learn basic skills that will enable them to survive in the community.

In addition the conference report includes language included in the Senate report asking that the Department of Justices' Bureau of Prisons, possibly utilizing the expertise of the National Institute of Corrections, in cooperation with the District study the limits of growth at the prison facilities in Lorton, Va. And of housing future growth at alternative facilities, and eventual transfer of prisoners to facilities within the District of Columbia.

The Senate had included $2.8 million for seven new judges on the superior court. At the insistance of the House conferees this amount will be made available only after authorizing legislation is enacted. It is our hope that those committees can begin work at the earliest possible date since the resources are already available.

The second initiative concerns the public education system of the District. The conferees included $350,000 for the Board of Education to explore the various alternatives for recognizing outstanding teachers. This will permit the Board to evaluate the differing approaches and points of view giving all concerned, including representatives of the teachers a chance to be heard.

The conference agreement includes funds to maintain the District's fire boat, the John H. Glenn, operating on a full time basis rather than requiring land based crews to be sent before the boat could be dispatched. Also included is $1.4 million to continue the operation of the police and fire clinic as a separate organization during fiscal year 1984.

Another issue that the conference confronted was the level of the District's payment to St. Elizabeths Hospital. This Federal hospital for the mentally ill faced a $25 million budget shortfall, however, in what we hope is beginning of a truly cooperative commitment between the Federal and District governments over this hospital's future, the Department of Health and Human Services announced that administrative savings of $14 million could be found, reducing the potential shortfall to $11 million. Subsequently the District of Columbia announced steps that would save the hospital $5.3 million leaving $5.7 million unfunded. The conferees in an effort to insure the hospital's continued accreditation and service to those in need, has provided that amount as a special Federal contribution through the District of Columbia's budget.

The House accepted the Senate recommendation of adding $900,000 to the District's budget for vocational rehabilitation program, bringing the program to its 1981 funding level and forestalling a reduction in those placed in jobs by half.

The conference agreement contains up to $15 million to reduce the District's accumulated deficit. This deficit has been reduced in each of the last 3 fiscal years through appropriated set asides and sound management practices by the city government.

Finally the conference agreement includes two items included by the House but stricken by the Senate. The first item appropriates $31,800 additional for the Commission on the Healing Arts Licensure to fully fund all authorized positions; and $33,200 and one position for the National Guard. This keeps the Guard at its current strength. We were persuaded by their reasons for these increases and receded to them.

Mr. President, that concludes my summary, but before I yield the floor I want to note the support that I have enjoyed from the Senator from Vermont as the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, a responsibility I know he did not seek but has discharged with good humor and thoughtful consideration.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Are there amendments in disagreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are amendments in disagreement.

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

I ask that the Chair put the question on the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments in disagreement be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments in disagreement are as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

CRIMINAL JUSTICE EMERGENCY INITIATIVE

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia, $25,171,600 of which $11,735,400 shall remain available until, expended: Provided, That $2,841,300 for the Superior Court of the District of Columbia shall be made available only upon enactment into law of authorizing legislation.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

EDUCATION INITIATIVE

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia, $350,000.

SAINT ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia, $5,700,000.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$2,603,700".

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$2,103,700 (including $200,000 for obligations incurred in fiscal year 1983)".

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert:

$487,068,100 (including $2,841,300 for the Superior Court of the District of Columbia which shall be made available only upon enactment into law of authorizing legislation)

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$483,532,900".

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$326,350,000".

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$503,236,600".

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter stricken by said amendment, and insert "shall not exceed $5,700,000 and an additional".

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, and insert:

1982, $15,000,000, of which not less than $10,000,000 shall be funded and apportioned by the Mayor from amounts otherwise available to the District of Columbia government (including amounts appropriated by this Act or revenues otherwise available, or both)

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment,

Sec. 131. (a) That part of the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-51), under the heading "SENATE" is amended, in the paragraph with the heading "SECRETARY OF THE SENATE", by striking out "$390,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$537,000".

(b) That part of such Act, under the heading "HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES" is amended, in the paragraph with the heading "SALARIES, OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES", by striking out "$44,639,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$44,787,000"; and by striking out "$6,185,000" for the "OFFICE OF THE DOORKEEPER" and inserting in lieu thereof "$6,333,000".

(c) That part of such Act, under the heading "JOINT ITEMS" is amended, in the paragraph with the heading "EDUCATION OF PAGES", by strking out such heading and paragraph.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to concur in the House amendments No. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 16, and 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next I propose to go to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 284 if the minority leader has no objection.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H.J. Res. 284) commemorating the 25th anniversary of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to commemorate the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) by introducing, along with a number of cosponsors, a joint resolution, which designates October 1, 1983, as the "Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration." The profound and spectacular achievements of NASA in aeronautical and space research and development call for a tribute to NASA on this occasion.

Since NASA's establishment 25 years ago, this Nation has achieved the preeminent world position in aeronautics and space. NASA has contributed immeasurably to advancing for all mankind our understanding of the planets and our universe and has captured the imagination of people the world over. The Agency's feats have been a special source of pride to Americans; all of us have drawn inspiration from NASA's accomplishments.

NASA was created by the adoption of the National Aeronautics and Space Act on October 1, 1958; 10 days later NASA launched Pioneer 1, its first satellite, into Earth orbit. Within 4 years NASA had launched the first U.S. astronaut, Col. JOHN GLENN, into orbit around the Earth, aboard the Friendship 7 Mercury capsule.

Other dramatic events in NASA's first 25 years reflect the Agency's preeminence in space. The world thrilled to the first global telecasts of a human being walking on the lunar surface. The six Apollo manned lunar landings from 1969 to 1972 still stand out as perhaps the most ambitious space project ever attempted.

When they were launched in 1975, Vikings I and II were the most sophisticated planetary spacecraft ever developed. In their search for life on Mars, these Viking missions answered some of the most provocative questions ever asked in exploring the possibility of life on a planet other than Earth.

With the first launch and return of the space shuttle in April 1981, this Nation has achieved a new and unmatched flexibility in operating in space. The Columbia and Challenger space shuttle orbiters have now completed a total of 8 missions, with each succeeding mission demonstrating new capabilities of the space shuttle and reminding us of just how remakable this spacecraft actually is. The spectacular revelations of Voyagers I and II disclosed the asteroid belt surrounding Jupiter and the complex ring structure encircling Saturn, discoveries that are milestones in planetary exploration. And in June of 1983, Pioneer 10 became the first manmade object ever to leave this solar system. Further, 2 months ago, the infra-red astronomical satellite (IRAS), a joint NASA-British-Dutch effort, uncovered the first evidence of a planetary system other than our own—the orbiting Vegas, a star 26 light years from Earth.

NASA's pioneering work in aeronautics has carved out for the United States a position of world superiority in aviation, as well. The altitude and speed records set by the X-15 in the 1960's were significant contributions to the evolution of manned space flight. The development of NASA's supercritical wing in the mid-1960's has proven to be one of the most significant improvements in aeronautical fuel efficiency. Further, NASA and the Army have just completed the demonstration of a revolutionary concept in aeronautical design, the tiltrotor research aircraft, which takes advantage of the vertical performance of a helicopter and the horizontal flight component of conventional aircraft.

NASA's history and its present capabilities point to a very promising future for the Agency and the United States. Spacelab, a joint NASA-European Space Agency project, is scheduled for launch later this year. This mission should reveal new opportunities for exciting research in many fields of science, as well as serve as a catalyst for additional international cooperative space efforts.

The launch of the space telescope in 1986 will certainly unravel many mysteries of the solar system while giving rise to new questions as it peers out to the edge of the universe. Also, becoming increasingly likely is a permanent manned presence in space. A project of this nature could open up space for mankind to embark on adventures that offer unique challenges and potential.

The ramifications of NASA's impact on our national security and economic well-being have served our Nation well. NASA's efforts reflect America at its best; peacefully pursuing scientific knowledge and technological advancement with courage and skill. Its efforts, shared to some extent by all Americans, reveal America's confidence, pride, enthusiasm, hope, expectations, its ability to innovate, and to organize great tasks. Therefore, it is with a sense of pride in the past and anticipation of the future that I introduce this resolution to designate October 1, 1983, as the "Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 284) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER INDEFINITELY POSTPONING SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 170

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Order 408, Senate Joint Resolution 170, which is the Senate companion bill to this measure be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF INSURANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I propose to go to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 366, if the minority leader has no objection.

Mr. BYRD. There is no problem.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. PRESIDENT, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 366.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 366) to provide for temporary extension of certain insurance programs relating to housing and community development, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 2254

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), for Mr. HEINZ, proposes an amendment numbered 2254:

At the end of the joint resolution add the following:

SEC. . . That section 8 of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 is amended by striking out "September 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 31, 1983".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2254) was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for third reading.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING TESTIMONY OF DANIEL MEYER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk, for myself and the distinguished minority leader, a resolution dealing with a matter involving the Senate Legal Counsel and the giving of testimony, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. President, this resolution would authorize testimony by Daniel Meyer, an employee in Senator BOSCHWITZ's office, in the case of Little Earth of United Tribes, Inc., et al. against United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, et al., which is pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Minnesota, Third Division. This testimony has been requested in connection with pending motions in the case. This resolution would authorize Mr. Meyer to provide the requested testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 235) authorizing testimony of Daniel Meyer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 235

Whereas the case of Little Earth of United Tribes, Inc., et al. v. United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, et al., Civ. 3-82-1096, is pending in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Third Division;

Whereas counsel for the plaintiff has requested the testimony of Daniel Meyer, a Senate employee in Senator Boschwitz's office;

Whereas the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas when it appears that the testimony under the control of or in the possession of the Senate is needful for use in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Daniel Meyer is authorized to appear and testify in the case of Little Earth of United Tribes, Inc., et al. v. United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, et al., except concerning matters that are privileged from disclosure.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING CERTAIN ACTION BY SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk, on behalf of myself and the minority leader, a resolution which deals with the Senate Legal Counsel and the authority of that counsel to represent certain persons, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. President, a subpena has been served for documents generated 7 years ago by the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs and the Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in their investigations of alleged foreign payments. The case for which the documents are sought is pending in State court in California, and a proceeding for obtaining the documents has been commenced in Federal court in the District of Columbia. This resolution would authorize and direct the Senate Legal Counsel to represent the chief clerks of these two committees regarding the subpena. The resolution does not authorize the release of any document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 236) to direct the Senate Legal Counsel to represent David Keaney and Suzanne A. Bingham in D. J. Haughton, et al., v. Unigard Mutual Insurance Co., et al.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 236

Whereas, in the case of D.J. Haughton, et al., v. Unigard Mutual Insurance et. al., No. C 165151 pending in Superior Court for Los Angeles County in California, the defendants are seeking documents concerning alleged payments by Lockheed Aircraft Corporation;

Whereas, the defendants in the California action have filed the proceeding of D.J. Haughton, et al., v. Unigard Mutual Insurance et. al., Misc. No. 83-0397, pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, and served in it a subpoena duces tecum for records, concerning alleged payments by Lockheed Aircraft Corporation and others, generated in 1975 and 1976 by the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, and the Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations of the Committee on Foreign Relations;

Whereas, Suzanne A. Bingham, chief clerk of the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, and David Keaney, chief clerk of the Committee on Foreign Relations, have been substituted for the Secretary of the Senate as subpoena respondents;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C., §§ 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2) (Supp. V 1981), the Senate may direct its counsel to defend any member or employee of the Senate in any proceeding with respect to any subpoena or order directed to such member or employee in his official or representative capacity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent David Keaney and Suzanne A. Bingham, and any other committees, members, officers or other employees of the Senate, in the cases of D.J. Haughton, et al., v. Unigard Mutual Insurance et. al., No. C 165151 (Calif. Super. Ct.) and D.J. Haughton, et al., v. Unigard Mutual Insurance et. al., Misc. No. 83-09397 (D.C.C.).

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CLINCH RIVER BREEDER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I told the minority leader a moment ago that there was a colloquy for the continuing resolution record in respect to the Clinch River breeder, which has no effect except to establish we have not disturbed the present status of the project that has been submitted to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I ask unanimous consent that the colloquy be placed in the RECORD as if given at an appropriate place in the debate on the continuing resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY FOR THE RECORD TO REMAIN OPEN UNTIL 8 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD remain open tonight until 8 p.m. for the purpose of inserting statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 7:07 p.m. the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Friday, September 30, 1983, at 10 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 29, 1983

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Reverend Richard A. Carpenter, senior minister of the Broadway Christian Church of Lexington, Ky., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we come to You with thanksgiving and praise. We keep asking You to bless America and You keep honoring our prayer.

You have formed our Nation with a wide variety of people and have shown us how to live together. Thank You for our neighbors.

You have caused us to be sensitive to the needs of others. Thank You for the resources You give us to meet those needs.

You have provided competent people to work in government. Thank You for people who put service above self.

You have given us life itself. Thank You for letting us live it in these United States.

Thank You for being so good to us and help us to be good to each other.

Thank you for blessing America. Help us to continue to be a blessing to our world.

In Jesus' name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3263) entitled "An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 15, 21, 53, 55, 56, and 57 to the above-entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2840) entitled "An act to provide for the orderly termination of Federal management of the Pribilof Islands, Alaska."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House with an amendment to the bill (S. 461) entitled "An act to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Office of Government Ethics for 5 years."

THE REVEREND RICHARD A. CARPENTER

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to welcome to the floor of the House of Representatives my good friend and our guest chaplain, Richard A. Carpenter, senior minister of the Broadway Christian Church of Lexington, Ky.

Brother Carpenter has been an important, respected, and well-loved member of the communities he has served for the past 23 years. He was graduated from Milligan College in Johnson City, Tenn., and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky. He has served congregations in Kentucky and Ohio, including 6 years at the Hillsboro Church of Christ, my hometown church in Ohio.

Always a firm believer and supporter of the young people of our Nation, Brother Carpenter was the founder of the Christian Student Fellowship at the University of Kentucky.

Reverend Carpenter also has a wonderful family. His wife, Eileen, and two sons—Stephen, who was a legislative assistant in my Washington office, and David, who is a staff assistant in the office of our colleague and friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. LARRY HOPKINS.

I want to extend my thanks to Chaplain Ford for inviting Reverend Carpenter to offer today's prayer and to Reverend Carpenter for his important words of inspiration.

I am deeply proud and honored to introduce my friend, Rev. Dick Carpenter, to my colleagues today.

SECRETARY WATT'S POLICIES THREATEN FUTURE OF OUR NATURAL RESOURCES

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge President Reagan to reconsider his decision to allow Secretary of the Interior James Watt to retain his office. At some point Secretary Watt's policies and conduct become President Reagan's responsibility. We have reached that point.

Secretary Watt's policies threaten the future of our precious natural resources. In my district alone, his obsession with offshore oil drilling has imperiled the future of the most heavily used recreational beaches in the country. He has attempted to sell for profit large portions of irreplaceable wilderness areas. He has tried to weaken the Endangered Species Act, one of the most successful pieces of environmental legislation ever enacted.

In addition to his misdirected policies, he has repeatedly insulted large segments of our population.

He has called environmentalists Nazis and Communists, compared those who do not oppose abortion to the burghers of Nazi Germany, labeled supporters of the nuclear freeze as threats to our national security, likened the criticism of him to the Holocaust, and insulted American Indians.

Most recently, he has insulted the members of a commission appointed to review changes in his coal sale policy which have already cost taxpayers more than $100 million.

He is an embarrassment to the people of our country and is not fit to hold public office. I urge my colleagues to demand that the President fire Secretary Watt immediately.

TAXPAYERS' MONEY IS NOT ALWAYS USED FOR CONGRESSIONAL TRIPS

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, if Members of Congress were told a newspaper has been critical of one of the four U.S. Senators and/or the one House Member who traveled safely to Seoul, Korea, recently for the now famous conference celebrating the 30th anniversary of the mutual defense treaty between the United States and the Republic of Korea, you might assume the newspaper would be either Pravda or Izvestia.

We would assume it was another attempt by the Soviet Union to counter worldwide opinion regarding the tragic killing of 269 innocent persons aboard Korean Air Lines flight 007.

But no, the editorial writers of a Kentucky newspaper, the Louisville Times, are the men who wrote on September 16 about this Kentucky Congressman who did attend the conference:

. . . the Congressman might consider easing up on the junkets. He wouldn't have been headed to distant South Korea at taxpayers' expense if he hadn't determined that his presence, along with that of nearly three dozen other Congressmen, was essential in marking the 30th anniversary of a U.S.-Korea defense treaty . . .

Here are the facts: The expenses of the five Members of Congress making the Korea trip were paid totally by the Asiatic Research Center of Korea University at Seoul and the Institute of American Relations in Washington, D.C.

The Louisville Times is wrong again. Not 1 penny of taxpayers' money was used for the expenses of the five Members of Congress attending the conference.

THE "REGAN AWARD"—AND NOW THE "RONALD REAGAN" AWARD

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, some time back Treasury Secretary Regan offered facetiously to give a huge financial bounty to anyone who could prove to him the connection between continuing high deficits and inflated interest rates.

The Washington Post, among others, took Mr. Regan seriously and periodically names a recipient of what it calls the Regan Award. Vast numbers of renowned economists and public servants—both Democrats and Republicans—have so far qualified for the honor. Indeed, the winners of the Regan Award constitute almost a "Who's Who" of prominent American economists.

The practice of naming an award after the personality who embodies its meaning is, of course, an American tradition. I suggest that, since Ronald Reagan's past, present, and projected deficits put him in the top four places on the alltime Presidential deficit list, and, since as his Budget Director David Stockman points out, these deficits will continue "as far as the eye can see," we have no choice. We must retire the award in Mr. Reagan's honor.

Henceforth, heads of state who run enormous deficits in their countries should be presented with the Ronald Reagan Award. And Interior Secretary James Watt should always be the master of ceremonies at the awards banquet.

THE 98TH CONGRESS SHOULD GET TO WORK TO REDUCE THE DEFICIT

(Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH. Mr. Speaker I rise to join with my fellow Republican Members in trying to make sense—or at least bring a touch of honesty—to the harangue of remarks we have been hearing in recent days about the budget, the deficit, and whatever blame needs to be placed for those.

Today's debt is yesterday's promises In light of the fact that spending has been the personal plaything of a liberal congressional leadership for more than a generation, I think it is pretty silly to hear those same big spenders here today crediting huge deficits to this President, or any President, for that matter.

I admit he is an amazing man, but even Ronald Reagan cannot amass a cumulative national debt of $1½ trillion in just 2½ years. It was done by some real specialists, over a long time. You know who you are.

All through the previous administration, we heard the same folks declaring that entitlements were to blame, unchanging and impossible to reduce. Today, we are supposed to believe that the entitlements—the promises which your generation of liberal spenders made—are no longer the problem. Now the President is the problem.

I suggest most Americans are not buying this nonsense any more than we are.

I urge that the Members of this 98th Congress go to work to reduce the deficit and resist this beguiling temptation to simply shift the blame.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR ACTION ON THE ACID RAIN PROBLEM

(Mr. BOEHLERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, a New York Times article Tuesday reported some administration officials are still questioning the need for swift action to combat acid rain. That is disturbing.

The article indicated that EPA Administrator Ruckelshaus had proposed a program of reducing sulfur dioxide emissions by about 5 million tons, but that other officials were balking at that, viewing the proposal as too costly. My reaction: "Say it ain't so."

Such shortsighted thinking should not persist at this late date. The cost of reducing emissions is far less than the cost of sitting idly by, watching the destruction of our lakes, farms, and forests. The White House's own science council, the Acid Rain Peer Review Panel, has warned that unless action is taken immediately, our environment could suffer irreversible damage. To do nothing is to court disaster.

Scientists say that emissions must be cut by at least 10 million tons to make a dent in the acid rain problem. A 5 million ton cut would be little more than cosmetic. It would entail spending billions of dollars on a plan that would solve nothing. Is this the thinking of an administration that worries about wasting money? I hope not.

There is only one real solution to the acid rain problem—the one embodied in H.R. 3400, which a number of us are cosponsoring.

The Northeast, which is suffering most from acid rain, is not going to quietly accept half-hearted solutions or worse.

The administration has slowly altered its rhetoric on acid rain, finally acknowledging that it is not created in heaven by divine providence, but rather is manufactured here on Earth by we mortals.

We have had plenty of words. Now it is time for action, real action.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL COMPENSATION ACT OF 1982

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 319 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 319

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3929) to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and to the amendments made in order by this resolution, and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. No amendment to the bill shall be in order except amendments recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. It shall be in order to consider the amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means printed in the Congressional Record of September 27, 1983, by Representative Rostenkowski of Illinois, and if offered by Representative Rostenkowski or his designee, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule XVI are hereby waived. Said amendment shall not be subject to amendment but shall be debatable for not to exceed thirty minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment, and a member opposed thereto. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MOAKLEY) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA) and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA). Pending that I yield myself such time as I may use and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 319 is a modified closed rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 3929, a bill to modify and extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for 7 weeks to November 16, 1983. As the Clerk has stated, the resolution provides 2 hours of general debate and specifies that the bill shall be considered as read for amendment. No amendments to the bill shall be in order except Ways and Means Committee amendments which are not amendable.

Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order the committee amendment printed in the Congressional Record of September 27 by Representative ROSTENKOWSKI and provides 30 minutes of debate for the amendment to be equally divided between the proponent and a member opposed thereto.

To permit consideration of the amendment, the rule waives clause 7 of rule XVI—the germaneness rule. The amendment increases the cap on Federal title XX social services funds to $2.8 billion effective October 1, 1983—a $75 million increase above the current temporary cap. The States would be required to use $200 million of these additional funds to address unemployment related problems. The purpose of the amendment is to bring the funding levels for these very important and valuable social service programs more into agreement with the funding levels contained in the fiscal year 1984 budget resolution. The germaneness waiver is necessary because the bill as introduced did not contain such amendments to title XX and the programs authorized by title XX of the Social Security Act are not directly related to the Federal supplemental compensation program.

Upon conclusion of consideration of the bill, one motion to recommit would be in order.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3929 extends, with certain modifications, the Federal supplemental compensation program from October 1 to November 16, 1983. This program provides additional 7 weeks of unemployment benefits to jobless workers who have exhausted all of the State and Federal unemployment benefits.

The program modifications made by H.R. 3929 to the Federal compensation program include: Extending the maximum payment period from 14 to 16 weeks in high-unemployment States; allowing States to use a different trigger mechanism which is the unemployment rate—in order to determine the Federal supplemental compensation payment period; and allowing individuals who have exhausted or are receiving the Federal supplemental compensation benefits to receive 75 percent of their new Federal supplemental compensation entitlement, up to a maximum of 8 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation also conforms the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) definition of taxable wages with the social security tax definition for the purposes of determining whether Federal supplemental compensation payments made to the estates or survivors of deceased individuals should be subject to the FUTA tax.

H.R. 3929 extends the current law exemption of wages paid to certain alien farmworkers from the unemployment tax until January 1, 1986. In addition, the legislation requires the Secretary to report to the Congress no later than April 1, 1984, on targeting Federal supplemental compensation benefits to sub-State areas and identifying structurally unemployed workers.

Finally, an amendment adopted by the Ways and Means Committee would extend for 46 days the provision of Public Law 97-455 which allows beneficiaries terminated from the rolls because of a review of their eligibility to continue receiving benefits until an administrative law judge has rendered a decision on the case.

Mr. Speaker, the program will expire tomorrow, September 30 and it is unlikely that the House and Senate can reach agreement on this controversial and complex issue in time to prevent disruption in the program. This short-term extension would allow us to address the serious problems with the Federal compensation program without imposing a hardship on its current participants.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 319 provides for timely and expeditious consideration of H.R. 3929. I would urge my colleagues to adopt this rule so that the House may proceed to the consideration of this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for debate only.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

□ 1020

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order a somewhat controversial piece of legislation, even though it appears to be only a 45-day extension of the Federal supplemental compensation.

First, the 45-day length of the extension creates problems. Such a short extension will be disruptive to the orderly administration of the program.

The legislation does not merely extend the current Federal supplemental compensation program for 45 days but also establishes a new benefit structure.

This new structure could well be revised again at the end of 45 days. At that time a new bill could be loaded down with additional, unnecessary, and unrelated spending, plus new taxes.

A second problem with the 45-day extension is that it hides the true cost of the Federal supplemental compensation program. The reserve fund portion of the first concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1984, passed by this House, included $1.5 billion for a contemplated 6-month extension of this program, whereas the bill before us today will cost $1.2 billion for 45 days.

Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what happened to this budget resolution that was passed and the $1.5 billion limitation that was anticipated for this program.

Mr. Speaker, according to the information provided at the time of the Rules Committee meeting by the Office of Management and Budget, the administration strongly opposes this bill. The OMB estimates that if H.R. 3929 were to become an 18-month extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program, it would cost $6 billion.

Finally, OMB concludes that if this bill were to reach the President's desk in its present form it would be recommended for disapproval.

Mr. Speaker, like most rules from the Ways and Means Committee, this one restricts amendments. In this case no amendments will be in order except committee amendments and one nongermane amendment to be offered by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, you guessed it. When you talk about nongermane amendments you talk about additional spending by this Congress.

According to testimony presented in the Rules Committee the purpose of this amendment is to increase the cap on Federal title XX social services funds to $2.8 billion, effective October 1, 1983.

This is a permanent increase in the title XX cap for fiscal years 1984 and 1985. The amendment is printed in the RECORD of September 27.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to hear a lot of rhetoric around this place in the next couple of days about all of the deficit financing that has been going on in the last few years.

This type of legislation is typical of the type of legislation that has been getting us into the deficit position that we are in.

The rule provides a total of 2 hours of general debate plus 30 minutes of debate on the amendment by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COLEMAN of Texas). Pursuant to House Resolution 319 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3929.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3929, to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes, with Mr. MOAKLEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL) will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI).

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 3929 would extend and modify the Federal supplemental compensation program (FSC). The FSC program provides additional weeks of unemployment benefits to jobless workers who have exhausted all other State and Federal unemployment benefits. The program will expire on September 30, 1983.

With a nationwide unemployment rate of 9.5 percent, representing 10½ million jobless Americans, the need to extend the FSC program beyond September 30, is readily apparent. There is disagreement, however, over how the program should be structured. It will take the House and the Senate longer than the few days remaining before the program expires to reach agreement on the appropriate structure of a longer term extension.

For this reason, the bill provides a 7-week extension of the FSC program. This will prevent any disruption in the program and immediately provide additional weeks of FSC to over 1 million jobless workers who have exhausted their FSC entitlement. This short-term extension will also give the House and the Senate time to address the serious problems that exist in the program and reach agreement on the specific provisions of a longer extension.

Under the extension approved by the Ways and Means Committee, the FSC program would be modified as follows:

First, the maximum number of weeks of FSC payable in the highest unemployment States would be increased to 16;

Second, the number of weeks of FSC payable in a State would be determined by either the State's insured unemployment rate or its total unemployment rate; and Third, individuals who have exhausted FSC by October 1, 1983, or who will exhaust soon after that date, would be eligible for 8 additional weeks of FSC.

In addition to the extension and modification of the FSC program, the bill contains two amendments to the Federal Unemployment Tax Act. The first would exclude from Federal unemployment taxes payments made to the estate or survivors of a deceased employee, The second amendment would extend the current exclusion from Federal unemployment taxes of wages paid to alien farmworkers.

The bill also extends, for 45 days, the authority to continue payments of social security disability benefits during the appeal to an administrative law judge of a decision to terminate such benefits. This authority expires on October 1, 1983. The Committee on Ways and Means will report a major disability reform bill within a few days. One of the provisions of that bill will make permanent this authority to continue payments through the appeal to an administrative law judge. In order to prevent any lapse of this authority while the Congress considers the larger disability bill, we extend the authority for 45 days.

The Committee on Ways and Means approved a committee amendment to H.R. 3929 that has been made in order under the rule. This amendment will permanently increase the cap on the amount of Federal title XX funds to $2.8 billion, effective October 1, 1983. In fiscal year 1984 and 1985 at least $100 million of the additional title XX funds provided under this amendment would have to be used by States to address unemployment related problems.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD), chairman of the Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation Subcommittee, who will give us a more detailed explanation of the bill.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the FSC program provides additional weeks of unemployment compensation to individuals who have exhausted all other State and Federal unemployment benefits. Under current law, the FSC program provides a maximum of 8, 10, 12, or 14 weeks of benefits, depending on a State's insured unemployment rate. Unless we act this week, the program will expire.

There is little disagreement that this program should be extended. While there has been a slow decline in the Nation's unemployment rate, the rate remains intolerably high. Economic projections indicate that unemployment levels will only gradually decline over the coming months.

As the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee indicated, there is disagreement over how the program should be structured. Serious issues exist concerning the method of determining how many weeks of benefits will be payable in a State. In addition, there are serious administrative problems due to individuals and States losing benefits as a result of changes in their insured unemployment rates. For this reason, we extend the program for only 7 weeks. Such an extension will prevent any disruption in the payment of benefits while giving us time to reach agreement on the basic structure of the program.

The bill does modify the FSC program in three significant ways:

First, the maximum number of weeks payable in a State would be increased to 16, so that the basic FSC program would provide 8, 10, 12, 14, or 16 weeks of benefits;

Second, the number of weeks of benefits payable in a State would be determined by either the State's insured unemployment rate or its total unemployment rate. This alternative trigger, using the total unemployment rate in a State, is necessary to assure that those States experiencing the highest rates of real unemployment become eligible for the higher number of FSC weeks. A State such as Michigan, for example, which has a current total unemployment rate of over 14 percent, has an insured unemployment rate of only 3.7 percent. A number of high unemployment States are experiencing a similar gap between their insured and total unemployment rates; and Third, individuals who received FSC prior to October 1, 1983, and who have exhausted their benefits or will exhaust their benefits soon after that date, would be eligible for up to 8 additional weeks of FSC. This reachback provision is designed to provide additional help to the long-term unemployed whose prospects for reemployment remain bleak. Over 1 million jobless workers would be eligible for these reachback weeks.

In addition to the extension and modification of the FSC program, the bill contains two amendments to the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA). The first would exclude from Federal unemployment taxes payments made to the estate or survivors of a deceased employee after the year in which the employee died. This amendment conforms the Federal unemployment tax treatment of such payments with their treatment under social security tax law. The second amendment would extend the current exclusion from Federal unemployment taxes of wages paid to alien farmworkers for 2 years, from January 1, 1984 to January 1, 1986. These farmworkers are admitted to the United States under the Immigration and Nationality Act for a specified period of time to harvest certain crops. They return to their native countries after the harvest season and do not qualify for unemployment compensation.

The bill also directs the Department of Labor to submit two reports to the Congress no later than April 1, 1984. The first would be on the feasibility of identifying structurally unemployed workers. The main purposes of this report are to determine if we can establish objective criteria to identify such workers and what special programs might be established to assist such workers. The second report will be on the feasibility of targeting FSC benefits on the basis of unemployment levels in sub-State areas. The issue of sub-State triggers is one that many members are concerned about. Currently, FSC and extended benefits are based on statewide insured unemployment rates. Many States have relatively low statewide insured rates as well as total unemployment rates. Certain areas of these States, however, have extremely high unemployment rates. The Department's report will discuss how such areas might be defined, the kind of unemployment measures available for such areas, and how long it might take and how much it would cost to develop adequate unemployment measures in such areas.

In addition to the unemployment measures in the bill, as the chairman mentioned, we extend the current authority to continue social security disability payments through the appeal to an administrative law judge of a decision to terminate such payments. This 45-day extension will prevent any disruption of this authority while we consider a larger disability reform bill which takes this authority permanent.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is vitally important to jobless workers who are still struggling to make ends meet. They are anxious to return to work. They need this help in the meantime. I urge my colleagues to support this bill so that these needed benefits will continue to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL) will be recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I support the extension of the FSC but that is not the question before us. The question is how and how much. I think that is what we have to address.

I believe that H.R. 3929 has serious flaws and should not pass in its current form. At the proper time I intend to offer a motion to recommit the bill with instructions designed to correct those flaws.

Before I describe the features of the instructions in my motion to recommit, let me first outline the flaws in H.R. 3929 which make it unacceptable. First, the 45-day extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program (FSC) is too short. The short extension will disrupt the orderly administration of the program by the States. The committee chairman has acknowledged that the 45-day extension will be used to develop still further changes in the structure of the FSC program. Thus, our State agencies will be forced to implement the revised FSC program contained in H.R. 3929 for 45 days and then be forced to implement a significantly different program after November 16.

H.R. 3929 perpetuates instability in the FSC program. The States cannot plan their social service programs for the long term when we extend the FSC program in small increments. Likewise, unemployed persons do not have the peace of mind that the FSC program will continue for a meaningful time.

Next, the cost of H.R. 3929 is excessive. The reserve fund of the first concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1984 included $1.5 billion for a contemplated 6-month extension of the FSC program. The Department of Labor estimates that H.R. 3929 will cost $1.2 billion for a 45-day extension. Over a full year it would cost about $4 billion and over 18 months it will cost at least $6 billion. Numerous extensions of a shorter duration program hide the true cost of the overall program. It is not an honest way to budget.

Some persons might envision our action in mid-November to extend further the FSC program as an attractive lure to induce some Members to vote for an unpopular tax package or omnibus reconciliation package. But any such extension will drive the FSC cost far above the mark in the budget resolution. It is ironic and contradictory to use an FSC extension which is likely to be $2.5 billion overbudget for the full year as the lure to pass a deficit-cutting tax package or reconciliation bill.

Next, H.R. 3929 moves in the wrong direction. The unemployment rate is falling and we should be moving gradually to disengage this temporary program. Instead, H.R. 3929 increases and reinforces the program. For example, when the current FSC program was last amended this spring the unemployment rate was 10.3 percent and the program provided a maximum of 14 weeks of benefits. In the intervening 6 months unemployment has fallen to 9.5 percent but the committee bill increases the maximum benefits to 16 weeks. The committee bill moves in the direction of establishing a permanent new layer of Federal unemployment benefits.

Finally, the administration has expressed its strong opposition to H.R. 3929. H.R. 3929 steers a deliberate collision course with the administration and invites a veto. The Department of Labor and the OMB will recommend strongly that the President veto H.R. 3929. I do not believe it is responsible for us to jeopardize an FSC extension in this manner. The committee bill puts short-term political gamesmanship above the interests of the unemployed.

This outline of the faults in H.R. 3929 is useful to understand why the FSC extension contained in my motion to recommit is superior. My motion to recommit would replace the 45-day extension in H.R. 3929 with an 18-month FSC extension modeled on the bill which passed the Senate Finance Committee on a strong bipartisan vote.

The recommittal motion provides an 18-month extension of the FSC program, or until March 31, 1985. This will insure a stable, far-reaching program of benefits for the long-term unemployed. It avoids all the instability and uncertainty inherent in the committee bill.

The benefit schedule in the recommittal motion ranges from 6 weeks to 12 weeks based on a sliding scale correlated to the unemployment rate in a State. The 12-week maximum falls half-way between the 14-week maximum in current law and the 10-week maximum in the administration's requested extension.

I appreciate the situation which exists in several States which have high total unemployment but whose insured unemployment rates recently have fallen unrealistically low. Under the conventional program such low insured unemployment rates would prevent those States from receiving the maximum weeks of benefits. My extension addresses this legitimate concern. The recent sharp drop in the insured unemployment rate in the high unemployment rate States would be offset by making them eligible for the maximum number of weeks based on their average unemployment rate over the last 78 weeks. States such as Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Arkansas, Rhode Island, Idaho, Oregon, Alabama, Washington, Alaska, and West Virginia would be assured of receiving the maximum benefits. Other high unemployment States such as Louisiana would receive the maximum benefits under the basic criteria in the extension without reference to this special, saving provision.

The next remarkable feature is that the recommittal motion accomplishes all this without an excessive cost overrun. The cost of the extension in the recommittal motion is $3.8 billion for 18 months. This is $2.2 billion less than the committee's bill over an 18-month period. In fiscal year 1984 it would cost $2.5 billion.

I do not pretend that this cost saving does not come from slightly reduced benefits. While the maximum benefits in the recommittal motion are 4 weeks less than the maximum benefits in H.R. 3929, over two-thirds of the States would sacrifice only 2 weeks or less in benefits.

The administration has indicated that such an extension is acceptable. While my extension will cost about $500 million more than the administration's proposal, it has signaled its willingness to compromise. We should not reject an accommodation which provides continued FSC benefits, and long-term stability at an acceptable cost.

In summary, I believe the FSC extension in my recommittal motion corrects each of the flaws in the committee bill. It provides an extension of meaningful length. This assures long-term stability and continued benefits to the unemployed. It addresses the special situation of States with high unemployment rates but low insured rates by making them eligible for the maximum number of weeks. Finally, it accomplishes all this at an acceptable cost. I believe this demonstrates that the recommittal motion is preferable to the committee bill and merits our support.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MOORE), a member of the committee.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I serve as a member of the Subcommittee on Unemployment Compensation and as a member of the full committee. I supported this bill in the subcommittee, in the full committee, and I rise to do so now.

There may be some problems with this bill. I certainly think it should have been extended for 16 weeks, as we did in the subcommittee, instead of 45 days. There may be other problems as the gentleman from South Carolina has outlined.

But I do not think the issue today is what might have been. The issue is what is before us and what we must do.

The unemployment compensation program is going to expire at the end of this month, a few days away, unless this House takes action today on this bill. I think that is the crucial consideration.

I think it is of utmost importance that the House do act and we do extend these benefits.

In a State like mine, Louisiana, we were, perhaps, the last State to enter the recession. We will probably be the last State to leave the recession. Our unemployment, up until a few weeks ago, was 12.4 percent, the fourth highest in the country.

If this program was to end now, we would find ourselves not being able to get the benefit of what is necessary to help our people withstand that recession.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think this bill needs to be extended. We need to go ahead and assist the unemployed workers in this country to come out of the recession. And I think that this 45-day extension, with whatever problems it may have, is certainly better than the alternative.

So I strongly support this bill.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I take it from what the gentleman has stated that as a member of the committee that you intend as a committee to act between now and the 45 days which is contemplated by the bill to shore up some of the problems which have been outlined. Is there a plan to do that or are we going to be facing another deadline 45 days from now in which we are going to be asked to take precipitate action again?

Mr. MOORE. I am not sure I can answer the gentleman's question. It probably ought to be asked to the subcommittee chairman or the full committee chairman. My answer would be that I assume by the fact that the subcommittee was willing to extend unemployment compensation benefits for 16 weeks and this bill only does so for 45 days, that at some point prior to the ending of this first session of this Congress we will readdress that issue to extend those benefits for the difference. That has not been done in this bill, but that is only my assumption.

Mr. GEKAS. But the gentleman agrees that future action will have to be taken if we pass this bill, which in real terms is only a short-term solution?

Mr. MOORE. This gentleman's opinion is that, yes, there ought to be an additional extension beyond those 45 days.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD), the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to just point out to the gentleman who was in the well a moment ago that his State is one of two States that is still receiving extended benefits under the program, with the exception, I think, of Puerto Rico, and the other States have all triggered off.

There are some plans within the next 45 days for the subcommittee to move in this direction, to report out some legislation that will certainly respond to the problems that we are faced with as they relate to the Federal supplemental compensation program itself.

I would also like to point out that the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL), who is the ranking minority member on the committee, used the figures by the Labor Department. I would just like to point out for the record that the Congressional Budget Office, based upon their most recent economic projections, estimates the cost of the Federal supplemental program itself at the tune of $795 million. That $795 million will include both the extension of 7 weeks for the Federal supplemental program, as well as 7 weeks in the reach-back program as well.

Also, under the bill that is before us, the continuation of the disability payments through the ALJ's at the tune of $35 million, and the FUTA wages paid to alien farmworkers is only at the cost of $1 million, which gives us a total cost of $831 million for the bill that is before the Committee today.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge my colleagues to support the 45-day extension. We have already mentioned earlier that as of September 30, midnight tomorrow night, the FSC program will expire. In order for us to continue the program for those unemployed workers who are the recipients of unemployment of Federal supplemental compensation benefits, this bill is needed today. The Congress should act upon it and, hopefully, the Senate will respond today, as well. If we are going to have a conference we can go to conference tonight or tomorrow and work out all of the problems. But the Congressional Budget Office cost figures show that the total dollar amount is $831 million for the 45-day extension, which includes the reach-back, the 7 weeks for the Federal supplemental program, as well as the FUTA provision in it, along with the disability provision.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The figures we have are from the Department of Labor. The report figures, which are carried in the committee report, report a different figure still from the one that the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) had or that I had. They report $915 million.

So I think that we can look at all of those to see exactly what your end figure is.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think the report will also show that the cost of the reduced food stamp and AFDC cost would also lower that $915 million to the $831 million that I talked about.

In the committee report it will show that after they take into consideration the AFDC cost and food stamps, the $831 million is the figure that the Congressional Budget Office is using.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thank the gentleman. I think we have two different sets of figures with Labor and CBO. I hope the gentleman's figures are right.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. I am only using the report that the gentleman made reference to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I certainly understand that, and when you do apply the deductions that the gentleman mentioned, his figure does come out from the gross figure, and I certainly concede it, but their figures and Labor's are different, and I think we have pointed that out very well on both sides.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON).

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for the Nation's jobless. I am especially supportive of the study mandated by this bill which would explore the possibility of allocating benefits according to substate area unemployment data rather than statewide jobless statistics. I commend the subcommittee for including this study in the bill, and thank my colleagues on the unemployment insurance task force for supporting this study in testimony.

Mr. Chairman, the concept of using substate triggers to determine unemployment benefit eligibility is an important one to the people I represent. During February of last year, for example, no fewer than 10 towns in my district reported unemployment rates exceeding 12 percent with Thomaston, Conn., posting one of the highest at 18.2 percent and Torrington at 16.1 percent.

The statewide unemployment rate for February, however, Mr. Chairman, stood at 7.5 percent, meaning that Connecticut received a level of benefits inconsistent with the needs of many of her residents. The people living in the hard-hit communities I represent were forced to accept benefit levels below those that would have been provided had local unemployment statistics which reflect the reality of people's lives, been considered

Mr. Chairman, while the authors of this legislation thoughtfully included the Labor Department study on substate eligibility criteria, I believe that a more thorough analysis of this concept could be obtained by enlisting the services of the Commerce Department as well. The Commerce Department's Bureau of Economic Analysis has already done substantial work on the concept on economic areas—segments of the country where economic activity can be accurately monitored—and has developed statistical measures for approximately 200 such areas throughout the United States.

The concept of an economic area is an important one because within an economic area one can determine where individuals work, where they live, what industries are prevalent, and in general what level of economic activity is present. Economic areas can be used to define a labor market, and in this respect the Commerce Department could provide the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics guidance in developing an appropriate unemployment triggering mechanism.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to requiring the Commerce Department's participation in this study, I believe we must enlarge and better define the bill's existing provisions concerning the kind of study ordered. In my opinion the language in the bill which now states that the Secretary of Labor "shall submit a report to the Congress on the feasibility of using area triggers in unemployment compensation programs" gives broad discretion to the Labor Department and invites rejection. I believe the substate trigger concept is workable, and urge the Secretary of Labor to work with Commerce Department specialists to jointly develop and submit to the Congress a model system of area triggers to be used in unemployment compensation programs.

Mr. Chairman, the Members of this body deserve the opportunity to debate a potentially workable system to more responsibly allocate our scarce public assistance dollars so that they serve the most economically depressed areas of our Nation and the people who have suffered most severely from unemployment. I commend the distinguished minority leader for his work in developing legislation which uses metropolitan statistical areas as substate triggers and I urge the Commerce Department involvement in this mandated study and submission of a model system for our consideration.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. JOHNSON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the gentlewoman from Connecticut that the committee anticipates that the Department of Labor will utilize the information and expertise of the Department of Commerce in preparing the study on the substate triggers.

Mrs. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the Delegate from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

□ 1100

Mr. CORRADA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3929, which would extend the provisions of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 for an additional period of 45 days.

This program is of critical importance to unemployed workers throughout the country whose search for employment continues longer than the period insured by basic and extended unemployment benefits. In an economy of 9.4 percent unemployment, competition for available job slots is high. For many individuals, there are simply no alternatives for work in their communities following the shutdown of a large industry or relocation of a major employer. Consequently, through no fault of their own, these individuals find themselves out of the work force for extended periods of time.

Under more favorable economic conditions, the average length of unemployment is shorter, and most workers are sufficiently covered by basic and extended benefits during transition periods between jobs. But these are not normal times. In August, almost 2.5 million people had been out of work for 27 weeks or more. Average duration of unemployment is 20 weeks—and these figures include only those who are still actively in the job market. If we were to include those who have become discouraged in their search for work—which after 6 months would be understandable—this figure would rise considerably.

I commend Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and Chairman HAROLD FORD for making several vital changes to the formulas for determination of State entitlements. Previously, only the insured unemployment rate of each State was used in fixing FSC benefits for workers in that State. This meant that only those individuals actually receiving State unemployment benefits were counted, effectively ignoring countless long-term unemployed workers. For example, Puerto Rico, which has had unemployment rates over 20 percent every month since 1981, is currently eligible for only 11 of a possible 14 weeks of supplemental benefits, because many of our unemployed have exhausted their initial 30 weeks of benefits.

H.R. 3929 allows calculation of benefits to each State under FSC to be based on either IUR or the State's nonseasonally adjusted total unemployment rate (TUR). This is a fairer formula, which will more effectively target funds to those who need them, the long-term unemployed.

In addition, H.R. 3929 wisely requires the Department of Labor to report on the feasibility of using substate unemployment figures as a basis for distributing unemployment compensation funds. It is obvious that persons in Flint, Mich., are in dire need of extended assistance, while the average unemployment rate for Michigan many not reflect that need. If we are to truly help those individuals whose employment status is at risk, we must be able to easily identify and target those groups.

H.R. 3929, as reported, will provide a welcome 16 weeks of Federal supplemental compensation benefits to the more than 90,000 long-term unemployed workers in Puerto Rico who are about to exhaust available benefits.

It is my first hope that we might see an increase in GNP, and a strengthening of the labor market on the island and throughout the country. In the meantime, however, we must be careful not to penalize the worker who is caught in a dilemma far beyond his control.

Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly support H.R. 3929, and urge my colleagues to act favorably on the measure to fulfill the commitment of this Government to work for the well-being of each of its citizens.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time I have remaining on this side?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL) has 41 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) has 44 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PEASE).

Mr. PEASE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3929 and I hope very much the House will pass it overwhelmingly today. It is an important bill, extremely important for the thousands of workers in this country who are still, unfortunately, unemployed and who have not been able to enjoy the benefits of our modest economic recovery.

As my colleagues in the House know, normally when a worker becomes unemployed, he or she first collects 26 weeks of basic or regular State-paid unemployment benefits, and then in previous times, a worker who was unemployed beyond 26 weeks would be eligible for an additional 13 weeks of extended benefits paid half by the Federal Government and half by the States. Then only in times of extreme high unemployment has there been an additional program, the Federal supplemental compensation program, or FSC, such as we are considering today.

The FSC program is especially important now because the extended benefits program, the second-tier program, is essentially not operative in the United States today, essentially because of changes made in 1981 in the Reconciliation Act pushed through by President Reagan. Most States have triggered off of extended benefits and, indeed, only 2 States of of the 50 are now eligible for extended benefits.

That means that when an unemployed worker in 48 States exhausts his regular 26 weeks of unemployment benefits, he or she is out of luck except for the FSC program, which expires tomorrow. So I think it is especially important that we extend this program and that we follow the committee's recommendation to make workers eligible for up to 14 or 16 weeks of FSC, acting as a bridge, a temporary substitute, for extended benefits.

H.R. 3929 contains another provision which I think is extremely important and precedent-setting.

For the first time in this legislation we make it possible for a State, in considering whether it is eligible or not for FSC, to use either the insured unemployment rate or the total unemployment rate. Giving States that option will allow a number of States to collect some weeks of Federal supplemental compensation that they would not otherwise be able to collect.

I would like to take just a minute to inform the House of the severe disparity between the insured unemployment rate which is supposed to be the measure of unemployment in a State and the actual or total unemployment rate. Keep in mind that we have been using the IUR, the insured unemployment rate, which only counts as unemployed those people who are actually collecting State unemployment benefits. Since the change in the law in 1981, it does not even count those who are collecting extended benefits.

Just selecting a few States at random, comparing the IUR, which is the only measure that has been available in the past, and the TUR, the total unemployment rate, which will be available in the future, thanks to this bill, I think will show why it is important to make this change.

Louisiana in August had an IUR of 5.2 percent, but a TUR of 12.4 percent, over twice as great.

Maryland had a 3.1 IUR; a TUR of 6.3 percent, again twice as great.

Michigan had an IUR of 3.7 percent, but a TUR of 13.1 percent, over three times as great as the IUR.

With disparities like that, it is no wonder that States have been triggering off of extended benefits.

For that reason, it is very important, as I say, that we go to this dual option for States.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PEASE) has expired.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PEASE).

Mr. PEASE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this additional time to me.

Mr. Chairman, another area which I think is important is that of reach-back benefits. There are many, many States, despite the recovery, where the unemployment rate is still distressingly high, and in those States, a lot of them in the Midwest and Northeast, we badly need to give some helping hand to those workers who have exhausted all of their unemployment benefits. This bill does that. I think it is an important feature of the bill.

We considered briefly in the subcommittee a bill introduced earlier this month by Senator BYRD and Senator HEINZ in the other body, and by the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK), and myself here in the House to, in effect, merge EB and FSC into one program. I think that approach has a lot to recommend it and it is my hope and expectation that the subcommittee will use the 45-day extension that we have to look at that proposal in more detail to see whether or not it makes sense and is worth implementing.

Mr. Chairman, the unemployed persons in my State and across the country are not freeloaders or deadbeats. They do not want handouts or Government benefit programs. They want jobs and the dignity and self-respect that employment gives a worker, but until the unemployed are able to return to jobs they have held faithfully for sometimes 15 or 20 years, we owe them the minimum life-supporting benefits of this bill and I very strongly urge its passage.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the ranking minority member on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE).

Mr. CONABLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I support H.R. 3929 because it is important that we extend the Federal supplemental compensation program, FSC as it is called, before it expires on October 1, 1983.

The 45-day extension contained in the committee bill will avoid an abrupt conclusion to a program which assists the long-term unemployed. Unemployment has been falling as the economic recovery takes hold, but it is a lagging indicator as we all know. There remain some long-term unemployed who would benefit from an FSC extension to tide them over until the employment level catches up with a more robust economy.

My position on this 45-day extension, as embodied in H.R. 3929, may differ from that of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle. For example, I think a preferable approach to the impending expiration of FSC would be a long-term extension structured to phase out gradually this supposedly temporary program. Such an extension would give the long-term unemployed the peace of mind that the program would be continuing for an extended period. It also would provide a stable program for the States to administer. The administration made such a request, but it was not accepted.

The only politically viable alternative was the Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation Subcommittee's 9-month extension, which obviously would have provided a relatively longer term than this bill offers. However, I had some misgivings about the cost and structure of the extension approved by the subcommittee. Over a full year, the subcommittee bill would cost some $1 billion more than the extension requested by the administration, for a comparable time. It would have increased and reinforced the FSC, instead of moving it toward a phase-out, which is a logical direction for a temporary program.

Therefore, I feel it probably is better to support a 45-day extension than a 9-month extension. Since it is highy unlikely that the FSC program actually will be allowed to end in 45 days, we might have an opportunity to entertain a more disciplined proposal, possibly in a more favorable environment, when we consider a further extension in early November.

The majority members may well have a different motivation for a 45-day extension. It could be a part of a tactical maneuver unrelated to the substance of the extension. The need to act in mid-November to extend an expiring FSC program could be used as the inducement for some Members to vote for an omnibus tax package which may be developed in the intervening 6 weeks. Members might recall that the FSC program began as an amendment to the 1982 Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA). Soon, thereafter, FSC benefits were expanded in an amendment to legislation increasing gasoline and highway excise taxes. Early this year, the FSC program was enhanced further in an addition to the social security financing legislation. Thus, recent history shows that action to expand and extend the FSC program can be an attractive lure to gain support for an unpopular tax bill. This 45-day extension of the FSC thus could lead to history repeating itself in mid-November, when another tax bill comes along.

The tax bill, Mr. Chairman, will have to stand on its own feet, in my view, but I acknowledge the possibility that this will be a part of such a piece of legislation.

The strong likelihood that FSC will be further extended is underscored by examining the benefit structure in this bill. It provides 8 to 16 weeks of benefits based on a sliding scale correlated to the unemployment rate in a State. It is anomalous to speak of someone receiving 16 weeks of benefits in a 7-week program.

Other features of the bill include up to 8 weeks of additional benefits for persons who have exhausted their current FSC entitlement. There is also a 2-year extension of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act exclusion applicable to certain alien agricultural workers, commonly referred to as H–2 workers. The Department of Labor is directed to undertake a 6-month report on the feasibility of substate area triggers for the FSC program. Numerous Members have expressed support for substate area triggers and this report should give us a better basis for subsequent legislation which inevitably will follow within the 45-day period.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3929 may not be the best of bills, but it is preferable to allowing the FSC program to expire abruptly or to extending a temporary and imperfect program for a significantly longer period of time, which was the real alternative the committee faced at the time this measure was approved.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I say to my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE), that I do not know about hidden agendas and other goals or objectives of the committee in reporting out this 45-day extension of the FSC benefits, but I do know about thousands of people in northern Minnesota and elsewhere around the country who have exhausted their unemployment benefits and who desperately need some financial help. We must put aside other agendas and focus on the real need for this legislation which is vitally important for the people of northern Minnesota whom I represent, where we have in some towns 80 percent unemployment, through no fault of the unemployed, where people have exhausted their unemployment benefits and where, very likely, a good many of the jobless are not going to find work opportunities in the future unless we have a massive recovery in the total economy, a restructuring of the steel industry, and a whole new outlook on the auto industry where one-fifth of our steel used to go.

I have testified at virtually every House hearing on unemployment compensation in the past 2½ years. I do want to compliment the Members on both sides, specifically the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL), who has attended those hearings and given a lot of his time and attention to them, and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD), who has worked diligently to shape responsible legislation.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PEASE) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. CLINGER), who, as cochairs of a task force of the Northeast-Midwest Coalition, presented very thorough testimony to the Unemployment Compensation Subcommittee recommending a number of changes in the FSC program which are incorporated in the present legislation.

H.R. 3929 includes:

First, use of the total unemployment rate (TUR) as an alternative means of determining the number of weeks of benefits paid in a particular State. The insured unemployment rate is totally inadequate during periods of prolonged recession because it, in effect, loses the long-term unemployment in its measure of unemployment. The longer the recession, the lower the IUR;

Second, a reach-back provision to assist those workers who have run out of benefits in recent weeks. In Minnesota, over one-half of FSC recipients exhausted their FSC benefits in one week in August, a phenomenon common throughout the United States; and

Third, a provision requiring the Secretary of Labor to submit reports to Congress in six months on the feasibility of targeting FSC benefits to substate areas, and the feasibility of identifying structurally unemployed workers for extended benefits.

I am pleased that the Ways and Means Committee has set in motion the process by which we can institute substate triggers in recognition of the tremendous differences in unemployment which can exist in economically diverse States.

I want to express my appreciation to my colleague from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) for his support for the substate trigger concept. He recognizes that the statewide trigger does not allow workers in northeastern Minnesota, where unemployment is the worst in the State, to qualify either for EB or for a higher level of FSC benefits.

This year, and last year, I introduced legislation a major provision of which would permit the use of substate triggers. I introduced this legislation after a review of unemployment figures within my home State of Minnesota. Throughout the past 2 years, unemployment in Minnesota has been below the national average; in my district, it has averaged two to three times the State average, and has consistently been close to twice the national average. Unfortunately, the substate trigger will not be available for the allocation of the FSC benefits to be authorized in H.R. 3929. Workers in my district where unemployment remains high will receive the number of weeks determined by the overall State rate.

Nevertheless, the provision requiring the report from the Department of Labor is a sound one, which will enable us next year to act to make the EB and FSC programs more responsive to the Nation's unemployed.

The unemployed of my district and throughout the United States desperately need congressional action on this legislation. It would be the height of insensitivity and irresponsibility if we fail to pass this legislation before the expiration of the FSC program tomorrow at midnight.

I have listened to the expressions of concern over the budgetary consequences of this legislation. I share the concern of my colleagues, but I must ask about the economic consequences for individuals and for distressed communities of the failure to enact this legislation. Furthermore, in this discussion of the budgetary impact of this legislation, I hear little mention of the adoption 2 weeks ago of the record $187.5 billion defense authorization which will do far more to the deficit than the bill now before the House.

The unemployed of Minnesota and the Nation desperately need this legislation. I urge an overwhelming vote in favor of the FSC extension.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3929, a bill to extend the Federal supplemental compensation (FSC) program to November 16, 1983. I believe this bill is vital for the unemployed in Michigan and throughout the Nation.

It is becoming increasingly clear that high levels of unemployment will be with us for the foreseeable future. The administration's own forecast projects a national unemployment rate that will not fall below 9 percent until the last quarter of next year. Last month the number of jobless in Michigan actually rose by 47,000 to 616,000 while the unemployment rate jumped from 13.1 percent to 14.3 percent. Around the country, 10.7 million Americans, 9.5 percent of the labor force, are looking for work without success.

For well over a year now, we have been watching as the Department of Labor each month rolls out another set of astonishing unemployment figures. I am afraid that some have become inured to the tremendous waste and human suffering implicit in a number like 9.5 percent. Let me remind my colleagues that despite some slight improvement, this figure is still one half percentage point above the highest level reached during any recession since the Great Depression of the 1930's.

The Federal supplemental compensation program has been critical in providing support for the unemployed since its inception in 1982. The length and depth of the current recession have made looking for work the hardest job around. The 26 weeks of regular State benefits simply do not provide sufficient time for a successful job search for thousands of individuals in the present economic environment. For this reason I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

In addition to providing additional weeks of benefits, H.R. 3929 recognizes one of the appalling truths of the current recession: only 36 percent of the unemployed are receiving unemployment compensation. Compare this to the last deep recession in 1975 when 76 percent of the jobless were receiving benefits. The bill before us today provides for up to 8 weeks of "reach back" payments to those who have exhausted all of their benefits. In Michigan alone, I have been informed, 80,000 to 100,000 individuals may be eligible for these benefits. These are the long-term jobless who are facing economic extinction without our assistance.

H.R. 3929 makes two important modifications in the present FSC program. The first is the inclusion of an alternative "trigger" based on the total unemployment rate (TUR), the familiar measure of unemployment, for determining the number of weeks of benefits payable in each State. Under present law we have had the absurd situation in which many of the States with the highest unemployment levels qualified for only the minimum number of weeks of benefits. I believe that the new TUR trigger will provide a rational benefit structure in which those States with the highest unemployment levels will be eligible for the maximum number of benefit weeks as Congress intended.

The second important modification is the stricture on the loss of weeks. An individual will receive the number weeks he or she qualifies for initially, even if the number of benefit weeks available in a State falls. Also, a State can only have its benefit weeks reduced once every 3 months. Having spoken with numerous bewildered constituents and beleaguered administrators, I can personally attest to the confusion and administrative burden of the present system which reduced benefits sometimes as often as twice in a single month.

It is my understanding that the other body will shortly consider similar legislation which does not contain a reach back provision, a TUR trigger, or a limitation on the loss of individual benefit weeks. I would like to strongly urge the House Conferees to insist on these provisions. I believe that each of these points addresses a real and important need.

Finally, I would like to note that while H.R. 3929 will provide important assistance to the unemployed, it does not address the problem in the extended benefit (EB) program, which is designed to provide the first tier of Federal support for the jobless. This program, which unlike the temporary FSC program is permanently authorized, is practically defunct. Only two States are currently eligible for the 13 weeks of compensation EB is intended to pay in high unemployment States. This is true despite the fact that 15 States currently have unemployment levels of 10 percent or higher.

The reason so many States with high unemployment are ineligible for extended benefits is the same reason the FSC program was not providing a rational benefit structure under the current formula. The insured unemployment rate (IUR) that is used to trigger on benefits is no longer a good measure of labor market conditions. The Ways and Means Committee recognized the failings of the IUR in the legislation before us today. I hope that the committee will also take up the question of the extended benefit program and make the appropriate modifications in the near future. I believe the Members of this body should be allowed to address the full scope of the Federal unemployment compensation programs when the House again takes up this issue in 45 days.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE).

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3929, a bill to extend for 45 days the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982.

In my State of Pennsylvania, unemployment, at 11.5 percent, is higher than it was a year ago. In the four-county Pittsburgh area, 13.3 percent of the workforce is jobless.

These statistics indicate that unemployment is not a problem which will go away simply by wishing it so. It is a problem of such proportion and severity as to require a major overhaul of our unemployment compensation system.

Extending the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act for 45 days, as the bill before us provides, is an important first step in the process. The bill would provide a reachback provision of 8 weeks for individuals whose compensation has expired, with the maximum number of Federal supplemental compensation weeks ranging from 8 to 16.

Under a formula which takes into account the State's insured unemployment rate, as in the current program, or the seasonally adjusted total unemployment, which is not now a factor, Pennsylvania would be eligible for 14 weeks of Federal supplemental compensation benefits. In addition, the bill requires a study by the Department of Labor on the feasibility of substate, or area, triggers rather than State or national triggers.

Let us consider what the bill does not do. For those members of this House with constituents who must rely on the extended benefits program, this bill offers no resolution to a situation in which 48 of the 50 States do not now qualify for extended benefits.

The reason many States do not qualify is due to changes made to the law in the 1981 budget reconciliation bill, popularly known as "Gramm-Latta." Before 1981, the mandatory trigger for extended benefits was a statewide insured unemployment rate of 4 percent. Gramm-Latta raised this requirement to 5 percent. The optional State trigger, which is now used by all but 13 States, was raised to 6 percent. In addition, States must meet a surge requirement, which measures current unemployment against that of the past 2 years.

As result of these changes, major industrial States, which suffer from staggering unemployment, no longer qualify for extended benefits. I would like to include in the RECORD a chart which lists the insured unemployment rate for selected industrial States as well as the date the State went off the extended benefits program. Each of these States failed to meet the 6-percent trigger.

	13-week insured unemployment rate (as of Aug. 6, 1983)	Extended benefit program ending date
California	4.47	July 2, 1983
Illinois	4.61	June 25, 1983
Indiana	3.20	Apr. 30, 1983
Maryland	3.22	July 31, 1983
Michigan	3.93	June 11, 1983
Pennsylvania	5.63	Aug. 6, 1983
Ohio	3.73	May 14, 1983

Unemployment is not easily adjusted by season in a State such as Pennsylvania. Those without work in industries such as steel are often jobless 6 months or longer. Yet Pennsylvania, a State with high unemployment, does not qualify for extended benefits. The pattern is repeated nationwide.

Thousands of workers have been unemployed for such a duration they have exhausted all benefits. Thirty thousand Pennsylvanians lost all benefits in June, 47,000 in July. Where are they to turn, jobless and without the minimal means of support compensation provides?

As we fashion a more comprehensive unemployment bill in the coming weeks, a bill which should address this and several other pressing questions, I hope the House considers revisions to the law contained in two bills I introduced earlier this month.

My first bill, H.R. 3886, would extend Federal supplemental compensation benefits through March 31, 1984. In addition, it contains a 13-week reachback provision to cover those workers whose benefits have expired.

A second bill, H.R. 3887, would provide a federally funded, 26-week extended benefit program for workers who have exhausted their regular State benefits. In determining whether a State is eligible for extended benefits, the Secretary of Labor is directed to count as unemployed those who now receive extended benefits. This very logical direction, to count those who receive unemployment benefits as among the unemployed, would repeal changes in the law made in the 1981 budget reconciliation bill.

These bills propose a reasonable legislative response to an increasingly desperate situation. We cannot allow the burden of recovery in the recession to be borne mainly by the jobless. The Federal role in providing unemployment assistance should be changed to make the system truly national, simple and fair.

I am pleased that 25 of my colleagues have joined me in sponsoring this legislation. I look forward to working with members of the Ways and Means Committee and others in the coming weeks as we craft a comprehensive unemployment compensation bill which necessarily corrects the mistakes of the past in order to address the problems of the present.

At this point, I would like to include in the RECORD a short summary of the two bills:

SUMMARY OF COYNE UNEMPLOYMENT LEGISLATION

H.R. 3887

(1) Counts workers who are on the extended benefit program in the trigger calculation.

(2) Lowers the State option trigger from 6 percent to 5 percent and lowers the mandatory trigger from 5 percent to 4 percent.

(3) Drops the Federal requirements that workers have 20 weeks of unemployment in their base in order to qualify for the EB program. Instead eligibility would be the same as State's requirements.

(4) Workers would be eligible for a training opportunity without forfeiting their eligibility to receive extended benefits.

(5) Eliminates the 120 percent "surge mechanism".

(6) Reinstates the national trigger.

(7) Requires a study by the Department of Labor to determine the feasibility of substate triggers, to be completed within 2 years.

(8) Establishes a 26 week federally funded extended benefit program for workers who have exhausted their State benefits, effective April 1984.

(1) Reauthorizes the Federal supplemental compensation program from October 1, 1983, to March 31, 1984. 14, 12, 10 or 8 weeks.

(2) Thirteen week reachback provision for individuals whose benefits have expired.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MOLLOHAN).

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 3939, the Federal supplemental compensation program extension.

My support for this bill is strong, but it is not, frankly, without qualifications. The bill provides much-needed relief to our Nation's long-term unemployed, but it by no means fully addresses their problem.

To understand this, we have to understand that two distinct and fundamentally different unemployment problems exist in this country today. There is, first, the problem of traditional unemployment which fluctuates as a normal part of changes in the Nation's economy. The regular unemployment compensation and extended benefits programs were developed in response. They were to act as stabilizers of fluctuating unemployment: Their accounts would accumulate money in times of high economic productivity, and the accounts would pay benefits in times of normal, temporary economic downturns. The expectation was that the unemployment rate would fluctuate up and down in the short term but remain more or less constant over the long term.

This recession, however, added a new dimension to the problem. Not only did the unemployment rate increase in its usual cyclical fashion, a new class of unemployed—the so-called structurally unemployed—caused it to remain high. As a Representative from West Virginia, I can attest to this. Unemployment in my State remains over 17 percent, largely because the economy in West Virginia has traditionally rested on those basic "smokestack" industries—coal, steel, glass, and chemicals—that are hard hit in any recession but have been especially hard hit by this recession. I know men and women who have worked 20 or 30 years in the coal mines or the steel mills who have been out of work for over 2 years now.

Mr. Chairman, these people need unemployment compensation but they do not want unemployment compensation. They want jobs, they want to be able to work, they want to contribute their skills to their communities and their country. The real solution to their needs lies not in extending unemployment compensation but in recognizing the Federal Government's responsibility to help them put skills to work. We need job-training programs, we need a good education system, we need sane fiscal and monetary policies that do not disrupt our economy.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the bill before us today, while I would also urge them to remember this is just the first step needed.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS).

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If I can have the attention of the subcommittee chairman, as we know, the chairman is aware that Vermont has found itself in an unusual situation. They recently received notice from the Department of the Treasury that the State allegedly owes some $100,000 in interest on advances made to the State and subsequently repaid in full prior to the end of this fiscal year. This notice was received roughly a week ago. These advances were made in the first two quarters of the calendar year 1983. These advances were made and repaid in reliance upon the statutory provisions of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981.

Section 2407 of this law states in the pertinent part that no interest shall be required to be paid with respect to any advance made during any calendar year if such advance is repaid in full before the close of September 30, the calendar year in which the advance is made.

The next section is the one which the Solicitor General is relying upon. It says basically that if you have a subsequent advance then interest is due. The obvious meaning is that you cannot have a balance at the end of the year. Vermont made the mistake of trying to save the Treasury money by repaying when they had the money and then taking another advance and repaying it, so they made apparently more than one advance. All of this occured within the first two quarters. Vermont repaid them all in the same fiscal year.

There certainly was no intent to penalize a State for trying to save the U.S. Government money.

Now, I believe the other body is going to take care of this by an amendment. I would hope that the subcommittee chairman would feel disposed to accept that Senate language which would clarify this problem, which obviously was not the intention of the original drafters of this legislation.

I wonder if the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) would comment on that? I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding. I want to let my colleague know that I am aware of the problem that the gentleman is faced with in the State of Vermont.

I do not believe that it was our intent to impose an interest penalty when a State repays its loans by the September 30 date or within that given year.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman again for yielding.

I would hope that the Department of Labor and the Department of the Treasury can resolve their different interpretations of the law.

Labor supports the State's position that no interest is due. If we do not resolve the issue, I will assure my colleague, the gentleman from Vermont, that I will work with him and the full committee chairman, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) to resolve the issue.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman very much.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3929, a bill which extends, perhaps reasonably, and expands, probably irresponsibly, the Federal supplemental compensation (FSC) program for 7 weeks beyond the current expiration date of September 30. The extension is an obviously temporary 45-day stop gap.

The current FSC program was created as part of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982. It was enacted at a time when unemployment was reaching its peak levels, and authorized 6 to 10 weeks of additional unemployment compensation benefits. These new benefits, unlike the regular unemployment compensation program and the extended benefits (EB) program, were, and are, entirely federally funded.

The FSC program was expanded in our highway tax bill in December 1982, to provide a total of between 8 to 16 weeks of benefits to eligible individuals. In March of this year, the FSC program was extended once again for 6 months. However, in recognition of the large costs of the program and of the fact that unemployment was declining, the total number of weeks an individual could receive was reduced to between 8 and 14 weeks.

The administration recognized that, although the economy is showing steady improvement and the unemployment rate continues to decline, unemployment will continue to be relatively high over the next 18 months. The administration therefore proposed an additional 18-month extension of the FSC program. However, due to the budgetary limits, and due to the fact that unemployment continues to decline, the number of weeks provided for in the proposal ranged from 6 to 10 weeks of additional benefits. Even with the reduced number of weeks of benefits, which would potentially provide an unemployed individual with a total of 49 weeks of unemployment compensation benefits, the extended program would have cost $2.2 billion for fiscal year 1984, $.7 billion above the amount provided for in the fiscal year 1984 budget contingency fund.

H.R. 3929 ignores the fact that unemployment is falling. It also ignores any of the limits of fiscal responsibility set forth in the fiscal year 1984 budget. At a time when the economy is improving, H.R. 3929 lays the groundwork for the most expensive, least restrictive unemployment compensation program ever created.

Under H.R. 3929, an individual who has already received 65 weeks of unemployment compensation will be eligible for up to 8 weeks more, for a total of 73 weeks of benefits. Some claimants may have only worked 20 weeks to qualify. Current unemployment compensation recipients will be entitled to a total 55 weeks of unemployment. The committee is being more generous now with the taxpayers' money, at a time of record deficits and declining unemployment, that it was when the FSC program was originally enacted, and unemployment was climbing.

H.R. 3929 purports to be a temporary, 7-week extension of the FSC program, which will cost only $1 billion, or a little less, according to the subcommittee chairman.

This limited extension is consistent with congressional traditions. It is unnecessarily expensive, and shatters our already outrageous budget-spending limits.

What will happen is that in 6 weeks we will be right back where we are now, extending the FSC program for another yet to be determined period of time. Except then there will be one major difference. We will not be extending the current, reasonable FSC program. We will instead be extending the FSC program which provides an excessive number of weeks of benefits, using a deficient index for determining which States receive what number of weeks. Worst of all, we will be putting into place a program whose full fiscal year cost is $4.2 billion. That is more than $2.5 billion over the highest figure in our budget resolution.

The comments on substate triggers already expressed today are accurate. Some of us have been demanding regional triggers for years. The idea is to put the money where the problems are. The problems do not always follow State lines. My own State of Minnesota is a good example. Just because my area has relatively good employment, unemployment people in the district of my friend, Mr. OBERSTAR should not be triggered off the program.

The Campbell motion to recommit, a device made necessary by the customary gag rule which prohibits amendments, would extend the current program. When unemployment is falling, it would seem unwise to expand unemployment benefits. The maintenance of present benefits would seem to be openhanded enough in such times.

But if the Campbell motion fails, the entire bill should be scrapped and replaced with a responsible, realistic, FSC program. I urge the defeat of H.R. 3929.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. DAUB).

Mr. DAUB. I want to ask a question of the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee.

The distinguished ranking member of the full committee, Mr. CONABLE, was explicit, as were you in your opening remarks on the bill. I would just like to repeat again, if I heard correctly, your suspicion that this may be an engine for a tax bill of some kind that may come to this body in November.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that both the ranking member of the full committee and myself and others are keenly aware that an FSC extension in the past has been part of an engine to pull a tax bill. It did it on TEFRA, it did it on the gasoline tax. And a 45-day extension puts us right at the proper time to do that. I think it is a distinct possibility.

Mr. DAUB. Just before adjournment for the Christmas holidays?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Something like that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL), the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, in the heart of Illinois, throughout my district there are thousands of unemployed men and women who have been out of work for a long time. They want work, but they cannot find it.

The unemployment rate in some parts of my district is around 17 percent. The fastest growing sector of unemployed, according to the most recent figures I have seen, is among the long-term unemployed.

In the Peoria-Tazewell area, the insured unemployement rate decreased by 11 percent over the last year. That is not good news. It is bad news because most of that decrease was due to people who had run out of benefits altogether.

That is the problem in west central Illinois and a number of other pockets of high unemployment all across the industrial belt.

Even though recovery is moving at a brisk pace nationally, there are those areas of the Nation like mine that will be slow to recover, that will lag behind. And there are thousands of unemployed in those areas whose future is still very much in doubt.

There is a legitimate, urgent need to extend Federal supplemental compensation and include in that extension special relief for the long-term unemployed whose future remains in doubt.

The goal of the legislation before us is good.

The manner in which the legislation seeks to achieve the goal, however, leaves something to be desired. It does not combine the need to help the long-term unemployed with the equally critical need to control spending and avoid exacerbating the deficit.

The unemployed do need help, but they do not want the kind of so-called help that will hurt them in the long run.

Under the bill before us, increased benefits are payable regardless of whether the unemployment rate in an area is 2 or 20 percent. Whole States are also eligible for extra benefits under the formula section, based on the State unemployment rate, even though many areas within the State may actually have low rates of unemployment.

The total cost of this bill, on an annualized basis, is expected to run in the neighborhood of $4.5 billion over a billion dollars more than the current FSC program.

With the level of deficit facing us, we simply cannot afford expenditure increases of this magnitude. The broad-brush approach may be acceptible during better times, but at this time it simply requires too much funding to accomplish the intended objective.

We have to begin thinking of how we can rifle shot unemployment funds on the most severely impacted areas.

Last week I introduced a bill which provides for a targeting of FSC benefits on substate areas with the highest unemployment rates. Unemployed individuals in high unemployment areas would in fact receive a longer duration of FSC benefits than what is provided in the committee bill.

Under my bill, a total of 26 weeks of FSC benefits would be available for the unemployed residing in metropolitan statistical areas or counties with unemployment rates of 15 percent or greater. Such individuals would thus be eligible for a minimum of 52 weeks of unemployment benefits, compared to the committee bill minimum of between 34 and 42 weeks, and a maximum of 65 weeks if they have received extended benefits.

In areas with unemployment rates of between 13 and 15 percent, lesser increases in benefits would be provided. For all other areas, the current program would apply.

By targeting benefits in this manner, we would provide extra assistance where the needs are the greatest, and at the same time avoid the higher costs associated with the across-the-board approach of the committee bill.

The Labor Department estimates that, on an annual basis, this targeted approach would cost only about $100 million more than the current program, or $1 billion less than the committee bill.

I had considered offering this proposal here today, but will not do so because I believe the committee should have a chance to consider it. I do note that the bill requires a 6-month study of the issue by the Labor Department. While that might be appropriate, I would hope that we can move faster in implementing this targeted approach.

The proposal has been developed so that it can be implemented immediately. It uses counties or metropolitan statistical areas as the substate areas. The Bureau of Labor Statistics currently collects and publishes monthly unemployment data for both counties and MSA's.

Second, by simply folding the targeted approach into the current FSC program, we enable the program to be carried out through the existing administrative machinery and under basically the same rules and regulations.

I intend to vote for the committee bill today, not because I agree with its approach, but because we do need to extend the FSC program and because we need to assist those in high unemployment areas.

I would hope, however, that when this legislation goes to conference, the conferees will come back with no more than a 45-day extension, so that we can consider and move ahead with cost effective changes in the next go around.

I believe the time has come to adopt the targeted substate approach, and I would hope the committee will move in this direction during the interim 45-day period.

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3929, the Federal supplemental compensation extension.

The FSC program was established in August 1982 as part of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act and was extended for an additional 6 months by the Social Security Act of 1983. The current program expires on September 30, 1983.

It is of the utmost importance that the Congress expeditiously act to extend the FSC. The bill before us today would extend the program for 7 weeks, from September 30, 1983, to November 16, 1983.

In West Virginia, the State with the highest level of unemployment in the Union, approximately 20,700 unemployed workers have completely exhausted their regular State Unemployment compensation which is 28 weeks and their extended benefits which is 13 weeks in the State. There are currently 7,700 unemployed workers receiving FSC. Covered employment in West Virginia is 563,081 workers.

Under H.R. 3929, unemployed workers who begin to collect FSC benefits after October 1 will be able to obtain benefits for 14 weeks in States with an insured unemployment rate of 6 to 7.9 percent or a total unemployment rate of 10 to 11.9 percent. At this time in West Virginia, the IUR is 6.1 percent and the TUR is 9.2 percent.

Those workers who are receiving or have exhausted benefits under the existing FSC program—approximately 28,400 in West Virginia—would be eligible under H.R. 3929 for additional benefits of up to 8 weeks.

Mr. Chairman, I urge favorable and speedy adoption of this most important measure.●

● Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3929 which seeks to extend unemployment benefits to America's jobless through the Federal supplemental compensation (FSC) program. The time is upon us to act to aid those Americans who still suffer the financial hardships of long-term unemployment The FSC program is scheduled to expire at the end of this week, so it is essential that Congress take swift and effective action. The department of Labor estimates that on the final day this program is scheduled to operate, 800,000 unemployed persons will be receiving benefits under its provisions. It is unconscionable for us to refuse continued assistance to thousands of other long-term unemployed persons and their families. I therefore urge my colleagues to support this sorely needed legislation.

In the last few weeks leading up to introduction of this legislation, I have had the pleasure of working with many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle as cochair of the Northeast/Midwest Coalition's Task Force on Unemployment Insurance. I want to commend my cochair, the gentleman from Ohio, DONALD PEASE, and the other members of the task force for the time and efforts they have devoted to helping move this extension along toward passage.

H.R. 3929 contains a number of provisions which the task force feels are indispensable to responsibly carrying on the work of the Federal supplemental compensation program. The "reach back" provision in this legislation would provide some additional weeks of assistance to those who already have exhausted FSC benefits. In States such as Pennsylvania—where the long-term unemployment rate was recently calculated at 40 percent—this reach back is essential to soften the effects of a recovery which is only just beginning to be felt. Because of the concentration of basic industries such as steel and related industries in Pennsylvania and across the Northeast and Midwest, there are still many workers who remain jobless.

Although there are those of my colleagues who criticize this legislation on the grounds that it will prove too costly to the taxpayers, I just want to point out that H.R. 3929 extends the program for only 45 days in anticipation of a comprehensive unemployment compensation program to be taken up by Congress. This is in essence a bridge to help those persons caught in the cracks between the recent recession and a delayed economic recovery in my region of the country.

Another provision of H.R. 3929 which is worthy of positive action by this body is section 203 which directs the Secretary of Labor to study the feasibility of using area triggers for unemployment programs. This topic has been extensively debated today and is one designed to target unemployment compensation to areas smaller than whole States which are particularly hard hit by unemployment. Although the concept is one of high merit, I believe it would be premature to enact substate triggers at this time, without the study on feasibility provided for in this legislation. I would hope that those of my colleagues who, like myself, support the idea of substate triggers see the need for a detailed analysis of the ways to best achieve the ends envisioned. I fear enacting substate triggers without a detailed study could lead to inequitable distribution of taxpayer dollars, and thus irresponsible legislation.

This issue is one on which emotions run high. On the bottom line, however, we are dealing here with the next meal, the next pair of shoes, and the next winter coat for great numbers of able bodied Americans who have a desire to work but are prevented from doing so, in most cases due to circumstances entirely beyond their control. This legislation is not perfect, but it is needed. We are responsible for aiding those who have yet to benefit from an economic recovery which is just begining to gather steam in many regions of this country. I urge my colleagues not to let this chance pass by and therefore to vote in favor of extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3929, a bill to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982.

The FSC program was enacted as a part of last year's tax bill, and pays additional weeks of unemployment benefits to individuals who have exhausted their State benefits and any extended benefits they may have been eligible for. The program expired at the end of March, but was extended through a provision of the Social Security Act amendments. As the Ways and Means Committee members have told us, FSC benefits are paid based on a State's insured unemployment rate.

I am aware of the differences between the House committee's bill and the other body's legislation—which is identical to the motion to recommit that will be made by the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. CAMPBELL. Yet I am going to have to support this committee bill.

First, under the committee bill, more weeks of benefits will be paid depending on the insured unemployment rate than under the proposed motion to recommit. The committee bill also uses the total unemployment rate in the formula, which is getting to be a more accurate representation of those individuals out of work across a State.

Under the committee bill, there is also a reachback provision for those who have exhausted FSC benefits or have some type of entitlement remaining. The motion to recommit contains no such language, despite the fact that the long-term unemployment rate is higher than it has been in many years. What about those poor people who have been out of work for over a year—how do they get by?

The committee bill also has a benefit-reduction guarantee which is not matched, as I understand it, in the other proposals, and, the committee bill requires a study of the use of "substate triggers" for areas of States with high unemployment rates. That report would be due in 6 months.

I do have problems with the fact that this is only a 45-day extension. But I think all of us agree that major reforms are needed in the entire unemployment compensation area, and these 45 days will give the Ways and Means Committee time to study those changes. What would probably be better is a 45-day extension of the current program—at least that would make the work of the State employment agencies a little easier. But this bill is a good alternative.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, this legislation extends the provision of current law which provides social security disability benefit payments through to a hearing by a law judge. That is the most important provision of the disability amendments we enacted last year, and I hope to see it extended.●

● Mr. HANCE. Mr. Chairman, the committee amendment to the bill extending the FSC program includes increased funding for title XX. The Subcommittee on Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation and the full committee both feel that this increase is needed because of increased demand for social services and employment training that are directly or indirectly caused by the impact of unemployment on individuals and families. $100 million of the increased title XX funding in the amendment is targeted for a 2-year period to high unemployment areas within the various States.

The committee examined the problem of high unemployment in substate regions and considered legislation to address this problem. Often, high unemployment pockets are hidden in statewide statistics because of the general healthy economic condition of the State as a whole.

The committee, however, was unable to address this problem through the FSC program because of the lack of uniform unemployment data by substate areas and because of the administrative problems with this approach. The increased title XX funding in this amendment is targeted to high unemployment areas within a State and is intended to at least partially make up for the inability to target the UI program in this manner. These targeted title XX funds would have to be used to address problems directly or indirectly related at increased unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, in June of this year the subcommittee held hearings in McAllen, Tex., to examine the effects of the 1982 peso devaluation on the communities in south Texas that border Mexico. In April 1983, the total unemployment rate in the McAllen, Tex., SMSA was 19 percent and 27.4 percent in the Laredo, Tex., SMSA. These extremely high unemployment rates in south Texas, however, are masked by the nationally reported statewide figures of total unemployment for Texas of 8.1 percent in April and an insured unemployment rate of 3.1 percent.

During the hearing, the subcommittee learned of dramatic increases in applications for AFDC benefits, food stamps, and social services in this area of south Texas. Most alarming was information presented at the hearing concerning the increase in child abuse cases reported in Laredo, Tex. During 1982, 1,119 cases of child abuse were reported for the entire year. For the first 2 months of 1983, 745 cases had already been reported. This situation is compounded by the fact that Laredo has been forced to reduce the number of child welfare caseworkers because of budgetary constraints. This amendment would help address the initial problems of this region.

Another example of statewide unemployment figures not giving a true indication of the severe impact of unemployment in areas and counties within a State was presented at the September 13, 1983 hearing held by the Subcommittee on Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation. During the period between July 1982 and June 1983, Virginia's unemployment rate ranged between 6 percent and 8 percent. The State's insured unemployment rate remained below 3 percent. The healthy statewide figures are largely the result of the heavy military presence in Virginia's Tidewater area and the large Federal civilian employment in northern Virginia.

In the coal producing counties in southwest Virginia, however, unemployment ranges between 18 and 25 percent. In Buchanan County, unemployment has been as high as 36 percent.

According to a survey of the States' use of increased title XX funds under the emergency jobs bill, Virginia has been spending about a third of the additional title XX funds it received for social services for the unemployed and particularly to meet emergency needs. The increase in the permanent title XX funds provided for in this bill will enable the State of Virginia and other States to continue to target a portion of their total title XX allocation to the areas of their States with high unemployment and for those services particularly related to the needs of the unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of this amendment.●

● Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for this measure to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program. I am especially supportive of this bill because of the important and desperately needed changes it makes in the computation of the eligibility of these benefits. The unemployed in my own State of Michigan, where we continue to have a high unemployment rate of 14.1 percent, do not qualify for extended benefits and only qualify for a minimum amount of Federal supplemental compensation due to the presently used eligibility formula. Clearly, this formula does not accurately reflect a true unemployment picture. H.R. 3929 would allow eligibility to also be based on a State's total unemployment rate and grant the necessary relief to those suffering from high and long-term unemployment.

While supportive of this measure, I want to point out the irony of Congress periodic gatherings to extend this program. Due to the administration's opposition to a strong jobs program, we are not able to provide our unemployed with that which they most want: Jobs; instead, we continue to pay benefits. Certainly it makes more sense to reduce our unemployment rate with jobs, rather than having to change eligibility formulas to reflect the continually high rate. Although our unemployed will hopefully continue to receive these benefits, at least for another 45 days when we will have to gather again to consider an extension, they are faced with the prospect of yet another bleak winter with no jobs in sight to help them and no constructive assistance from their Federal Government except the platitude that economic recovery supposedly is here. People in Michigan have been faced with double-digit unemployment for almost 4 years now—have not they suffered long enough without substantive jobs action from this administration?●

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the adoption of H.R. 3929, which revises and extends the Federal supplemental compensation program. This program provides a necessary helping hand to the millions of Americans who not only remain unemployed but who have exhausted all their unemployment benefits. As of August 1983, roughly 2.4 million Americans had been unemployed for 27 weeks or more; less than 40 percent of these individuals were receiving FSC benefits. By the end of this month, some 200,000 persons will have exhausted all their benefits in my State alone, while 8,500 persons will have exhausted their benefits in my district.

These grim statistics illustrate that the recent economic upturn has not helped many, many Americans. I suggest to those who advise us to sit back and wait for this upturn to come to the aid of the unemployed that they do not understand the continued desperation and hardship that so many of these individuals must endure. Let me quote from just one of my constituents:

I know there are no jobs out there to be had because I'm out every week looking for one. In one week, I went to 13 different places seeking employment and only 2 of the 13 would even take an application. If any of the people in Government power, including the President, think things are so good in the job market that unemployment benefits should be cut back, I would personally like to invite any of them to spend a day with me looking for a job. If they have any human feelings at all, by the end of the day they would be just as depressed, discouraged and disheartened as I am when I give up at the end of the day and go home.

I may sound bitter or angry and I guess I am, but mostly I'm just plain scared. How am I going to provide for my wife and two children when the benefits run out? Where are we going to sleep when the landlord throws us out for being behind in our rent? Are we going to freeze this winter if we have a place to live and can't afford utilities?

We should not eliminate this individual's FSC benefits. The current need for assistance remains pressing.

In the future, FSC assistance will also be badly needed. Even if this present upturn continues, and there are valid reasons—the huge budget and trade deficits foremost among them—why it may not, the resulting increase in jobs will not be sufficient. The latest CBO projections estimate that the number of unemployed will be 10 million at the end of this year and 9.4 million at the end of the next. Furthermore, given the structural adjustment occurring in our economy, the number of long-term unemployed will also stay at high levels. My district, which is heavily dependent on the auto and glass industries, is only one example of the many areas where a substantial portion of the long-term unemployed lack the appropriate skills for today's job market. They require this crucial income support until they can make the necessary adjustment.

I would like to emphasize my support for two aspects of the legislation before us. First, the reachback provision is an absolutely essential part of this legislation. Those individuals who have exhausted their benefits prior to September 30 should be eligible for additional benefits. It is these individuals who, having been unemployed for great lengths of time, often face the most painful personal situations. The March FSC extension included a reachback; we should continue to apply that principle in this legislation.

Second, the alternative total unemployment rate trigger mechanism provided for by H.R. 3929 would result in a fairer, more rational FSC program. The current trigger does not consider persons who are receiving supplemental benefits or who have exhausted all unemployment benefits. The exclusion of the longest of the long-term unemployed from this formula has a perverse effect. The length of FSC benefits in any State is not always correlated to the amount and duration of unemployment.

As examples of how inaccurately the current formula—called the IUR—now reflects a State's unemployment picture, Michigan has the second highest unemployment rate, but its IUR is the 19th highest. Ohio has the 6th highest unemployment rate, but its IUR is 23d highest. Finally, Tennessee has the 9th highest unemployment rate, but its IUR is 29th highest. As a result, the unemployed in States like Ohio are significantly shortchanged when it comes to the weeks of FSC benefits received.

An optional total unemployment rate trigger (TUR) would not decrease the weeks of FSC benefits any State would receive. Instead, in States where the IUR does not reflect the true unemployment picture, a TUR trigger would offer a more equitable alternative. This trigger not only better reflects the unemployment situation in a State, its use would result in an unemployment insurance program more comprehensible to all. We should be able to explain to beneficiaries why their FSC benefits may have dropped or are low. This, however, is not very easy to do under the current unemployment insurance system.

I think it is also important to address the costs of the program. First, the bill does not provide for an excessively generous unemployment insurance program. FSC benefits would still, on average, equal 40 percent of a recipient's past wages. Second, deficit arguments should not defeat programs targeted to helping the desperate long-term unemployed. The unemployed have had to suffer long and terribly for our economic upturn. We have the responsibility to provide them with a decent level of income support until they can obtain unemployment.

Finally, I would like to endorse future efforts to undertake comprehensive reform of the three-part unemployment insurance system. The existing three-part unemployment insurance system is cumbersome, confusing, and not well targeted. The continued use of short-run extensions of the FSC program is not the best solution. While I support the bill before us today, I strongly believe that the next time we debate unemployment insurance that we should be discussing a comprehensive reform proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the passage of H.R. 3929.●

● Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3929, legislation to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program which provides up to 8 weeks of additional unemployment benefits to jobless people in Virginia who have exhausted their previous unemployment insurance benefits. In July of this year, the latest month for which data is available, 890 people in my district exhausted their basic unemployment benefits and began receiving FSC benefits. In that same month, 627 people exhausted their FSC benefits and were still without work. During June of this year, 1,305 of my constituents exhausted their basic benefits and 1,895 exhausted their FSC benefits. H.R. 3929 will provide some much needed relief.

I am particularly pleased that the Ways and Means Committee has included in the bill a provision directing the Secretary of Labor to report to the Congress on a mechanism for activating on a substate basis the Federal-State extended benefit program, which provides up to 13 weeks in extended unemployment benefits. The extended benefit program, which is separate from both the basic benefit program and the Federal supplemental compensation program, is now activated only by a measure of statewide unemployment. Since only a statewide trigger is used to activate the program, pockets of high unemployment, such as my district, in otherwise low unemployment States are not eligible for the extended benefits available in other States with high overall unemployment.

I was pleased to testify earlier this month before the Ways and Means Committee in support of the Unemployment Compensation Fairness Act, legislation I have introduced to provide for the payment of extended benefits on a substate basis, and I look forward to the Labor Department's study of this proposal.

There is a clear need for additional weeks of FSC benefits for individuals who have exhausted their basic unemployment benefits and have still not found work. There is also a need to allow those who have exhausted their FSC benefit without finding employment to reach back into the FSC program for additional benefits. I commend the Ways and Means Committee for their work on this matter, and I look forward to working with Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI, Chairman FORD, and the other members of the committee to implement a substate mechanism for the payment of extended benefits under the EB program.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3929, and I include my testimony before the Ways and Means Committee in support of the Unemployment Compensation Fairness Act (H.R. 2169) at this point in the RECORD.

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN RICK BOUCHER BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, SEPTEMBER 13, 1983

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today in support of H.R. 2169, legislation I have introduced to amend the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for the payment of extended unemployment benefits in substate areas and to replace the Insured Unemployment Rate (IUR) with the regular unemployment rate for the purpose of triggering extended benefits.

My legislation is designed to remove the inequities of the current extended benefits program which arise from the use of a statewide trigger to activate the EB program. Because the payment of extended benefits is activated only by a measure of statewide unemployment (the IUR) extended benefits are not available in regions of very high unemployment located within states that have low overall rates of unemployment.

My own state of Virginia provides an excellent example of how the current program fails to serve those most in need of extended benefits. The heavy military presence in Virginia's Tidewater area and the large federal civilian presence in Northern Virginia has served to stabilize Virginia's economy even during periods of high national unemployment. The table below indicates how Virginia's statewide unemployment rate has compared to the national rate of unemployment:

Month	Virginia	United States
July 1982	7.8	9.8
August 1982	7.6	9.9
September 1982	7.4	10.2
October 1982	7.6	10.5
November 1982	7.8	10.7
December 1982	8.1	10.8
January 1983	9.0	10.4
February 1983	8.6	10.4
March 1983	7.7	10.3
April 1983	6.6	10.2
May 1983	6.0	10.1
June 1983	5.5	10.0

During the period between July, 1982 and June, 1983 when the recession was deepest, Virginia's unemployment rate ranged between 6% and 8%, and the state's Insured Unemployment Rate remained below 3%. Despite the state's relatively low unemployment rate throughout the twelve-month period, regions within the state experienced unemployment at more than triple the national rate and more than quadruple the state's rate. In the coal-producing counties of Southwest Virginia, unemployment currently ranges between 18% and 25%, and in one county, unemployment has been as high as 36%.

Notwithstanding these devastatingly high levels of unemployment, no extended benefits have been available to assist jobless people in my district due to Virginia's relatively low level of unemployment. Although the situation is particularly acute in Virginia, virtually every state that did not activate its extended benefit program during the depths of the recession had regions of unemployment far above the state's average unemployment rate. Reliance only on a statewide measure of unemployment for the extended benefits trigger denied the long-term unemployed in those regions the benefits they needed to provide for their families while they searched for new employment.

The unfairness of the current law is striking. At one point earlier this year, Buchanan County, Virginia had an unemployment rate of 32.8%, and at the same time, Detroit, Michigan had an unemployment rate of 20.4%. Because Virginia's IUR was below the extend benefits trigger, unemployed coal miners in Buchanan County did not receive the extended benefits payable to the unemployed auto workers in Detroit.

At the same time earlier this year, the unemployment rate in Duluth, Minnesota was 20.9% while the unemployment rate in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania was 11.6%. But because Minnesota's IUR was below the statewide trigger level used to activate the extended benefits program, iron-ore miners in Duluth were not eligible to receive the extended benefits available to the unemployed steel workers in Pittsburgh.

By using a statewide measure of unemployment, pockets of high unemployment are, in effect, balanced out by regions of low unemployment. No matter how deep and sustained the recession in a given region of a state, extended benefits are not available unless the state's overall unemployment rate rises high enough to activate the extended benefits program.

Under the provisions of H.R. 2169, the payment of extended benefits would still be activated on a statewide basis if a state's overall unemployment rate is 9% or above for at least three consecutive months. If the statewide program is not activated, however, extended benefits may be payable on a substate basis if the unemployment rate in any given "economic area" exceeds 9% for three consecutive months. The economic areas to be used for this purpose have been devised by the Bureau of Economic Analysis of the Department of Commerce and reflect common economic interests within states.

There are 189 economic areas in the nation, but, for the purposes of the extended benefit program, some realignments to the areas will be necessary. For example, although the boundaries of economic areas follow existing county and city lines, they often cross state lines. H.R. 2169 provides for those areas which are comprised of jurisdictions from more than one state to be divided into separate areas and considered as independent areas within their respective states. Use of the economic area system will allow for the payment of extended benefits in substate areas and will alleviate the inequity caused by the use of only a statewide trigger for the extended benefits program.

The principal problem in implementing a substate mechanism for the payment of extended benefits is data collection. H.R. 2169 solves this problem. Use of the economic areas as contemplated by H.R. 2169 would require that the Department of Labor obtain from state employment commissions or by other means unemployment rates for each county and city in the country. This data would then be analyzed to determine unemployment rates for each of the economic areas in the country. Once the data collection procedures are established, I am confident that the system could operate smoothly and that benefits would be targeted to those most in need.

While there are early indications that the national economy may be improving, the coal industry, the auto industry, the steel industry and other sectors of the economy remain severely depressed. Because of the prospects for another resurgence in interest rates, it is clear that unemployment will remain a severe problem in many parts of the country. To help assure equitable unemployment compensation for jobless persons living in pockets of high unemployment, I strongly urge the Committee to act favorably on H.R. 2169, the Unemployment Compensation Fairness Act.●

● Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, section 204 of H.R. 3929 will extend for 45 days the period during which social security disability recipients may continue their benefit payments while appealing a decision to terminate those benefits.

Public Law 97-455, passed by Congress in December 1982, included a provision to allow beneficiaries whose benefits had been ceased because of a medical review of their eligibility to elect to continue receiving benefits until an ALJ has rendered a decision on the case. If the case is denied, then the benefits, except for medicare, are subject to recoupment, subject to the hardship waiver standards already in law. This provision, however, was adopted on a temporary basis only—until further consideration could be given to the CDI issue in the cessations occurring before October 1, 1983. For cessations after that date the program will revert to prior law, which provided benefits for the month of cessation and 2 additional months. Since January, approximately 113,000 individuals have elected to continue benefit payments during appeal.

Section 204 of the bill provides for a temporary extension of this provision through November 15, 1983.

The full Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday of this week also approved H.R. 3755, legislation which will make these extended benefits permanent and which will address major policy and procedural aspects of these disability reviews. We hope this bill will be before the House within a few weeks.

Mr. Chairman, when we enacted Public Law 97-455 last December we made it clear it was a temporary measure to provide relief for those whose disability benefits are terminated under a medical review of their eligibility. The measure was passed in order to give us time to develop more comprehensive legislation.

We thought at that time that October 1 would be sufficient time to complete action on a larger bill, but we are regrettably running a little bit short. I say regrettably because we need to have a full statement in this area in the very near future in order to insure a smooth and equitable operation of the disability program.

H.R. 3755 has been approved in committee, however, and we believe that a 45-day period will be entirely sufficient to allow Congress to complete action in this area.●

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support H.R. 3929, the extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation addresses a very real and clear emergency in my district. There are thousands of people throughout my six-county area who are completely out of unemployment benefits. These are the long-term unemployed who have not been part of our modest economic recovery. In fact, the entire Fourth Congressional District has had no part in an economic recovery.

The human costs associated with long-term unemployment have been pointed out time and time again on the House floor: mortgage foreclosure, divorce, spouse and child abuse, alcoholism, and even suicide. We have a responsibility in this Congress to help alleviate these terrible human costs of long-term unemployment. This extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program is a step in the right direction.

In taking this step, let us not forget that these people do not want unemployment compensation but they need unemployment compensation. What they obviously want is a job. Yet when this House passed a reasonable, responsible, and modest $3.5 billion jobs bill that would help the long-term unemployed, the Republican-controlled Senate refused to act on it and President Reagan emphatically stated he would veto it. They refuse to give the long-term unemployed any real hope for the future. Even the administration's most optimistic projections foresee unemployment remaining above 8 percent through late 1984. But even given this disastrous level of unemployment, the Reagan administration will not support job-creating legislation.

This fact makes it even more important that we pass this Federal supplemental compensation bill in the House and work out the differences with the Senate as soon as possible. These individuals who will be eligible for the additional weeks provided in this bill have earned them. And they desperately need them.

Let us not abandon our responsibility to provide the benefits our unemployed constituents need and to provide them with some hope for the future, even though that hope will be temporary. In the meantime, I urge my colleagues to join me in continuing to call for legislation that will give our unemployed what they really want: jobs.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, Members of the House, the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act extension is a bill whose passage would demonstrate our intentions to the American people. Extending the Federal supplemental compensation program for 7 weeks, from September 30 to November 16, would show the Nation that we intend to recognize the true state of the economy so that we can take action to improve it.

There is no point in pretending that this extension is not necessary. It is. The August unemployment rate held tenaciously to 9.5 percent. For black Americans the unemployment rate was more than doubly tenacious at 21 percent. Are these statistics that suggest an extension of compensation is not needed?

Mr. Chairman, the Federal supplemental compensation program was initially a temporary program enacted in response to the recession. Its purpose is to provide unemployment benefits to workers who have exhausted all other unemployment compensation. Had the Federal Government responded to the recession in an effective manner, this extension would not be necessary. But the fact of the matter is that the Reagan administration has not done its job. As a result, millions of our citizens cannot regain theirs. In this light, it seems only appropriate to extend the program to those who are helplessly paying the price of a failure in national policy.

This legislation is a realistic response to an unhappy unemployment horizon. The bill requires the Labor Department to report to Congress by April 1, 1984, on the feasibility of establishing triggers to target Federal supplemental compensation benefits to local areas of high unemployment within a State. It also requires a report on the feasibility of identifying structurally unemployed workers. My constituents, who live in a State that ranks ninth nationally in its unemployment rate, can relate to these features of the bill. In short, passage of H.R. 3929 would show the people who elected us that at least one branch of their Government acknowledges the truth about our economic and unemployment problems and is willing to take systematic and effective action to alleviate these problems.

Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States insists that "the economy is beginning to sparkle." Do you think he is talking about the same economy that we are? One-sixth of the American labor force is now either unemployed, discouraged, or underemployed. The average unemployed worker has been out a job for just short of 20 weeks and there are 2.4 million people who have been unemployed for more than 6 months. Can we fail to pass this legislation and leave our citizens to the judgment of a man who sees a sparkle where the rest of us see soup kitchens?

In 1975, 76 percent of the unemployed received unemployment benefits. In 1976, 67 percent of the unemployed received benefits. Today, with the optimistic, open-hearted Mr. Reagan in charge of our country, 36 percent of the unemployed are receiving unemployment compensation. More than anything else that I can say, these figures speak to the need for an extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, I urge you to vote in favor of H.R. 3929 to restore the confidence of the American people in our ability to recognize this situation for what it is. The unemployment situation is severe. It needs immediate alleviation. Ultimately, it needs correction. In the meantime, it needs our compassion.●

● Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to join my colleagues in support of H.R. 3929. While this legislation provides much-needed relief and will allow many of America's nearly 11 million unemployed people to continue to meet a portion of their financial responsibilities, it is a Band-Aid measure that falls far short of the goal that we must seek to reach. Unemployment at this time is worse than at the worst point of any other recession since the 1930's. We must do more to address the root causes of unemployment and to offer serious prospects of hope for the future of those who are now in this predicament.

In communities like the First Congressional District of Illinois, where one out of every three people lives below the poverty level, where 60,000 are out of work, and where nearly 60 percent of all youth are unable to find jobs, this legislation will allow the unemployed to breathe a fleeting sigh of relief before tightening their belts and worrying about their future, especially during the coming winter. This measure, which I hope we will pass today, will in no way eliminate the life-threatening plagues of economic and emotional uncertainty and instability caused by prolonged joblessness.

While I support this legislation, I am well aware of its severe limitation, and I call on the Congress to provide more sensitive and realistic programs to address the needs of our unemployed workers. We have this responsibility and we must address it with urgency.●

● Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to ask why the leadership of the majority party is proposing to extend a vital unemployment benefits program for only 45 days. Last week, I heard that the Committee on Ways and Means was ready to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for 9 months. However, it was then reported that the chairman of that committee had the bill changed to a 45-day extension. Why is it that after many of my esteemed colleagues in the House, who are Members of the majority party, spent over 3 hours on the floor decrying the plight of the unemployed during a special order this summer, that we are now playing games with the very program that the long-term unemployed need most? Where are the voices that so recently lambasted the President for "his lack of concern about the unemployed"? Why are they now silent and not protesting this travesty?

To say the least, there is something very hypocritical about criticizing the President for a lack of compassion for the unemployed worker and then changing a 9-month extension of FSC to 45 days. Yet I have not heard any great uproar about this display of politics as usual. Where are all those Members who so recently protested high unemployment and a lack of responsive and responsible action on the part of the Federal Government?

The unemployed need and count on the assistance provided them through FSC benefits. Now we are telling them that they are going to have to wait an even longer time before they know whether there will be any benefits to collect after mid-November. These people have spent the last month worried about benefits being paid after September 30, and now this body is telling them the uncertainty will continue for another 45 days. Where is the compassion in this act?

If this body is truly concerned about the unemployed and if it wants to show compassion, then the 45-day extension of the FSC program should at least be restored to the 9 months that the Ways and Means Committee originally authorized, or even better an extension approaching the 18 months suggested by the Reagan administration. It is not fair to our unemployed to put them through mental suffering every few months by forcing them to wonder whether or not Congress will reauthorize the FSC program. We need to be more concerned about the effect our actions have on the unemployed and pay attention to what our policies are doing to the people of this country and not just make speeches on the floor of the House about what a terrible problem this country has with unemployment.

Unemployment is a major problem and we must take steps to correct this problem. While taking these needed actions, we must assist the many people who are unemployed while they look for new jobs. For some of them this will take longer than the assistance provided by the regular benefit unemployment compensation program. Without relief being provided by the extended benefit program—as most States are no longer eligible for it—the unemployed need the aid provided by FSC more than ever. The House of Representatives must be responsive to this need. Mr. Chairman, a 45-day extension of the FSC program is being anything but responsive.

I call on my colleagues, with whom I earlier joined, to speak out about the problem of high unemployment, to join with me now in calling on the leadership of the majority party to provide meaningful and lasting relief for the many people who now count on the FSC program for their only source of income. As we approach the end of fiscal year 1983, we should not play games with this vitally needed program. And we most certainly should not put the unemployed people of this country through unnecessary suffering so that the majority party leadership can use a longer term extension of the FSC program as a vehicle to raise taxes in the coming weeks.●

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 319, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

No amendments are in order except amendments recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, which shall not be subject to amendment. It shall be in order to consider the amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 27, 1983, by Representative ROSTENKOWSKI, and if offered by Representative ROSTENKOWSKI, or his designee, which shall not be subject to amendment, but shall be debatable for not to exceed 30 minutes equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The text of the bill, H.R. 3929, is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—EXTENSION OF FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL COMPENSATION PROGRAM

SEC. 101. EXTENSION OF FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL COMPENSATION PROGRAM.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (2) of section 602(f) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 is amended to read as follows:

"(2) No Federal supplemental compensation shall be payable to any individual under an agreement entered into under this subtitle for any week beginning after November 15, 1983."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (2) of section 605 of such Act is amended by striking out "October 1, 1983 (except as otherwise provided in section 602(f)(2))" and inserting in lieu thereof "November 16, 1983".

SEC. 102. INCREASE IN NUMBER OF WEEKS FOR WHICH BENEFITS ARE PAYABLE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (e) of section 602 of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 is amended by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) In the case of any account from which Federal supplemental compensation is first payable to an individual for a week beginning after September 30, 1983, the amount established in such account shall be equal to the lesser of—

"(i) 65 per centum of the total amount of regular compensation (including dependents' allowances) payable to the individual with respect to the benefit year (as determined under the State law) on the basis of which he most recently received regular compensation, or

"(ii) the applicable limit determined under the following table times his average weekly benefit amount for his benefit year:

"In the case of a:	The applicable limit is:
16-week period	16
14-week period	14
12-week period	12
10-week period	10
8-week period	8

"(B) In the case of any account from which Federal supplemental compensation was payable to an individual for a week beginning before October 1, 1983, the amount established in such account shall be equal to the lesser of the subparagraph (A) entitlement or the sum of—

"(i) the subparagraph (A) entitlement reduced (but not below zero) by the aggregate amount of Federal supplemental compensation paid to such individual from such account for weeks beginning before October 1, 1983, plus

"(ii) such individual's additional entitlement.

"(C) For purposes of subparagraph (B) and this subparagraph—

"(i) The term 'subparagraph (A) entitlement' means the amount which would have been established in the account if subparagraph (A) had applied to such account.

"(ii) The term 'additional entitlement' means the lesser of—

"(I) ¾ of the subparagraph (A) entitlement, or

"(II) 8 times the individual's average weekly benefit amount for the benefit year.

"(D) Except as provided in subparagraph (B)(i), for purposes of determining the amount of Federal supplemental compensation payable for weeks beginning after September 30, 1983, from an account described in subparagraph (B), no reduction in such account shall be made by reason of any Federal supplemental compensation paid to the individual for weeks beginning before October 1, 1983.

"(E)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), in determining the amount established in any Federal supplemental compensation account, the applicable limit used for purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be the applicable limit in effect in the State for the later of—

"(I) the first week for which compensation is payable from such account, or

"(II) the first week beginning after September 30, 1983.

"(ii) If the applicable limit in effect in any State for any period is higher than the applicable limit used by reason of clause (i), such higher limit shall be used for purposes of determining the amount of Federal supplemental compensation payable to the individual from the account for the week for which such higher limit takes effect and all weeks thereafter (unless another higher limit takes effect under this clause).

"(3)(A) For purposes of this subsection, the terms '16-week period', '14-week period', '12-week period', '10-week period', and '8-week period', mean, with respect to any State, the period which—

"(i) begins with the third week after the first week for which the applicable trigger is on, and

"(ii) ends with the second week after the first week for which the applicable trigger is off.

"(B)(i) In the case of a 16-week period, 14-week period, 12-week period, 10-week period, or 8-week period, as the case may be, the applicable trigger is on for any week if—

"(I) the rate of insured unemployment in the State for the period consisting of such week and the immediately preceding 12 weeks falls within the applicable insured unemployment range, or

"(II) the rate of total unemployment in the State for the most recent 3 calendar months for which data are available before the beginning of such week falls in the applicable total unemployment range.

"(ii) In the case of a 16-week period, 14-week period, 12-week period, 10-week period, or 8-week period, as the case may be, the applicable trigger is off for any week if both subclauses (I) and (II) of clause (i) are not satisfied.

"(iii) In the case of any 14-week period, 12-week period, 10-week period, or 8-week period, as the case may be, notwithstanding clauses (i) and (ii), the applicable trigger shall be off for any week if the applicable trigger for a period with a higher week designation is on for such week.

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph—

In the case of a:	The applicable insured unemployment range is:	The applicable total unemployment range is:
16-week period	A rate equal to or exceeding 8 percent.	A rate equal to or exceeding 12 percent.
14-week period	A rate equal to or exceeding 6 percent but less than 8 percent.	A rate equal to or exceeding 10 percent but less than 12 percent.
12-week period	A rate equal to or exceeding 5 percent but less than 6 percent.	A rate equal to or exceeding 9 percent but less than 10 percent.
10-week period	A rate equal to or exceeding 4 percent but less than 5 percent.	A rate equal to or exceeding 8 percent but less than 9 percent.
8-week period	A rate less than 4 percent.	A rate less than 8 percent.

"(D)(i) No 16-week period, 14-week period, 12-week period, 10-week period, or 8-week period, as the case may be, shall last for a period of less than 12 weeks unless the State enters a period with a higher applicable limit.

"(ii) The applicable limit in any State shall not be reduced by more than 2 during any 12-week period beginning with the week for which such a reduction would otherwise take effect.

"(E) For purposes of this subsection—

"(i) The rate of insured unemployment for any period shall be determined in the same manner as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970.

"(ii) The amount of an individual's average weekly benefit amount shall be determined in the same manner as determined for purposes of section 202(b)(1)(C) of such Act."

SEC. 103. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The amendments made by this title shall apply to weeks beginning after September 30, 1983.

(b) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—In the case of any eligible individual who exhausted his rights to Federal supplemental compensation (by reason of the payment of all of the amount in his Federal supplemental compensation account) before the first week beginning after September 30, 1983, such individual's eligibility for additional weeks of compensation by reason of the amendments made by this title shall not be limited or terminated by reason of any event, or failure to meet any requirement of law relating to eligibility for unemployment compensation, occurring after the date of such exhaustion of rights and before the beginning of the first week beginning after September 30, 1983 (and the period after such exhaustion and before the beginning of such first week shall not be counted for purposes of determining the expiration of the two years following the end of his benefit year for purposes of section 602(b) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982).

(c) MODIFICATION OF AGREEMENTS.—The Secretary of Labor shall, at the earliest practicable date, after the date of the enactment of this Act, propose to each State with which he has in effect an agreement under section 602 of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 a modification of such agreement designed to provide for the payment of Federal supplemental compensation under such Act in accordance with the amendments made by this title. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if any State fails or refuses within the three-week period beginning on the date the Secretary of Labor proposes such modification to such State, to enter into such modification of such agreement, the Secretary of Labor shall terminate such agreement effective with the end of the last week which ends on or before the close of such three-week period.

TITLE II—OTHER PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. PAYMENT TO SURVIVORS OF DECEASED EMPLOYEES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (b) of section 3306 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining wages) is amended by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (13), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (14) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and by inserting after paragraph (14) the following new paragraph:

"(15) any payment made by an employer to a survivor or the estate of a former employee after the calendar year in which such employee died."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to remuneration paid after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 202. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL LABOR.

Subparagraph (B) of section 3306(c)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to agricultural labor) is amended by striking out "January 1, 1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1986".

SEC. 203. REPORT BY SECRETARY OF LABOR.

Not later than April 1, 1984, the Secretary of Labor shall submit a report to the Congress on—

(1) the feasibility of using area triggers in unemployment compensation programs, and

(2) the feasibility of determining whether individuals filing claims for unemployment compensation are structurally unemployed.

SEC. 204. EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR WHICH THE PROVISIONS CONTINUING PAYMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY BENEFITS DURING APPEAL ARE APPLICABLE.

Section 223(g)(3)(B) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "October 1, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "November 16, 1983".

□ 1140

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I designate the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) to offer an amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FORD OF TENNESSEE

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Tennessee: At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. 205. INCREASE IN TITLE XX SOCIAL SERVICES FUNDS.

Section 2003 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by adding "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (2) of subsection (c);

(2) by striking out paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) $2,800,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984 or any succeeding fiscal year."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In order for any State to receive an allotment for the fiscal year 1984 or 1985 in excess of the allotment to which it would be entitled if the amount specified in subsection (c) for that fiscal year were reduced by $200,000,000, the Governor of such State shall submit to the Secretary and make available to the public (prior to January 1, 1984, in the case of the fiscal year 1984, and no less than 3 months prior to October 1, 1984, in the case of the fiscal year 1985) a report certifying that at least one-half of any additional funds received from the State's allotment for the fiscal year involved (over and above the funds to which the State would be entitled if the amount specified in subsection (c) for such year were reduced by $200,000,000)—

"(1) will be used for social services directly related to the impact of unemployment on individuals and families in the State, and

"(2) will be allocated among the various areas and localities in the State in amounts which bear a direct relationship to the respective levels of unemployment in those areas and localities.

Such report shall set forth the manner in which such additional funds will be used within the State for social services needs related to unemployment, and shall include a description of and justification for the criteria to be used in making the allocations referred to in paragraph (2) of the preceding sentence.".

Mr. FORD of Tennessee (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would ask, is the subcommittee chairman going to describe the amendment?

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct; yes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) will be recognized for 15 minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL) will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is the title XX amendment that is before the House.

For this fiscal year, which ends tomorrow, $225 million in additional title XX social service funds has been available to States. These funds were added by the jobs bill which this Congress acted on earlier this year. They must be used for State programs that address problems directly related to unemployment. This includes job training, job placement activities, day care for working single parents and other unemployment related programs.

A survey of the States shows that they have made good use of these temporary funds and that they have been indispensable in the efforts of States and counties to deal with the serious problems caused by the high levels of unemployment we have experienced.

The title XX social service amendment that is before the House would make these funds permanently available to the States.

For fiscal year 1985 the amendment would increase title XX funds from $2.675 billion to $2.8 billion. The cap on Federal title XX funds will then remain at $2.8 billion on a permanent basis.

For fiscal years 1985 and 1986 States must use at least $100 million of the additional title XX funds for job and unemployment related programs. They must target these funds to areas within each State with the highest levels of unemployment.

This targeting will provide badly needed assistance to the pockets of extremely high unemployment that exist in almost all States, even those with relatively low unemployment. States will use these funds for job placement, job training, and other employment related services in these high unemployment counties and other areas within the States.

States can also use these funds to increase child abuse and other child welfare programs that increase dramatically whenever unemployment increases.

The additional title XX social service funds contained in this amendment, which are partially targeted to high unemployment substate areas and must be used for unemployment related programs, are an essential part of the unemployment compensation bill that is before the House today.

It will also allow States and counties to address issues and help unemployed workers that will not be helped by additional weeks of unemployment benefits which are in this bill which we have before us today.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment that is before the House and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment because it will increase the title XX appropriations for keeping it at a permanent level.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) has consumed 4 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL).

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE).

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this committee amendment. It is a proposal which in serious consideration has to be deemed primarily political. Certainly it is casual in a fiscal sense.

I would like to review the history of title XX somewhat for the Members so that we can recall what that is all about.

Title XX has to do with social services. Social services generally, unlike cash welfare, which is usually on a matching grant basis of 50–50, are at the level of 75–25 Federal funds.

Starting in the early 1970's we discovered that many States, notably California and New York, were converting their cash welfare into social services in order to take advantage of 75-percent money instead of 50-percent money they had if they gave cash welfare instead.

One of the difficulties was that we did not have clear definition of social services. Social services could be defined in a wide range of definitions to include a great many things, and it was assumed that when we put a cap on the use of social services in title XX that we would define what social services were acceptable and what were not at some point in the future, then remove the cap.

The problem was that there was such a wide range of practice that we have never been able really to define social services in any limiting way. The result is that for years we have left a cap on the total amount of social services. Without the cap, social services would be a pure entitlement.

Then this is the classic entitlement with a cap and it has been used for some time. The cap was reduced in the Gramm-Latta reconciliation proposals and now we are seeing it expanded, somewhat casually, in a bill unrelated to social services, although some effort is made to tie those social services that are somehow related to unemployment to the FSC extension bill on the theory that those can be specifically defined also.

They have not been. In fact, you can make a pretty good case for a higher title XX cap than we already have, but to do it in this way, through a committee amendment, without more careful thought, is I think fiscally irresponsible.

My impression is that the money in title XX will be divided as the rest of the title XX money is but that it will be very difficult to police the targeting, so-called, of this 3-year $600 million misuse of special social services money as an extension of title XX to those social services which are specifically job related.

I would much prefer to see a much more careful handling of the cap on title XX than we are doing in this manner. It seems to me there may be other social services that have a greater claim on expansion than the ones which are included in this particular measure. Maybe it will go for day care, maybe something else.

I would prefer, therefore, to see the House vote down the committee amendment and to instead have that kind of careful review of title XX that will insure that we have the appropriate balance between cash welfare and social services as far as our Federal contributions are concerned.

□ 1150

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

There are several things that concern me. One, not only are we adding in a couple of hundred million dollars more when we profess to being concerned with budget deficits. Later on, according to published reports in national magazines, there will be an organized effort to take to this floor, by Members of the other party, in order to lambaste the Reagan administration for deficits; yet we keep getting this spending which increases deficits. After all, the President cannot spend what we do not appropriate. This is of great concern to me. We are misleading the people.

I am also very concerned that title XX allows States discretion. They have discretion in how they handle a program. The title XX program is operated with a designated State agency and a designated State agency operates and sets up a program which generally is then implemented through other State agencies or substate agencies on the basis of an overall program or goal. I do not know about other States but to target, in my State, this money would be an extremely difficult matter because the mechanism is not there.

Why is it not there? Because the substate reporting figures are not there in a lot of States in the country.

Now, we need to get into substate reporting as both the gentleman from Minnesota and others have said, on FSC and other items.

We have not done it. We are going to throw out some money to the States when they do not even have, in many instances, substate reporting that is in place, that will allow them to target, and we are going to tell them that we are doing something when in fact we may be throwing money away again.

Therefore, I oppose the program.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of the 2 minutes which I had yielded to myself.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposed to add $200 million to the social services spending in title XX. That spending has already been described as child welfare services, day care services, and so forth.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I am told the amendment calls for $225 million, not $200 million, as we originally thought.

It is $200 million? I thank the staff for that clarification because it was spoken of as $225 million by the subcommittee chairman originally, and I thought the amendment had been changed.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. The $200 million would be expended in so-called social services functions.

Most Members are aware that the largest single service within the title XX realm of services is day care.

Now day care is a service that is more normally associated with employment than with unemployment. In fact, other than anecdotal evidence, I am not sure that any of the services offered under title XX are normally and naturally more associated with high unemployment.

A few moments ago on this floor I stood very strongly in favor of a substate regional trigger for unemployment compensation benefits. This amendment has been described as trying to put that principle into effect.

In my judgment it does so in a very clumsy manner, which nearly always occurs when a subcommittee or committee takes no time to discuss the matter, nor to figure out what it is doing.

What the committee did was simply throw in $200 million for luck or perhaps to accommodate a sector or a Member someplace.

We did not have any hearings on this. We do not know how the States are prepared to assign this money to high unemployment areas. We do not know if they have the ability or the information to do so.

What we do know, however, is that this is $200 million of unbudgeted money, which is proposed and going to be supported by the group that is complaining that the President is responsible for all of our deficits.

Here we have a bill that, in unemployment compensation, is almost $2.5 billion over deficit, and now we are adding some more to make it more than $2.5 billion; $2.7 billion over the budget.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I would yield to the gentleman from New York if he seeks recognition first, and then I will yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CONABLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think further clarification is necessary about the exact amount of this amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for the latest news bulletin on the amendment.

Mr. CONABLE. I now have before me the comparison of Federal title XX spending levels, prior law, present law and proposed law.

I do not think it is necessary to look at the prior law. But for fiscal year 1984, the present law would put $2.5 billion in title XX, and $2.6 billion for fiscal year 1985, and $2.7 billion for fiscal year 1986.

What this amendment would do is fix the ceiling at $2.8 billion for fiscal year 1984 or $300 million more than the current level. Then for 1985, they would leave it at $2.8 billion which would then be $200 million more than the current law provides as the level for the fiscal year 1985 and would leave it at $2.8 billion thereafter, which means in fiscal year 1986 and thereafter it would raise the cap by $100 million.

So it is not a flat rate, but a declining rate relative to present law; and for this year $300 million above any previously suggested budget figure.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman. I must say I am shocked to think that the amendment is 50 percent higher than I thought it was. And what I thought it was was outrageous to begin with.

I will yield to my friend from Tennessee in just a moment, if I may complete.

These social services have been administered by the States without restriction, other than the services that fall within that general category.

Now we are instructing them as to how to do it. I think one of the secrets of the success of social services programs is that the States have been able to do their thing and to treat the problems they thought were important in their own areas.

The amendment is premature. It beats the budget and generally is bad policy.

Now I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for yielding, but I would like to get my own time.

I believe the time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to yield additional time to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) so that he may yield to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. I would be happy to use my own time now.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to try to respond to my colleagues who serve on the Committee on Ways and Means, and Mr. FRENZEL who serves on the subcommittee which marked up this bill.

Mr. FRENZEL talked about the cost factors involved and I would like to say to my colleagues that the budget resolution, itself, carried the dollar amount we are speaking about today for the increase in the title XX social services.

We also, on the subcommittee level, heard witnesses who testified before the committee.

We reported this legislation out of the subcommittee to the full committee.

The full committee acted on this legislation and sent this legislation to the House floor.

We had hearings on this matter, Mr. FRENZEL. To go back to prior law, I must state that the 1983-84 recommendations in this amendment certainly would be less than what prior law would have been in 1980.

We go back and look at 1983, we see present law at $2.67 billion. We are only asking for an increase in fiscal 1984 of $125 million, making it permanent for $2.8 billion.

Under prior law in fiscal year 1984 it would have been $3.391 billion.

Mr. Chairman, that fiscal year 1985 would have been $3.391 billion and under present law it would be $2.6 billion and under the amendment which is offered by the committee here, it would bring it to the level of $2.8 billion.

We are talking about $125 million over present law for fiscal 1984. We are talking about $200 million in fiscal year 1985 and $100 million in fiscal year 1986.

I urge my colleagues to adopt the amendment that is before the House today. And even after the adoption of this amendment we will still be below the 1980 fiscal year under the title XX social services.

I urge my colleagues to adopt the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT) having assumed the chair, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3929) to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 319, he reported the bill back to the House with and amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR CAMPBELL

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In its present form, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL moves to recommit the bill H.R. 3929 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report back forthwith the following amendments:

Strike title I and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE I—EXTENSION OF THE FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL COMPENSATION PROGRAM

SEC. 102. (a) Section 602(f)(2) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 is amended to read as follows:

"(2) No Federal supplemental compensation shall be payable to any individual under an agreement entered into under this subtitle for any week beginning after March 31, 1985."

(b) Section 605(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "October 1, 1983 (except as otherwise provided in section 602(f)(2))" and inserting in lieu thereof "April 1, 1985".

NUMBER OF WEEKS OF BENEFITS

SEC. 103. (a) Section 602(e) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 is amended by striking out paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the amount established in such account shall be equal to the lesser of—

"(i) 50 percent of the total amount of regular compensation (including dependents' allowances) payable to the individual with respect to the benefit year (as determined under the State law) on the basis of which he most recently received regular compensation, or

"(ii) the applicable limit determined under the following table times his average weekly benefit amount for his benefit year:

"In the case of weeks during a:	The applicable limit is:
5-percent period	12
4-percent period	10
3-percent period	8
Low-unemployment period	6

"(B) If the applicable limit in effect for a State for the week beginning September 25, 1983, was 14 (as determined under the provisions of subparagraph (A) as in effect prior to the amendments made by the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983), the applicable limit for such State shall remain at 14 for any consecutive week thereafter for which such limit would have remained at 14 under such prior provision. Paragraph (3)(D) shall not apply in the case of an applicable limit determined under this subparagraph.

"(C) The total amount established in any account of an individual who received Federal supplemental compensation for any week beginning prior to October 1, 1983, shall not be less than the amount of compensation to which such individual would have been entitled under the provisions of this subtitle as in effect prior to the amendments made by the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983, including the termination date and reduced compensation amount contained in subsection (f)(2) as then in effect.

"(3)(A) For purposes of this subsection, the terms '5-percent period', '4-percent period', '3-percent period', and 'low-unemployment period' means, with respect to any State, the period which—

"(i) begins with the 3d week after the 1st week in which the rate of insured unemployment in the State for the period consisting of such week and the immediately preceding 12 weeks falls in the applicable range, and

"(ii) ends with the 3d week after the 1st week in which the rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the immediately preceding 12 weeks does not fall within the applicable range.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the applicable range is as follows:

"In the case of a:	The applicable range is:
5-percent period	A rate equal to or exceeding 5 percent.
4-percent period	A rate equal to or exceeding 4 percent, but less than 5 percent.
3-percent period	A rate equal to or exceeding 3 percent, but less than 4 percent.
Low-unemployment period.	A rate less than 3 percent.

"(C) A State shall qualify for a 5-percent period without regard to paragraph (2) and subparagraphs (A), (B), and (D) of this paragraph, for weeks beginning in a calendar quarter if the rate of insured unemployment in the State equals or exceeds 5.5 percent for the period consisting of all weeks which begin—

"(i) on or after January 1, 1982, and

"(ii) in or before the second preceding calendar quarter.

"(D) No 5-percent period, 4-percent period, 3-percent period, or low-unemployment period, as the case may be, which is in effect for the week beginning on October 2, 1983, or any week thereafter, shall last for a period of less than 13 weeks (but subject to the termination provision under subsection (f)(2)).

"(E) for purposes of this subsection—

"(i) the rate of insured unemployment for any period shall be determined in the same manner as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970; and

"(ii) the amount of an individual's average weekly benefit amount shall be determined in the same manner as determined for purposes of section 202(b)(1)(C) of such Act.".

(b) Section 602(d) of such Act is amended by striking out "or (D)(ii)".

EFFECTIVE DATE OF FSC PROVISIONS

SEC. 104. (a) the amendments made by sections 2 and 3 shall apply to weeks beginning after September 30, 1983.

(b) The Secretary of Labor shall, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, propose to each State with which he has in effect an agreement under section 602 of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 a modification of such agreement designed to provide for the payment of Federal supplemental compensation under such Act in accordance with the amendments made by sections 2 and 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if any State fails or refuses, within the 3—week period beginning on the date the Secretary of Labor proposed such a modification to such State, to enter into such a modification of such agreement, the Secretary of Labor shall terminate such agreement effective with the end of the last week which ends on or before the first day of such 3—week period.

Mr. CAMPBELL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the motion to recommit carries an FSC extension for 18 months. This motion to recommit recognizes that a 45-day extension would create disruption in the State services. States would have to modify what they already have, and then 45 days later be faced with another modification if we do not pass the motion to recommit or otherwise modify this legislation.

How can we realistically tell people out there that there may not be a disruption of their checks in the process? I think that we are fooling ourselves. This motion to recommit recognizes that there are special problems in many States and we have taken into consideration those special problems. Under my motion to recommit the States with the high unemployment rates would receive the maximum benefits, regardless of what their insured unemployment rates were. So there is no reduction when there is a total unemployment rate that is high and an insured unemployment rate that is low.

I believe that there is another overriding factor and that is the cost. I realize that there will be those from the other side of the aisle going to the floor in the next few days with an organized effort to place blame for deficits in this country. They are going to talk about the Reagan deficits. It is a great strategy, but how in the world do you get deficits if it is not by spending. And when we come in here with a bill that is going to cost, according to the Department of Labor, some $6 billion over the next 18 months, then I think that those who would take the floor and complain about defects are certainly speaking with forked tongue.

I would also say that we must be very, very concerned with the fact that we are opening Pandora's box with a 45-day extension. A 45-day extension does provide the vehicle for a tax bill. Do not fool yourself. It is an engine to help pull it. It pulled the TEFRA bill, it pulled the gasoline tax, and it can be utilized here.

I do not think it is fair to play with the people who are unemployed so we can get another bill through, a tax bill that many of us may be concerned with or opposed to.

And I should point out that the difference in the cost between this bill and my motion to recommit is the difference of about $2.2 billion over the 18-month period. That is a substantial amount of money. And that is what we are really voting on. Do we want to go out and extend and spend another $2 billion or more that we do not have, add on to the deficit, and continue down the road, while we give voice to concern over deficits and interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL).

Mr. Speaker, the program expires tomorrow at midnight. Any delay in the passage of this bill would delay the benefits to those who have exhausted their benefits, as well as those who are now recipients of the Federal supplemental program and those who have exhausted their State benefits.

There are complex issues that need to be resolved over the structure of this program. We do not have the time to resolve these issues before the program expires. This bill gives us time to address these issues. We do not and should not rush to resolve the matter today.

I urge my colleagues here in the House to oppose this motion offered by the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL) and defeat it. And let us bring up the bill that is before the full House today and pass it at final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule XV, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the question of passage of the bill.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 141, nays 278, not voting 14, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

RADIO BROADCASTING TO CUBA ACT

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 312, I call up the Senate bill (S. 602) to provide for the broadcasting of accurate information to the people of Cuba, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 602

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Represenatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act".

FINDINGS; PURPOSES

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares—

(1) that it is the policy of the United States to support the right of the people of Cuba to seek, receive, and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, in accordance with article 19 of Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

(2) that, consonant with this policy, radio broadcasting to Cuba may be effective in furthering the open communication of accurate information and ideas to the people of Cuba, in particular information about Cuba;

(3) that such broadcasting to Cuba, operated in a manner not inconsistent with the broad policy of the United States and in accordance with high professional standards, would be in the national interest; and

(4) that the Voice of America already broadcasts to Cuba information that represents America, not any single segment of American society, and includes a balanced and comprehensive projection of significant American thought and institutions but that there is a need for broadcasts to Cuba which provides news, commentary and other information about events in Cuba and elsewhere to promote the cause of freedom in Cuba.

ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY

SEC. 3. (a) In order to carry out the objectives set forth in section 2, the United States Information Agency (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Agency") shall provide for the open communication of information and ideas through the use of radio broadcasting to Cuba. Radio broadcasting to Cuba shall serve as a consistently reliable and authoritative source of accurate, objective, and comprehensive news.

(b) Radio broadcasting in accordance with subsection (a) shall be part of the Voice of America radio broadcasting to Cuba and shall be in accordance with all Voice of America standards to ensure the broadcast of programs which are objective, accurate, balanced, and which present a variety of views.

(c) Radio broadcasting to Cuba authorized by this Act shall utilize the broadcasting facilities located at Marathon, Florida, and the 1180 AM frequency that were used by the Voice of America prior to the date of enactment of this Act. Other frequencies, not on the commercial Amplitude Modulation (AM) Band (535 kHz to 1605 kHz), may also be simultaneously utilized: Provided, That no frequency shall be used for radio broadcasts to Cuba in accordance with this Act which is not also used for all other Voice of America broadcasts to Cuba. Time leased from nongovernmental shortwave radio stations may be used to carry all or part of the Service programs and to rebroadcast Service programs: Provided, That not less than 30 per centum of the programs broadcast or rebroadcast shall be regular Voice of America broadcasts with particular emphasis on news and programs meeting the requirements of section 503(2) of Public Law 80-402.

(d) Notwithstanding subsection (c), in the event that broadcasts to Cuba on the 1180 AM frequency are subject to jamming or interference greater by 25 per centum or more than the average daily jamming or interference in the twelve months preceding September 1, 1983, the Director of the United States Information Agency may lease time on commercial or noncommerical educational AM band radio broadcasting stations. The Federal Communications Commission shall determine levels of jamming and interference by conducting regular monitoring of the 1180 AM frequency. In the event that more than two hours a day of time is leased, not less than 30 per centum of the programming broadcast shall be regular Voice of America broadcast with particular emphasis on news and programs meeting the requirements of section 503(2) of Public Law 80-402.

(e) Any person of United States Government radio broadcasts to Cuba authorized by this section shall be designated "Voice of America; Cuba Service" or "Voice of America: Radio Marti program".

(f) In the event broadcasting facilities located at Marathon, Florida, are rendered inoperable by natural disaster or by unlawful destruction, the Director of the United States Information Agency may, for the period in which the facilities are inoperable but not to exceed one hundred and fifty days, use other United States Government-owned transmission facilities for Voice of America broadcasts to Cuba authorized by this Act.

CUBA SERVICE OF THE VOICE OF AMERICA

SEC. 4. The Director of the United States Information Agency shall establish within the Voice of America a Cuba Service (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Service"). The Service shall be responsible for all radio broadcasts to Cuba authorized by section 3. The Director of the United States Information Agency shall appoint a head of the Service and shall employ such staff as the head of the Service may need to carry out his duties. The Cuba Service shall be administered separately from other Voice of America functions and the head of the Cuba Service shall report directly to the Director and the Associate Director for Broadcasting of the United States Information Agency.

BOARD FOR RADIO BROADCASTING TO CUBA

SEC. 5. (a) There is established within the Office of the President the Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Board"). The Board shall consist of nine members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom not more than five shall be members of the same political party. The President shall designate one member of the Board to serve as Chairman.

(b) The Board shall review the effectiveness of the activities carried out under this Act and shall make such recommendations to the President, the Director and the Associate Director for Broadcasting of the United States Informaiton Agency as it may deem necessary.

(c) In appointing the initial voting members of the Board, the President shall designate three members to serve for a term of three years, three members to serve for a term of two years, and three members to serve for a term of one year. Thereafter, the term of each member of the Board shall be three years. The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, members to fill vacancies occurring prior to the expiration of a term, in which case the members so appointed shall serve for the remainder of such term. Any member whose term has expired may serve until his successor has been appointed and qualified.

(d) The head of the Service shall serve, ex officio, as a member of the Board.

(e) Members of the Board appointed by the President shall, while attending meetings of the Board or while engaged in duties relating to such meetings or in other activities of the Board pursuant to this section, including traveltime, be entitled to receive compensation equal to the daily equivalent of the compensation prescribed for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code. While away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5703) for persons in the Government service employed intermittently. The ex officio member of the Board shall not be entitled to any compensation under this section, but may be allowed travel expenses as provided in the preceding sentence.

(f) The Board may, to the extent it deems necessary to carry out its functions under this section, procure supplies, services, and other personal property, including specialized electronic equipment.

(g) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Board shall remain in effect indefinitely.

(h) There are authorized to be appropriated $130,000 to carry out the provisions of this section.

ASSISTANCE FROM OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

SEC. 6. (a) In order to assist the United States Information Agency in carrying out the purposes set forth in section 2, any agency or instrumentality of the United States may sell, loan, lease, or grant property (including interests therein) and may perform administrative and technical support and services at the request of the Agency. Support and services shall be provided on a reimbursable basis. Any reimbursement shall be credited to the appropriation from which the property, support, or services was derived.

(b) The Agency may carry out the purposes of section 3 by means of grants, leases, or contracts (subject to the availability of appropriations), or such other means as the Agency determines will be most effective.

FACILITY COMPENSATION

SEC. 7. (a) It is the intent of the Congress that the Secretary of State should seek prompt and full settlement of United States claims against the Government of Cuba arising from Cuban interference with broadcasting in the United States. Pending the settlement of these claims, it is appropriate to provide some interim assistance to the United States broadcasters who are adversely affected by Cuban radio interference and who seek to assert their right to measures to counteract the effects of such interference.

(b) Accordingly, the Agency shall make payments to the United States radio broadcasting station licensees upon their application for expenses which they have incurred before, on, or after the date of this Act in mitigating, pursuant to special temporary authority from the Federal Communications Commission, the effects of activities by the Government of Cuba which directly interfere with the transmission or reception of broadcasts by these licensees. Such expenses shall be limited to the costs of equipment (replaced less depreciation) and associated technical and engineering costs.

(c) The Federal Communications Commission shall issue such regulations and establish such procedures for carrying out this section as the Federal Communications Commission finds appropriate. Such regulation shall be issued no later than one hundred and eighty days after enactment of this Act.

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Agency, $5,000,000 for use in compensating United States radio broadcasting licensees pursuant to this section. Amounts appropriated under this section are authorized to be available until expended.

(e) Funds appropriated for implementation of this section shall be available for a period of no more than four years following the initial broadcast occurring as a result of programs described in this Act.

(f) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should establish a task force to analyze the level of interference from the operation of Cuban radio stations experienced by broadcasters in the United States and to seek a practical political and technical solution to this problem.

(g) This section shall enter into effect on October 1, 1984.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 8. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for the United States Information Agency $14,000,000 for fiscal year 1984 and $11,000,000 for fiscal year 1985 to carry out sections 3 and 4 of this Act. The amount obligated by the United States Information Agency in ensuing fiscal years shall be sufficient to maintain broadcasts to Cuba under this Act at rates no less than the fiscal year 1985 level.

(b) In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated to the Agency for the fiscal years 1984 and 1985, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Agency $54,800,000 for the fiscal year 1984 and $54,800,000 for the fiscal year 1985, which amounts shall be available only for expenses incurred by essential modernization of the facilities and operations of the Voice of America.

(c) Amounts appropriated under this section are authorized to be made available until expended.

INDEPENDENT EVALUATION OF THE CUBA SERVICE

SEC. 9. The United States Information Agency shall arrange, by contract if necessary, and independent evaluation of Cuba Service programing, the results of which are to be set forth in a report to be prepared and transmitted to the Agency eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act and at intervals of one year thereafter for the following three years. The Agency shall, not later than thirty days after the date of receipt of such report, transmit to the Congress such report, together with any recommendations for legislative action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 312, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL).

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 602, to authorize radio broadcasting to Cuba.

This bill, which passed the Senate on September 13 by a voice vote, represents a significant compromise among U.S. domestic broadcasters, the National Association of Broadcasters, the administration, and concerned Members of Congress on a formula for radio broadcasting to Cuba. This compromise will enable the United States to provide accurate and objective news and information to the people of Cuba through a new broadcasting service to be known as Radio Marti while protecting U.S. broadcasters from possible Cuban radio interference.

Mr. Speaker, briefly, this bill provides that Radio Marti will operate within the U.S. Information Agency as a separate broadcasting service subject to guidance from the USIA Director and from the Associate Director for Broadcasting. So in that sense it is entirely different from the bill that this body considered last year.

It will share with the Voice of America those frequencies used by VOA for its own broadcasts to Cuba and may, in the event of Cuban jamming, lease time on commercial or noncommercial educational radio broadcasting stations.

So in that sense it is quite different from the bill originally considered in this House. It will not only be under VOA but will be using its facilities and its frequencies, which was one of the contentious aspects that had been raised in the House. That provision has been agreed to in the other body and is being brought back in this bill.

The bill also provides for a nine-member advisory board to oversee Radio Marti activities in much the same manner as the Board for International Broadcasting has in the past exercised oversight with respect to Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty.

The bill authorizes $5 million for compensation to domestic broadcasters who might be injured as a result of Cuban interference and the bill authorizes the money for 1984-85 to carry out the purposes of the bill.

This issue has been before the House, as I said, Mr. speaker, for a couple years now. I am pleased that we have finally reached a compromise which is acceptable to most of the concerned parties; I do not say all, because some people are opposed to any increase in the broadcasting activity of the United states in any way; but as many Members know, I have advocated for many years as chairman of the International Operations Subcommittee, which has authorization jurisdiction over the budgets of the USIA, the State Department, and the Board for International Broadcasting, an increase in the international radio broadcasting that is done by the U.S. Government.

We have generally had support from our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee, including the gentleman from Iowa and other members of the Appropriations Committee in the House, in trying to do that.

We have made some progress, I might say, Mr. Speaker, in modernization of the VOA equipment that we use, but I must say that we still have a problem in that some of the equipment that we use for this very important broadcasting service is 30 years old. We still are repairing it in-house. We really have not made as a nation the kind of commitment that I think the majority of the members of our committee feel is essential if the United States is going to do a first-rate job in this business of carrying information to people around the world, particularly those people who do not have free access to the news of the day.

This is a very important part of the programs of diplomacy for the U.S. Government. I would hope as we consider these matters, not just this bill, but the whole question of the foreign policy budgets, that we will keep this in mind and engage in a long-range program which has now been recommended by two administrations to increase the capability of the people of the United States to get their message across to other peoples of the world as to who we are, what we are, why we think we are good people, why we think we have a system that works best for us, why we think we have more liberties, and what the truth is with respect to what is going on, not only in our country, but in their countries.

Now, in this competition for knowledge and information, we must remember that many countries of the world outspend us tremendously and devote a great amount of air time to getting their message across. We for some reason have been reluctant to match that air time. I have not understood that.

I know we are under budget constraints that are very, very serious; but I cannot think of anything that is more important than trying to get the message of the American people across to other people. If we decide here in this body that we cannot go around fighting everybody in the world and that arms are no solution to our differences of opinion, then for goodness sake, the least we can do is talk to other nations. I have never understood the reluctance of people to want to talk to other people where there is a difference of opinion and where it might help resolve the misunderstandings that exist, so that it will be unnecessary to have to resort to the forces of arms.

This bill just makes one small addition to the capability of the U.S. Government to broadcast in an area where we need to broadcast in the Western Hemisphere and where the United States is outbroadcast by almost every broadcasting service, starting with the Soviet Union right on down to some of the other countries, not only in Western Europe, but in other places where they devote more time and attention, money, and hours on the air, to get their message across to those people. Furthermore, many of these countries are broadcasting right in our hemisphere, where we have vital security interests and both economic and political reasons to be talking to our neighbors. This bill makes some small progress toward that goal.

I would hope my colleagues would now understand that with this compromise we have gone a long way toward dealing with the concerns that were expressed by the National Association of Broadcasters, and by some of my colleagues who were here in the Congress expressing their justifiable concerns about their own radio stations, as well as some of the other concerns that were expressed in the debate when the bill was originally before this body.

So this compromise deals with those concerns, Mr. Speaker, I think in a fair way. It is not my preference particularly, but that is the very nature of compromise. I think it is the best that we can do. I think it is essential that we go forward with this slight increase in our broadcasting capability and that we understand that we do have a problem of interference in this hemisphere and that we have worked very hard in trying to deal with the problem of radio interference.

Let us face it, if we do not try to negotiate and reach an agreement on the use of the airwaves, we will have chaos. That is the reason we have the International Telecommunication Union and regular World Administrative Radio Conferences. That is the reason we have regional groupings within that organization so that nations can come together in a peaceful manner and try to adjust their differences with respect to the allocation of the airwaves.

Right now the Government of Cuba is not a signatory to the hemispheric AM broadcasting agreement. They should be. They should not be a renegade forever. We need to keep working on that problem so that we can get the adjustment necessary, so that our domestic broadcasters do not have to continue to carry the brunt of this problem, which they have carried now for 15 years.

I am hopeful that the negotiations which are ongoing right now will be fruitful and that the Government of Cuba will agree to the allocations that are presented when the next regional conference meets. This is a problem that commands the attention of our Government and all of us who have dealt with this problem have urged this administration to lend its full weight and support to reaching some accommodation on the question of the allocation of the airwaves.

Mr. Speaker, in the interests of increased comprehension of this bill, I include a section-by-section analysis.

I urge my colleagues to support S. 602.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 602

SECTION 2—FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

Section 2 sets forth a series of Congressional findings relating to the need for radio broadcasting to Cuba. Many of these findings reflect, and are derived from, the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973. Section 2(1) restates long-standing U.S. policy concerning freedom of information, which is reflected in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of which the United States is a signatory.

Section 2(2) states that radio broadcasting to Cuba is consistent with this policy, and also furthers the policy by enhancing the open communication of ideas and accurate information, particularly about Cuba, to the people of Cuba.

Section 2(3) states that it is in the U.S. national interest to broadcast to Cuba in a manner not inconsistent with the broad foreign policy of the United States and in accordance with high professional standards.

Section 2(4) recognizes the unique character of the Voice of America as the national broadcaster of the United States, whose mission is worldwide and whose primary purposes are to present world news and to express and explain U.S. official policy and American society and institutions. The subsection also recognizes that VOA now broadcasts to Cuba, but that there is a need for a surrogate radio service to provide Cubans with news, information and commentary about events in Cuba, which the Voice of America is not authorized or structured to undertake.

SECTION 3—ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY

Section 3 sets forth the structural requirements for the operations of the new radio broadcasting service.

Section 3(a) authorizes the U.S. Information Agency to provide for radio broadcasting to Cuba. The subsection requires that radio broadcasting to Cuba shall serve as a consistently reliable and authoritative source of accurate, objective and comprehensive news about Cuba. These standards reflect those under which the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, and Radio Liberty now operate.

Section 3(b) states that the new Cuban radio service will be part of Voice of America radio broadcasting to Cuba and will reflect VOA standards. This means, among other things, that section 501 of the U.S. Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 (P.L. 80-402) prohibiting domestic dissemination of USIA products, is also applicable to this new radio service, in the same manner as it is applicable to VOA.

Section 3(c) states that the new radio service will use the 1180 AM frequency now used by the VOA and will share with the Voice of America any other frequencies which VOA uses for its broadcasts to Cuba. In practice, this authorizes the new radio service to use only the 1180 AM frequency, since VOA does not now use other AM or shortwave frequencies to broadcast to Cuba. However, In the future, if the VOA uses a shortwave frequency to broadcast to Cuba, the new radio service will also be permitted to do so.

In addition, the subsection permits the leasing of time from nongovernmental shortwave radio stations for the new Cuban service broadcasts, provided that not less than thirty percent of the programs are regular VOA broadcasts which meet the requirements of section 503(2) of Public Law 80-402, the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948. That section sets forth the mission of the VOA to represent the United States. The full section reads as follows:

VOICE OF AMERICA BROADCASTS

SEC. 503. The long-range interests of the United States are served by communicating directly with the peoples of the world by radio. To be effective, the Voice of America (the Broadcasting Service of the United States Information Agency) must win the attention and respect of listeners. These principles will therefore govern Voice of America (VOA) broadcasts:

(1) VOA will serve as a consistently reliable and authoritative source of news. VOA news will be accurate, objective and comprehensive.

(2) VOA will represent America, not any single segment of American Society, and will therefore present a balanced and comprehensive projection of significant American thought and institutions.

(3) VOA will present the policies of the United States clearly and effectively, and will also present responsible discussions and opinion on these policies.

Section 3(d) provides for the leasing of time on commercial or non-commercial educational AM radio broadcasting stations in the event that broadcasts to Cuba on the 1180 AM frequency are subject to jamming or interference greater by 25% or more than the average daily jamming or interference in the twelve months preceding September 1, 1983. The Federal Communication Commission is directed to monitor the levels of interference on the 1180 AM frequency. This subsection also requires that, in the event that more than two hours a day of time is leased, not less than 30% of the programming shall be regular VOA broadcasts reflecting VOA's mission under Public Law 80-402, cited above.

Section 3(e) requires that the programs of the new Cuban radio service be designated "Voice of America: Cuba Service" or "Voice of America: Radio Marti Program."

Section 3(f) provides for the use of other U.S. government-owned transmitter facilities for Radio Marti broadcasts in the event that the broadcasting facilities at Marathon, Florida, are rendered inoperable by natural disaster or by unlawful destruction. This includes, for example, causes beyond the control, or not in the fault of, the U.S. Information Agency, its officers, employees or agents. Such use is permitted for a period not exceeding 150 days.

SECTION 4—CUBA SERVICE OF THE VOICE OF AMERICA

Section 4 authorizes the establishment of a Cuba Service within the Voice of America, which is to be responsible for all broadcasts to Cuba authorized by section 3. The Director of the U.S. Information Agency is directed to appoint a director of the Service and such staff as may be necessary. The Cuba Service shall be administered separately from Voice of America operations and the director is required to report both to the USIA Director and to the Associate Director for Broadcasting (who is also the Director of the Voice of America). It is expected that the Cuba Service, or Radio Marti as it is also called, will have a separate budget and will otherwise operate separately from the VOA so as to assure the integrity of both radios and to facilitate oversight by the Advisory Board established under section 5, below, and by the already-constituted U.S. Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy.

SECTION 5—BOARD FOR RADIO BROADCASTING TO CUBA

Section 5(a) establishes within the Office of the President the Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba. The Board would consist of nine members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom no more than five shall be members of the same political party. The President is directed to designate the Chairman of the Board.

Section 5(b) sets forth the mission of the Board, which is to review the effectiveness of the activities carried out under this legislation. The Board is directed to make such recommendations to the President, the Director of the USIA, and the USIA's Associate Director for Broadcasting as the Board deems necessary.

Section 5(c) provides for staggered terms for the initial members of the Board. The President is authorized to designate three members to serve for three-year terms, three members to serve for two-year terms, and three members to serve for one-year terms. Thereafter, the term of each member would be three years. The President is also authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, members to fill vacancies occurring prior to the expiration of a term. Members so appointed are authorized to serve until a successor has been appointed and has qualified.

Section 5(d) provides that the director of the Cuba Service shall serve as an ex-officio member of the Board.

Section 5(e) provides for compensation to be paid to Board members while on official business. Such compensation is equal to the daily equivalence of the compensation prescribed for level V of the Executive Schedule. Travel expenses are permitted as authorized under 5 USC 5703 for persons employed intermittently in Government service. The ex-officio member of the Board is permitted travel expenses, but no other compensation under this section, since he or she would be a regular U.S. government employee.

Section 5(f) authorizes the Board to procure supplies, services and other equipment as necessary to its functions. It is expected that, to the extent practicable, such items will be provided by the Office of the President and reimbursed from the funds appropriated to the Board.

Section 5(g) provides that the Board shall be a permanent entity.

Section 5(h) authorizes $130,000 to carry out the provisions of this section.

SECTION 6—ASSISTANCE FROM OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Section 6(a) permits any agency of the United States to loan, sell, lease, or grant property, and to perform administrative and technical support and services, at the request of USIA, on a reimbursable basis in order to carry out the purposes of section 2.

Any reimbursement shall be credited to the appropriation from which the property, support, or services were derived.

Section 6(b) provides that USIA may carry out the purposes of section 3 by means of grants, leases or contracts, subject to the availability of appropriations, or by other appropriate means.

SECTION 7—FACILITY COMPENSATION

Section 7(a) states Congressional intent that the Secretary of State should seek prompt and full settlement of United States claims against the Government of Cuba arising from Cuban interference with domestic U.S. broadcasting. The subsection states further that interim assistance to adversely affected broadcasters would be appropriate, pending the settlement of such claims. Since the question of appropriate levels of compensation depends on a number of factors, the budgetary limitations on such compensation are left to determination by regulation.

Section 7(b) provides for compensation to U.S. radio broadcasting station licensees, upon application to the U.S. Information Agency for expenses which they have incurred or will incur in mitigating—pursuant to special temporary authority from the Federal Communications Commission (FCC)—the effects of activities by the Government of Cuba which directly interfere with the transmission or reception of broadcasts by these licensees. Such expenses are limited to the cost of equipment replaced, less depreciation, and associated technical and engineering costs which are involved in increasing transmitter power, making antenna alterations, and taking other mitigating actions pursuant to FCC authority.

Section 7(c) provides that the Federal Communications Commission shall issue regulations and establish procedures to carry out the requirements of this section. Such regulations are to be issued no later than 180 days following enactment. This will permit review of the regulations prior to the effective date of this section.

It is expected that the FCC will consult with the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the National Telecommunications and Information Administration at the Department of Commerce, and affected broadcasters to seek workable rules and regulations under which compensation can be provided. The question of whether Cuba is engaging in activities which violate international law and which may interfere with the U.S. domestic broadcasting operations is a foreign policy issue which is properly determined by the Secretary of State. The questions of the level and kind of interference and its technical effects on U.S. broadcasters lend themselves to the expertise available at the Federal Communications Commission.

Under this new compensation authority, both the U.S. Information Agency and the Federal Communications Commission will be undertaking novel new responsibilities. It is recognized that Cuban interference with U.S. domestic broadcasting has been a long-standing, 10-15 year problem; that the nature and extent of Cuban radio interference is highly intermittent and fluid, and that further funds may be required in the future. Therefore, in issuing any regulations and establishing any procedures for carrying out this section, the FCC should establish criteria to evaluate the financial claims of affected licensees. Such criteria may include the duration, stability and extent of Cuban interference, including the establishment of a threshold loss of service prior to any compensation recommendation. The Commission may also consider establishing limits on the type and extent of reimbursable expenses, pro-rating Cuba's share in situations involving multiple interference sources, and requiring affected licensees to revert to original station parameters without further compensation whenever Cuban interference ceases.

Section 7(d) authorizes $5 million to be appropriated for use in compensating broadcasters under this section, to remain available until expended. This includes the administrative expenses of the FCC and the USIA in carrying out this section.

Section 7(e) stipulates that funds appropriated for implementation of this section shall be available for no more than four years following the first broadcast under this legislation.

Section 7(f) expresses the sense of Congress that the President should establish a task force to analyze the level of interference from the operation of Cuban radio stations experienced by broadcasters in the United States and to seek a practical political and technical solution to this problem. The task force should include relevant government agencies and representatives of the U.S. broadcast industry. The task force can be a resource of information and technical expertise in the determination of compensation levels. It might also be used as a coordinating entity to carry out the activities required under section 7(a). Members would include such agencies as the Department of State, the International Communication Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, the Department of Commerce, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Department of Defense, as well as representatives of the U.S. broadcast industry.

Section 7(g) provides an effective date of October 1, 1984, for this section. It is noted, however, that the FCC regulations are to be issued 180 days following the date of enactment of this legislation.

SECTION 8—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Section 8(a) authorizes $14 million for fiscal year 1984 and $11 million for fiscal year 1985 to carry out sections 3 and 4. These funds are not available for use by the Advisory Board established under section 5. The subsection states that the amount obligated by the U.S. Information Agency in ensuing fiscal years shall be sufficient to maintain broadcasts to Cuba under this legislation at rates no less than the fiscal year 1985 level.

Section 8(b) authorizes $54,800,000 in each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985 for modernization of the facilities and operations of the Voice of America.

Section 8(c) provides that amounts appropriated under this section are authorized to remain available until expended.

It should be noted that this authorization is intended to restore the funds requested by the executive branch for VOA modernization, which were cut by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations from S. 1342, the authorization bill for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, and the Board for International Broadcasting. This authorization is, therefore, within the President's budget request.

SECTION 9—INDEPENDENT EVALUATION OF THE CUBA SERVICE

Section 9 requires the U.S. Information Agency to arrange an independent evaluation of Radio Marti programming. The results of the evaluation are to be reported to the U.S. Information Agency eighteen months following the date of enactment and at intervals of one year thereafter for the following three years. The USIA is directed to transmit each report no later than thirty days after the date of receipt.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield to the chairman of the full committee first, if I may.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 602, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act.

At the outset, I want to commend the gentleman from Florida, the chairman of the Subcommittee on International Operations, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), and as well the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) for their efforts in bringing this important legislation to fruition.

I would also like to take this opportunity to commend the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) for facilitating the expeditious consideration of S. 602.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Florida has explained, this is compromise legislation which balances the interests of the foreign policy of our country and the American radio broadcasting industry.

□ 1250

In doing so, S. 602 represents a much-needed expansion of reliable broadcasting information to the Caribbean and the Latin American nations. As the gentleman from Florida also stated, this measure is just the first step in our efforts to close the gap between the United States and the Soviet Union and its allies in worldwide radio broadcasting.

Much, much more remains to be done to improve and expand the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty. And I hope this administration will heed the words of the chairman, and indeed exert more effort and support for these radios.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the adoption of S. 602.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 602, legislation authorizing radio broadcasting to Cuba. As the ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on International Operations, the subcommittee originally holding hearings on this measure, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL).

I commend the gentleman, and the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee (Mr. PEPPER) for their continued efforts to bring this measure to the floor.

As the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) explained, and as those who are familiar with the legislative history of this measure will recognize, the bill before us is compromise legislation reflecting the concerns of those seeking to bring an effective news reporting initiative to the Cuban people and those who have raised concerns about the foreign policy implications and the possible consequences for our domestic broadcasters of such radio broadcasting to Cuba.

I believe the measure before us, S. 602, as amended by the Senate, is a thoughtful approach to the matter. I might add that the administration supports this legislation, and that S. 602 is not opposed by the National Association of Broadcasters. It is my hope that our Committee on Foreign Affairs can monitor closely the implementation of S. 602 so that the legislation's objectives are clearly met.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support S. 602, so that we may begin efforts to further the open communication of information and ideas to the people of Cuba.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished ranking Member of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance of the Energy and Commerce Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RINALDO), who has been a staunch supporter of this measure from its initiation.

Mr. RINALDO. I think the gentleman for yielding, Mr. Speaker, and I rise in support of S. 602, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act.

The bill before us today is a compromise measure which is agreeable to those who have had strong feelings both in favor of and in opposition to the establishment of Radio Marti. I am satisfied that this bill will provide for the effective operation of Radio Marti and am pleased that the major concerns of both sides have been met and that we can now move forward to enact this vitally important piece of legislation.

I would like to emphasize that Radio Marti is an extremely important, peaceful, and nonconfrontational foreign policy objective of the administration. Fidel Castro has controlled Cuba for 24 years. Half of the Cuban people are under 25 years of age and have never known another form of government. They have never received information about their government and its policies, except what has been fed to them by the Castro regime.

This bill is strongly supported by the Cuban Americans in my district, particularly in the city of Elizabeth. They are people who have lived under the oppressive Castro regime. They are people who know what it is like to live in Cuba. They want their friends and relatives who remain there to be able to hear the truth about the Castro regime and its policies and activities throughout the world.

The establishment of Radio Marti will provide a surrogate home radio service for Cubans to provide them with objective news programing. Its purpose is similar to that of Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, which have broadcast behind the Iron Curtain for many years. Although Radio Marti will be formally a part of the Voice of America and will operate in accordance with the VOA standards of accuracy and objectivity, it will be run by a separate Cuba Service within the Voice of America. I am satisfied that this organizational arrangement will preserve the special purpose of Radio Marti and allow its programs to have a separate and distinct entity.

This compromise legislation, I might point out, in addition to being acceptable to the administration, has also been endorsed by the National Association of Broadcasters. I urge the House to pass S. 602, and I thank my friend and distinguished colleague from New York for yielding to me.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for his support throughout the consideration of this measure.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. KEMP) who has long supported this measure.

Mr. KEMP. I thank the gentleman for yielding and rise in very strong support, Mr. Speaker, of Radio Marti.

I want to particularly express my gratitude to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) for his efforts that have been untiring, unswerving, toward an end that would give this country and the friends of freedom in the Caribbean a chance to express the truth. Those young people to whom the gentleman from New Jersey referred that are in Cuba and other parts of the Caribbean need to hear that truth, and to know that there is a beacon of hope in the world.

I want to thank my friend from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and Congressman PEPPER and others who recognize that ideas rule the world—for good or bad, there is no stronger army on the Earth than a right idea whose time has come. This country should be more positive, it should be more aggressive, and I mean that in the highest sense of the word. We should be offensive with regard to the principles and ideals for which our Nation stands. That does not mean to say that we are always right, for surely we are not. But there is no question of the rightness of our efforts to export the American idea to the rest of the world.

A recent example: My wife was on the Voice of Israel a number of weeks ago with an individual who had emigrated from the Soviet Union to Israel. My good friend Senator BILL ARMSTRONG got a letter the other day from the son who still is in Leningrad, who had heard his father from Israel, and my wife Joanne, in an interview beamed all the way to Leningrad. He wrote to Senator ARMSTRONG, please tell the Congressman how much that meant to us, and tell him that hope is still alive here in Russia. That same hope is something this country has to stand for behind the Iron Curtain in Eastern Europe, in the Caribbean, in Cuba. And I just want to again express my gratitude to you, Mr. GILMAN, and also to Mr. FASCELL for your efforts, because this is an important part of making the American idea, which has as its roots the universal Jeffersonian truths, applicable to other countries and other people who are looking for that hope. And I just want to thank you.

Mr. GILMAN. We thank the gentleman from New York for his continuing support of this extremely important legislation.

I reserve the balance of our time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 8 minutes.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, what is the time remaining at this point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) has 16 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LAGOMARSINO).

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, I want to first commend the gentlemen from Florida (Mr. FASCELL and Mr. PEPPER), the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and, of course, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RINALDO) for their efforts in bringing this bill to the floor.

During the debates on El Salvador and Nicaragua, there were a number of comments about this administration's emphasis on military solutions to fighting communism in this hemisphere. I believe those charges are false, and I believe the record demonstrates that they are false.

The administration has sought and obtained the approval of its Caribbean Basin Initiative, has provided far more economic and military aid, has sought the advancement of its democracy program, and the authorization of Radio Marti.

Mr. Speaker, Radio Marti would fight the lies of communism in this hemisphere through ideas—not through military aid. For all those who have said there should be an alternative to military aid, "support for Radio Marti is an obvious and appropriate choice."

The administration proposed the creation of this new radio station for broadcasting to Cuba as one of the few peaceful options available to the United States in confronting the insidious penetration of Cuban aggression in this hemisphere. By broadcasting news reports and commentaries to the people of Cuba, Radio Marti would serve the same vital role as Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty serve in broadcasting to the Soviet bloc in Europe.

For tens of millions of East Europeans, the most reliable information about their country comes from the outside world. There is no comparable source of news for those living in Cuba. The Radio Marti project is consistent with international law, which is in contrast to the Cuban Government's practice of jamming U.S. domestic stations. The illegal Cuban broadcasts have already continued more than 10 years and are a serious problem; however, we cannot base U.S. policy on some threat from the Cubans that they will increase their jamming activities. The creation of Radio Marti is an important ingredient in bringing to the Cuban people the reality of their Government's failure at home and its subversive activities abroad.

Even with the establishment of Radio Marti, the United States will still remain far behind the Soviet Union in the amount of resources and time devoted to international radio broadcasts. I believe it is essential that we meet this challenge and provide for the creation of this new voice of truth for the Cuban people.

Last December, a joint hearing of the Subcommittees on Inter-American Affairs and International Economic Policy and Trade focused on U.S. relations with Cuba, Appearing at that hearing was Armando Valladares, a Cuban poet who came to the United States in October after being imprisoned in Cuba for 22 years. At the hearing, Chairman JACK BINGHAM asked what the United States could do to promote change within Cuba. Valladares replied,

> At the present time, the United States could do the best service by giving the Cuban people access to information. That could lead to change. That is why I consider Radio Marti so important.

Valladares also said the Cuban people have become disenchanted with communism, and said the United States should condemn Castro's imprisonment of dissenters and other human rights violations "in all possible forums," He called the Castro regime

> A dictatorship—the most violent, the most ruthless known to mankind. It is maintained in power only by bayonets and a secret police that has under surveillance all the citizens of the island.

Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe have been a beacon for freedom and a source for bringing the reality of the repressive Soviet regime to peoples of Eastern Europe. Radio Marti would serve the same purpose for the people of Cuba.

Radio Marti is intended to serve as an alternative Cuban radio station offering the Cuban people the truth about their government's mismanagement of their society and economy and Castro's role in promoting subversion and terrorism not only in the Western Hemisphere but also in Africa and the rest of the world.

I urge my colleagues to remember the recommendation of the Cuban poet Valladares and "give the Cuban people access to information" by supporting Radio Marti".

□ 1300

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman from California, who happens to be the ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere, for his supportive statements on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa (Mr. TAUKE).

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, there were times during the last 2 years when I never thought it would be possible for me to endorse the Broadcasting to Cuba Act. But through the leadership of the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH), and with the cooperation of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), we have been able to develop legislation that embraces all of the concerns of individuals of this body and commands the support of this body.

This legislation achieves the primary goal, which is to get the American message to the Cuban people. And it does insure that it will be a message that is credible because it meets Voice of America standards.

I think in addition it is important to note that this foreign policy initiative is going to be achieved without inflicting on individuals in our own country substantial damages. We must always be mindful when we take foreign policy initiatives that we should not only look at the benefits that can be achieved from those initiatives but also the possible damages that will be inflicted upon our own people.

When we initially looked at this legislation we were concerned that there would be damages inflicted upon American broadcasters. But with the compromise that has been achieved, I think we have mitigated those damages and we have been able to insure as much as possible that American broadcasters will not be adversely affected.

As we pass this legislation, however, we must not diminish our efforts in any way to work on the problems that currently affect Florida broadcasters arising from interference from the country of Cuba.

So I commend those who have been involved in this legislation for putting together a workable compromise that achieves American interests abroad without hurting our interests here at home.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman from Iowa and particularly for underscoring the concerns of our broadcasting industry.

Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. SMITH) who is the chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee that deals with this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say first of all that I think this bill is certainly a vast improvement over the bill that was on the floor last year. I am not ready to embrace it, but I think it is a vast improvement and I think it is a good thing to have made the changes that have been made.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida some questions with regard to funding especially, and a couple of other things.

To start with, we do have radio broadcasts to Cuba at the present time. Primarily is this going to increase the number of hours per day?

Mr. FASCELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And at the present time we have 5½ hours. This will increase it to how much?

Mr. FASCELL. Whatever the administration decides is an optimum period. There is no limitation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the quality of the broadcasts or the content of the broadcasts will be essentially the same; is that correct?

Mr. FASCELL. I cannot guarantee the content or quality. That depends on the director of the service.

But the intention is, of course, to have broadcasts going to Cuba which are truthful and credible and which would do the kind of job that is envisioned by the gentleman from Iowa. Otherwise, broadcasts would not be of any use.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I agree with that. But some of the speakers here had indicated Cubans have not been receiving truthful news and apparently they did not think much of what VOA has been doing.

Mr. FASCELL. I have never heard anyone accuse VOA of falsehood, but VOA's mission is decidedly different from that of Radio Marti. VOA, as it presently exists, is not normally considered a surrogate news service, whereas the additional hours of Radio Marti broadcasting would be of that character.

In other words, they would have more of the news of what is happening in Cuba than what is happening outside of Cuba. I will say to the gentleman that is the only difference. Radio Marti still must meet the same standards and criteria. Otherwise it would be a waste of money.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. On page 10 you have an authorization of $14 million for fiscal 1984 and $11 million for fiscal 1985. As the gentleman I am sure knows, the total appropriation for all of Latin America at the present time is $1,350,000 and that includes the Radio Cuba broadcasts at the present time.

Mr. FASCELL. That just goes to show, if the gentleman will yield, how sadly lacking we have been in our broadcasting to Latin America.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Where does the $14 million figure come from? Is that any well thought-out figure?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, you and I both know that it is only an estimate, put into the bill in the Senate, and that it is the best estimate that we have at this point, made by reasonable people who are in the business.

Hopefully, the startup costs will be less than that and we will receive a revised request from USIA. I know that with your personal scrutiny and that of your subcommittee, every dollar will be well accounted for and will have to be carefully justified. We intend to do the same in the Foreign Affairs Committee.

□ 1310

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am sure the gentleman, being from Florida, is acquainted with CID which now broadcasts from 10 stations to Cuba, all outside the United States.

But they tell me that their total budget is $750,000.

Mr. FASCELL. How much did the gentleman say?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. $750,000 per year.

They have nine news programs per day. I just could not figure out where this $14 million comes from.

Mr. FASCELL. Well, I am familiar with the organization of course, they do shortwave broadcasting.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They are also on AM, they have one AM station.

Mr. FASCELL. They do have one AM? I did not know that.

Now I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that it is useful to make a comparison between a private broadcasting service and U.S. Government broadcasting activities. But I will say that that certainly might be a basis for inquiry by the Subcommittee on Appropriations on what it is that the VOA intends to do and how they intend to do it and how their costs will be justified.

I would guess, I would just guess, without being an expert in the business that it would be very hard to make a comparison between the VOA type operation and the type operation that CID is running.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am also told that the clear channel stations in the United States which are the big ones, their budgets are between $1 million and $2 million per year.

Mr. FASCELL. Well, if that is their operational budget, the only thing I can say would be that you would have to consider, and I hope you will, startup costs and some equipment because I want to make a case for that. Furthermore, the maximum transmitter size available to U.S. broadcasters is 50 kW, while the U.S. Government uses 150 kW, 250 kW, and 500 kW transmitters, which are considerably more expensive to build, operate, and maintain, and cover a much greater target area.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is separate from equipment.

I am not talking about equipment now, I am talking about operating costs.

Then in addition to that on page 8, at the bottom about this $5 million for radio broadcasting licensees, for expenses they have incurred before or after the effective date of this act.

Now that is a retroactive grant of some kind apparently. What is the intention there? Are they to come in and say that last year "I had some expenses and we should be reimbursed for those?"

Mr. FASCELL. The gentleman is correct. We have always had that in the legislation. That has not changed from day one, through all of the committees. The reason for that is that this hemisphere has not been able to conclude a satisfactory regional AM broadcasting agreement, and the Cubans are still interfering with the broadcasting activities of the United States, as well as of other nations.

It seemed just a question of fairness to allow those who have been damaged due to Cuban interference at least to be able to make a case for assistance.

Now the gentleman understands that in order for a broadcaster to obtain relief, he or she must go to the FCC to get that relief. The bill provides that the FCC will make the technical determinations while the USIA provides the compensation.

The estimates have run anywhere from $50,000 to $250,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. At the top of page 10 you seem to be saying, and is this true or not, but you seem to be saying that Radio Cuba broadcasting appropriations will not be reduced even if there are reductions in all the other VOA broadcasting in the world.

You surely did not mean that but that is the second line in section 8, it says:

> The amount obligated by the United States Information Agency in ensuing fiscal years shall be sufficient to maintain broadcasts to Cuba under this Act at rates no less than the fiscal year 1985 level.

What if the total amount appropriated is less than necessary to continue the same level of activity?

Mr. FASCELL. That was a Senate amendment. I interpret "rates" to mean rates, or levels, of broadcasting. It is ludicrous to think that, in these days of budget stringency, and with the USIA and VOA lagging behind in meeting the requirements of their own missions, that we could single out any one entity at the expense of others.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH).

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman, and appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

I want to compliment the gentleman and Mr. PEPPER and others for reaching the best possible agreement, working out a solution to what in my opinion was initially a bad idea and remains a bad idea. We worked out the interference problem, that is good; we worked out the control problem, that is good. I think Mr. SMITH was just right on the button when he talked about some of the open-ended nature of the money that is involved here.

Here is an administration which knows that we have got some very severe interference problems with the Cubans. They have been going on for years.

But rather than sitting down with the Cubans, as we have on fishing rights, and sitting down as we have on airline hijacking, and seeing if we can work it out, what we do is to get into this potential broadcasting shootout with the Cubans, which only, under the earlier legislation, was only going to exacerbate the problems, hurt our broadcasters and come to no solution whatsoever.

The solution here is better. I think Mr. FASCELL and Mr. PEPPER have done a terrific job in making the best possible solution to what, as I suggested, was initially and remains a bad idea.

Cubans do not have to listen to a new U.S. station to know what is going on. Havana is 90 miles off of our coast. They already listen to American broadcasting, and listen to it all the time.

I am sure they would much rather listen to our commercial broadcasting rather than our propaganda station. Radio Marti is not needed.

Let me finally point out that I am troubled by the priorities in all of this.

Mr. FASCELL talked a little bit about this and Mr. SMITH referred to it.

It is much more important in the overall level of priorities that we be broadcasting to the Soviet Union, that we be broadcasting into Central and Eastern Europe, places that are not 90 miles off our shore and are not receiving American broadcasting.

That is where our priorities ought to be.

Yet for some ideological reasons, we are going ahead and building a new facility and spending an enormous amount of money.

The whole thing is a bad idea. But this is the best job that could be done under the circumstance, and again I commend the two gentlemen from Florida very much.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend Mr. FASCELL, Mr. PEPPER, and others, in bringing forth S. 602, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act. We should all thank the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. PEPPER, and the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on International Operations for their leadership on this issue, for bringing us out of what was a real tangle. This is the best solution for a bad idea.

Throughout the debate on the issue of broadcasting to Cuba, the concerns of the Energy and Commerce Committee have been:

The allocation of a frequency that will have the least negative impact on American broadcasters;

The impact on American radio broadcasters and the radio listening public that might stem from Cuban retaliatory countermeasures.

During our consideration of H.R. 2453, authored by Mr. FASCELL, the Energy and Commerce Committee adopted several amendments which were aimed at making sure that the frequency on which Radio Marti operated would result in the least amount of Cuban interference for American broadcasters and be least disruptive to the listening public.

The delicately balanced compromise reached in the Senate legislation will assure that radio broadcasting to Cuba operates as an entity within the Voice of America. One of the amendments adopted by the Energy and Commerce Committee, offered by Mr. TAUKE, also would have permitted Radio Marti to operate as a part of the VOA or on a shortwave frequency. The compromise is consistent with the Energy and Commerce Committee's overall approach to the frequency that should be authorized for Radio Marti. By insuring that the broadcasting to Cuba service would be a VOA station, operating under the VOA charter, and on a VOA frequency, this approach should greatly minimize the potential for harmful Cuban retaliation that could be devastating to the American radio broadcasting industry.

It is my feeling, Mr. Speaker, that the frequency allocation and interference issues are satisfactorily handled by the compromise bill. The compromise does address the issues that fall under the purview of the Energy and Commerce Committee. I am pleased to lend my support to those particular sections of the legislation.

An issue that the Energy and Commerce Committee was also extremely concerned about is insuring that the Federal Communications Commission—the expert agency—be the entity to make determinations relative to frequency use and to broadcaster compensation for damage suffered due to Cuban retaliation. The compromise recognizes that the FCC, as a independent agency, divorced from the administration's foreign policy apparatus, is the most appropriate agency to deal with these issues.

Again, I would like to thank the gentlemen for their leadership on this issue.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

Mr CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to commend Mr. FASCELL, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. GILMAN, and Mr. RINALDO for bringing this legislation to the floor.

After almost 2 years of discussions and efforts on this issue, we have finally come to the resolution of the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act.

It has been said that a good compromise leaves everybody a little unhappy and certainly the Radio Marti bill we consider today lives up to these expectations.

I believe the vital interests of Radio Marti supporters have been preserved while steps to remove the objections raised against the original proposal have been taken.

This bill reflects a compromise which addressess the concerns of everyone involved, and at the same time will allow us to broadcast accurate, objective and comprehensive programing to the people residing in Cuba. We will have an important instrument to break the ignorance blockade imposed by Dictator Fidel Castro upon the Cubans who live there.

Even though I still would have preferred the establishment of a separate radio station, I believe the need for commencing the dissemination of the truth about Cuba to Cubans overrides our desire for the enactment of a stronger bill, particularly in a situation in which time is of the essence.

I fully support this bill and on behalf of my fellow Puerto Ricans and the Cuban community in Puerto Rico, I urge all my colleagues to support it. I think that by the passage of this legislation we will be sending a very clear signal throughout the world that we really do care about the human rights of the enslaved people of Cuba.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. MITCHELL).

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to rise in opposition to this bill, but I am constrained to do so. Despite the best efforts of all involved in improving the bill it is still a bad idea.

We have a situation now where we are going to broadcast propaganda to Cuba in the hopes that somehow or other we will bring about the downfall of the Castro government.

Well, the Cubans hear all of our good stuff here in America anyway. We do not need this other effort.

In addition to that, have we forgotten what we did with Hungary

In 1956, we were exhorting the Hungarians to rise up and revolt against the Russians.

And when they did, they started crying for help, "Where are the Americans? When are they coming in?"

The Americans never showed.

Suppose we create that same kind of a situation in Cuba, are we prepared to send Americans in to support some kind of Cuban revolt? I would think not. To the best of my knowledge the Cubans are planning to construct a 500-kilowatt station, 10 times bigger than anything we have got. And that station is going to jam us to death.

It is going to interfere with broadcasting in some 30 States once it is constructed. You have some money in to compensate for loss of value to our radio stations, I think it is $1 million or $5 million, but you are almost going to have to triple that if the Cubans build their 500 kilowatt station. We are not going to have enough money in this bill to reimburse our American broadcasters who are going to suffer exorbitant losses because of the jamming.

And the last thing is: $14 million in the first year. For what? What is it for? I think they have already built the station. When we voted this thing down last year, the military was building the station without the approval of this Congress. What is the $14 million for? And what is the next $11 million for? I have not gotten any answers. I think it is a bad idea.

Please vote this one down. I rise in opposition to the measure before us, S. 602, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act. This bill directs the U.S. Information Agency (USIA) to establish a Cuba Service within the Voice of America (VOA) which will be responsible for all radio broadcasts to Cuba authorized by this initiative.

The radio station, Radio Marti, is authorized to the tune of $14 million in fiscal year 1984, and $11 million in fiscal year 1985 in an effort to purportedly provide the Cuban people with accurate information about Cuba and Cuban activities worldwide; I submit that this is indeed an inefficient allocation of limited Federal resources since the Cuban Government incorporates the technology necessary to prevent the reception of Radio Marti's broadcasts by the Cuban people.

I would further submit that, contrary to Radio Marti's stated purpose, this administration plans to use it as an instrument to encourage revolt on the island of Cuba. I wish to remind my colleagues that the United States exhorted the Hungarian people to revolt against communism in the fall of 1956. Yet, the United States refused their urgent requests for military aid when the Soviet Union invaded Hungary and ruthlessly repressed the uprising. As a result, many Hungarians lost their lives believing that the United States would support their struggle. I am certain that the same fate awaits any Cuban who may be deceived by Radio Marti broadcasts into believing that the United States would send troops into Cuba to support a popular uprising.

It should also be noted that, with the establishment of Radio Marti, we run the risk of a radio war with Cuba, and thereby, the ultimate infusion of even more funds into this ineffective program. Currently, Cuba plans to construct a radio station which will operate at 500 kilowatts—10 times more powerful than domestic U.S. stations which are limited to a maximum power level of 50 kilowatts. Consequently, during a radio war, Cuba would be capable of interfering with and reducing the listening areas of AM radio stations in 32 States plus the District of Columbia.

When we realize the potential threat to our own radio stations, we must be concerned that the legislation before us today does provide compensation for broadcasters which might be affected adversely by increased Cuban interference. The resulting revenue loss to these stations, along with the devaluation of broadcast properties, could be devastating.

Such compensation notwithstanding, it is just ironic that we would create a program with an exorbitant base cost, and then anticipate such additional expenditures. The radio was inevitable, and the substantial harm to our domestic stations is unquestionable, yet we are about to sanction this needless use of funds which can only lead to additional costs to our Government.

I would submit that the Voice of America Radio is quite capable of beaming propaganda to Cuba. This confirms that Radio Marti is just not needed. Moreover, I doubt seriously that the counter propaganda to be broadcast will have any effect.

I would urge my colleagues to consider the savings involved in not creating Radio Marti. We are talking about well over $14 million over the next few years—an amount we can ill afford in the face of continuing high deficits and severe economic instability.

On a final note, I maintain that clearly, Radio Marti's primary and sole purpose is to decrease the propaganda gap which exists between the United States and Russia. Currently, the Soviets outspend the United States about seven to one in their broadcasting and information efforts around the world. Surely, the Congress cannot justify the cruel denial of vital moneys for such domestic programs as school lunches, health care for the elderly, and student loans, and, simultaneously, authorize moneys for a propaganda contest with the Soviets.

A vote in opposition to S. 602 is a vote against the authorization of Federal funds for a futile and impotent program. I urge emphatically that we reject the ideological whims of the President and defeat this measure.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ).

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, may I express my sincere gratitude to the gentleman from New York for his generosity and say that I rise in very reluctant opposition because of the three men I revere the most, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, two of the greatest stalwards I have ever had the honor to know and work with and revere; and the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), but I do so impelled by the same feelings that impelled me to speak against this when the bill first came up in the House.

I see with great foreboding that what we are entering into is another contest here in which we are actively prodding the Castro regime into retaliation, in which we cannot win.

I foresee a sort of an electronic Bay of Pigs adventure. And with a great deal of foreboding I see this thing going on. Especially at this time when all through Latin America—forget about Cuba—all through Latin America this is interpreted as one further North American insensitive and mistaken perception of that part of the world that our immediate neighbors live in. We are now occupying Honduras. We can call it whatever we want to. Latin American countries, as expressed in their press, conservative and liberal press, are calling our present operations in Honduras an occupancy. And right they should. We are there not with the will and the consent of the representatives of the Honduran people and are there despite a great deal of indignation and protest. I foresee the necessity of soon having to invoke the War Powers Limitation Act with respect to the Presidential incursions into Central America.

So the thing here is a total mistake.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER).

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, this bill adds a new instrument to the effectiveness of the foreign policy of our country to strengthen the cause of freedom and curtail the influence of communism in the Western Hemisphere.

At the present time the Voice of America is only supposed to tell the rest of the world about what we are doing in America, about ourselves. This measure authorizes us to tell the Cubans the truth about what Castro is doing to them in Cuba. We do not have that instrument now.

Therefore, I say it adds a new instrument of great need to the authority of our country.

I can imagine a tearstained mother, sitting in a little cottage, somewhere in Cuba, with her face close to the photograph of a dear son who lost his life in Angola or in Ethiopia, sent there by Castro to further the imperial interests of the Soviet Union. And that tearstained mother wondering why her son had to be used by Castro as a servant of Soviet imperialism.

We, through this instrumentality, can tell the people of Cuba about the aggression of Castro as an instrument of the Soviet Union in areas of Central America today. We are told that there are Cuban soldiers in Nicaragua. Well, it would not hurt to tell the people of Cuba, "Why do you have to send Cuban soldiers into Nicaragua? Why do you have to spend the money of our country to further the cause of Soviet communism in Central America or somewhere else in the Western Hemisphere?"

So this is a very much-needed authority of our country. There has been now, I think, a desirable compromise in respect to what had been heretofore controversial aspects of this legislation. Now it will only speak under the aegis of the Voice of America. It will be required to follow the same high professional standards that are observed and required by law for the Voice of America. This instrumentality will primarily emanate from the Marathon station of the Voice of America, which presently broadcasts to Cuba. There may be certain other frequencies that may be employed, but primarily these broadcasts will come from Marathon, down in the Keys in Florida.

But the important thing is, Mr. Speaker, that what we are trying to do is not to equalize, but to make some impact upon Cuba by this broadcasting. I ask my colleagues do they realize that Cuba is broadcasting to the Western Hemisphere about three times as much material as is the United States broadcasting today? They broadcast 214 hours a week to Western Hemisphere areas. We only broadcast 86 hours a week at the present time. This simply gives us a little more authority, a little stronger voice, a little more to be heard from those in our country and those in the Western Hemisphere who we think really basically at heart want to enjoy the freedom that is ours, want to enjoy the democracy that we enjoy in this country.

I want to commend my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), for his long and able advocacy of this great cause; the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, Mr. ZABLOCKI; Mr. GILMAN, the distinguished minority leader of the Foreign Affairs Committee; my distinguished colleagues from Florida, Mr. SMITH and Mr. SHAW, and all my other colleagues from the State of Florida; and all those who have been in accord with this measure, and those who have opposed, for the fairness with which they have contemplated this measure.

Mr. Speaker, this is a vote for strengthening democracy and putting communism on the defensive in Cuba and in Latin America.

I ask you to give this measure your overwhelming support.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER), the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, for his long-standing commitment to this initiative and for his efforts in bringing the measure to the floor at this time, and we thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KOSTMAYER).

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the only good thing about this bill is its sponsor, my good friend from Florida (Mr. FASCELL). I would not want the occasion to pass, also, without recognizing Mr. FASCELL's colleague from Florida (Mr. SMITH). While I disagree with the viewpoint taken by these gentleman, I must commend Mr. SMITH in his first term for his very hard work on behalf of this piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill could be a good deal worse. In fact, it was. When it left our committee, this bill deserved an "F." It is a little bit improved now, but not much. It is up to a "D minus" at best. And that is only because very significant changes were made in the Senate. Most of those changes, I am happy to say, were based on an amendment which I had offered in the full committee.

What the committee failed to do when we had jurisdiction, the other body has managed to do, I am happy to say. But the fact, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill is still a dog. But it is not quite as mangy as it was when it last left us.

Let me say to the House that as an opponent of the original bill in the Foreign Affairs Committee and author of the so-called VOA option, I can only note with some awe the dedication that the chairman of the International Operations Subcommittee (Mr. FASCELL) demonstrated in working to expand broadcasting to Cuba.

As the gentleman from Florida noted, S. 602 is a compromise bill, with significant changes from the bill reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee.

That legislation, Mr. Speaker, I believe would have been a major mistake for those technical broadcasting reasons noted by the National Association of Broadcasters in their testimony before the House and Senate. But more importantly, the Radio Marti legislation would have been bad foreign policy.

What was so bad about the original Radio Marti concept? Really nothing in the abstract; in fact, the Government-financed Voice of America (VOA) broadcasts 5½ hours of programing a day that is directed at Cuba, and heard all over Cuba, from its facility at Marathon Island, Fla.

It was less the substance than the style of the Radio Marti proposal that was potentially so damaging to our relations with Cuba, which are badly in need of repair. For almost a quarter of a century, Cuban-United States relations have gone almost steadily downhill, beginning with a total economic embargo, to an American-backed invasion of the island, to the ridiculous assassination attempt on Fidel Castro concocted by the CIA.

The administration's original Radio Marti proposal was intended only to widen—not bridge—the gap that already divides the two countries.

The United States and Cuba have demonstrated the capacity to deal with each other where it serves our mutual purposes. Over the last 10 years we have negotiated agreements with the Cubans on maritime boundaries, fishing rights, aircraft hijackings, and on the establishment of the interest sections that operate out of the Swiss and Czech Embassies in Havana and Washington, respectively.

There are many other areas where agreements would be useful, such as on the return to Cuba of convicts who emigrated during the Mariel boatlift and on eliminating commercial radio interference between Cuban and United States stations. Radio Marti would have done nothing to encourage the Cubans to cooperate. In fact at the 1981 Rio de Janeiro conference to settle commercial radio issues the Cubans walked out in reaction to the Radio Marti proposal.

I am hopeful that passage of S. 602 will not jeopardize the possibility of bettering relations with Cuba in the future, but Mr. Speaker, I have my doubts. The VOA does a fine job of providing news and information—objective news and information—to the island of Cuba, to supplement the Cubans access to regular commercial broadcasts from the mainland United States. While I think this compromise proposal giving ultimate jurisdiction over expanded broadcasting to Cuba to the VOA to insure its integrity and objectivity is far superior to the original measure, I am still unconvinced of the wisdom of this venture in the first place. The needs of the Caribbean Basin, and the need for positive foreign policy accomplishments to try to bring solutions to the myriad economic, social and political problems of Latin America cry out for more prudent and more promising initiatives than this.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW).

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in listening to the remarks of my friend, Congressman PEPPER, I cannot help but try to accent and emphasize that part of his speech when he said this is our commitment to democracy. We are talking about nothing more than broadcasting the truth to Cuba. It has long been our position, and I think the position of every Member of this Congress, that if the truth were known by those beyond the Iron Curtain, they would not stand for the continuation of the type of government that they have gotten for years.

And, yes, there is an Iron Curtain in the Caribbean, and it is around the Island of Cuba.

It is vitally important that we support this bill.

It is also interesting to note that the Members of the south Florida delegation, in which I, of course, include muself, are in complete support of this bill. This is because we know the Cuban people well. We know their longing and their hunger for freedom, which is very real. They are hard working, industrious people who are longing to be free. And this is the best thing that we can do. This is our investment in democracy. This is our investment in truth.

I urge support of the bill.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for his strong supportive statement.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am most interested in the contrast between the debate yesterday in dealing with Lebanon and, of course, in dealing with the reality of the influence of the Soviet Union. There were many of us who do not want to get engaged militarily but find as a part of our policy and of the diplomatic thrust of the United States, there are occasions when, unfortunately, our men must be deployed around the world for one reason or another. But there were those who say there are other ways to fight. And then a bill like Radio Marti comes along, a perfect opportunity to wage a war with words, to wage a war for democracy by letting people know the truth without firing guns, without sending mediators over, or without doing anything resembling confrontation. And do you know what happens when we present this alternative, that alternative which those who opposed yesterday's bill wanted to put in its place? We proposed that alternative, and they say, "No, this is not the way, either; you should not talk, you should not let anybody know what the truth is, you should not do it this way. Our broadcasters will not like it. This group will not like it."

The reality is, if you are not going to wage a war, which none of us want, and you are not going to let the people know the truth with words and you are not going to do the diplomatic things that need to be done, how are you going to forge democracy around the world? How are you going to let people know the truth, what the right way is to live from the wrong way?

If we believe that we have a society in the United States which best represents the people of the world, if this is the system that we think is the best in the world, then what is wrong with telling the world the way it is in the United States? And what is wrong with telling the people in Cuba that there is a better way than the way under which they live.

I suggest that everyone who feels that this country is the greatest society and would like to see everyone accorded the basic human rights and civil liberties that we have, think twice before voting "no" against something like this, because what you are doing is voting against telling people that the United States is proud enough of the way it lives to tell people around the world what their leaders are doing to cut off their ability to live like the people in the United States. And I would urge very strongly, my colleagues, to consider voting "yes" on Radio Marti, because it is an extension of democracy. And for those people in Cuba, it is the right thing to do.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his strong supporting argument.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. NELSON).

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill today which is the culmination of months and months of hard work. The passage of this legislation will enable the Voice of America to bring a new voice of truth to Castro's Cuba.

By placing Radio Marti—named after the great Cuban liberation fighter—under the umbrella of the U.S. Information Agency, broadcasting can begin almost immediately. In addition, the excellent reputation of the Voice of America will assure that Radio Marti will be taken seriously as a source of reliable and accurate information.

Since Castro established his Communist dictatorship in Cuba in 1958, the Cuban people have had no access to real news about the world and about Cuba itself. The average Cuban knows almost nothing about the Cuban soldiers who are deployed in Angola and Ethiopia on behalf of Soviet military and political aims. Castro has closed off the people from this basic human right. We can utilize modern radio technology to open the door that he has sought to close around the minds of the Cuban people.

The Voice of America has brought factual information to people in many countries behind the Iron Curtain. It has offered an alternative information source for those who refuse to accept the mind-binding propaganda of these totalitarian regimes.

As an integral part of the VOA, Radio Marti will expand this effort to the crucial Caribbean area. The truth will penetrate Castro's mental prison and will enhance the chances that the people of Cuba will once again be free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I urge all of my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL), the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BROYHILL. I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) for the great work that they have done in bringing this legislation to the floor and in helping to formulate this compromise, which does, I think, answer the concerns that many have expressed about the operation of this important radio service.

Today we have heard arguments that we cannot put this radio operation into service, that we cannot tell the Cubans the truth about their Government. And at the same time we see the Cubans broadcasting hundreds of hours a week of propaganda not only to America but to countries throughout the Caribbean. Arguments are made that we can do nothing to counter those programs and those lies that are put on the airwaves, that we cannot put into effect a modest program of transmitting objective information to the Cuban people.

We see the Cubans who are engaged in destabilizing policies throughout the Caribbean and South America,

Central America, not only sending troops but training troops, and we hear arguments that we cannot send the voice of truth to the Cuban people. I reject these arguments and I hope that most Members of this House will reject them also.

I think, on the argument that Cuba will cause interference with American radio broadcasters, that the interference is going on now and that it will continue no matter what we do with respect to Radio Marti.

The compromise which has been agreed upon answers the concerns that the operation of Radio Marti may provoke Cuban interference with American radio broadcasters. At the same time, it preserves the need for an identity for Radio Marti separate from programing broadcast by the Voice of America.

The establishment of Radio Marti is an important foreign policy initiative proposed by the administration. Its purpose is to foster the cause of freedom in Cuba by providing the Cuban people with accurate, objective, and comprehensive programing about their country, its policies, and its role in world affairs. Such information has not been available to them since Castro came to power 24 years ago. Radio Marti will act as a surrogate home radio service for the Cuban people.

The compromise legislation before us today, which was passed by the Senate on September 13, 1983, would establish Radio Marti as a separate Cuba service within the Voice of America. As part of the VOA, Radio Marti will operate in accordance with the standards of accuracy, objectivity, and balance for which the voice is so well known and respected. However, Radio Marti will be administered separately from the VOA. The Cuba service will have a separate staff which will be appointed by and report directly to the Director of the U.S. Information Agency.

In addition, the bill establishes an Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba within the Office of the President.

The Board will have only an advisory function. The Director of USIA is the official with primary responsibility for overseeing the establishment and operation of Radio Marti.

The Energy and Commerce Committee, on which I serve as ranking minority member, spent a great deal of time reviewing legislation to establish Radio Marti. The compromise bill before us today in large part meets the concerns which were expressed during this lengthy deliberation. I am pleased that agreement has been reached on this important measure. I urge the House to pass S. 602.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, this measure has been worked on for a lengthy period of time and an effective compromise has been finally worked out. This measure will be of significant help in providing factual information to the people of Cuba. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support it.

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I support S. 602, as amended, legislation authorizing radio broadcasting to Cuba. I commend those who have worked long and hard on bringing such a measure, which is supported by the administration, to the floor.

S. 602 is a proposal designed to provide to the Cuban people a source of objective reporting and analysis. Such an undertaking can help break Castro's virtual monopoly on the news and information disseminated within Cuba. At the same time, the legislation is designed to minimize any adverse affects upon our domestic broadcasting industry as a result of Cuban transmission practices and is not opposed by the National Association of Broadcasters.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the legislation before us provides a satisfactory framework for initiating a special radio broadcasting service to Cuba.

I believe such a service warrants careful scrutiny during the next few years so we can assure that this initiative effectively advances our Nation's foreign policy concerns while protecting the legitimate interests of our domestic broadcasters. I urge my colleagues to support S. 602, as amended.●

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 312, the previous question is considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 302, nays 109, not voting 22, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Hance for, with Mr. Jones of Tennessee against.

Mr. SLATTERY, Mr. SCHEUER, Mrs. LLOYD, and Mrs. BOXER changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. TAUZIN, Mrs. BYRON, and Messrs. McCANDLESS, SLATTERY, and GORE changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the Senate bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITLEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3415, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 3415) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of September 22, 1983.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COUGHLIN) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on the bill, H.R. 3415, and all amendments in disagreement, and that I be permitted to include a tabulation and summarization of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, the conference report now before the House will provide the District of Columbia government with Federal funds totaling $600.8 million. This amount, Mr. Speaker, is $31.2 million above the budget estimates; $56.2 million above the House Bill, and $4.5 million above the Senate allowance.

In District funds, the conference agreement provides a total of $2.2 billion in new budget authority. This is $31.1 million over the budget estimates; $56.1 million above the House allowance, and $4.4 million higher than the Senate bill.

FEDERAL FUNDS

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to explain this conference agreement to the House, It is true that the Federal funds part of the bill we bring back from conference is $56.2 million above the House-passed bill. However, $25 million of that amount is due to the increase in the regular annual Federal payment which was anticipated at the time of House action on this bill. That $25 million is included in this conference report and is earmarked for three major items. They are first police, fire, and teacher's pension funds, for which $12.2 million is allocated; second, St. Elizabeths Hospital which will receive $4.7 million; and third, D.C. General Hospital which will receive $8 million.

Mr. Speaker, as Members of this House can see, the $25 million is split almost down the middle between pension programs and health care, two very important areas.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE EMERGENCY INITIATIVES

In addition to the additional authorized Federal payment of $25 million, the bill as agreed to by the conferees provides a one-time special Federal payment of $25.2 million for criminal justice emergency initiatives. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the District's prison facilities are crowded, and $22.3 million of this special Federal payment will be used to hire additional correctional officers as well as expand vocational and educational programs and make needed capital improvements to the city's prison facilities. We have also included report language recommending that the Attorney General of the United States develop and submit a plan to Congress by January 30, 1984, to cap the growth of the prison population at the city's correctional facilities in Lorton.

The balance of $2.8 million of this special Federal payment is to provide seven new judges and related positions and capital programs for the District's superior court subject to approval of authorizing legislation. Mr. Speaker, we are asking for an orderly process so that hearings can be held by the authorizing committees to review the criminal justice system and determine what improvements should be made in addition to evaluating the need for additional judges. So while we have included funds required for additional judges, we leave it to the authorizing committees to make a final determination.

EDUCATION INITIATIVE

The bill includes a one-time Federal payment of $350,000 for the Board of Education to perform a study to explore various alternatives to recognize outstanding teachers through incentives of both a financial and career nature. The Senate bill included $1.5 million for this purpose.

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

And finally, Mr. Speaker, the conferees recommend a one-time Federal payment of $5.7 million as the last remaining link in bridging the $25 million deficit in the fiscal year 1984 budget for St. Elizabeths Hospital. This deficit has been resolved through the mutual efforts of Federal and District officials. The Federal Government recently announced the implementation of management improvements to save $14 million; a proposal has been made by the District government to save $5.3 million by transferring patients from St. Elizabeths to existing city facilities; and now in our action we recommend the balance of $5.7 million. In doing so, Mr. Speaker, we want to make it absolutely clear that at no time will we again recommend a special Federal payment for this purpose. In fact, we are disappointed that Federal and District officials have not been able to resolve their problems, and have directed them to do so and indeed expect them to have their problems resolved prior to the submission of next year's budget.

HUMAN SUPPORT SERVICES

For the city's vocational rehabilitation programs, the conferees recommend an increase of $900,000 for a total of $2.8 million in fiscal year 1984. This merely restores the budget for this program to the fiscal year 1981 level. Without this increase Mr. Speaker, we were informed that a one-third reduction would be made in the number of severely and nonseverely disabled persons served. We were also informed that a 50-percent reduction would occur in the number of disabled persons placed in employment. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that an investment in vocational rehabilitation is an investment in America's future, and I believe we should do all we can for these programs.

For the District of Columbia General Hospital, the conference agreement provides a total of $43.1 million. This allowance, Mr. Speaker, is $8 million above the House allowance and is funded from the additional Federal payment authorization of $25 million I referred to earlier.

PENSION FUNDS

Mr. Speaker, the conferees recommend a total of $181,117,000 for the police, fire, teachers and judges pension funds. As noted earlier, the increase of $12.2 million above the House allowance reflects the amount included for this purpose in the additional Federal payment authorization of $25 million approved in Public Law 98-65. The Retirement Board appears to be doing an excellent job in performing its fiduciary responsibilities. Through investments, the permanent fund has increased from $323 million in November 1983, to $382 million as of June 30, 1983, the date of the latest performance report.

DEFICIT REDUCTION

The conferees have agreed to require the District to reduce its accumulated general fund deficit by $15 million in fiscal year 1984 instead of $20 million as proposed by the House and $5 million as proposed by the Senate. We believe it is important that the city continue its efforts toward reducing its accumulated deficit in an orderly and disciplined manner.

At this point in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, I will insert a tabulation summarizing the conference action.

The table referred to follows:

Let me say to the Members that in the few minutes I have taken here, I have tried to highlight the conference agreement. The full text has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last Thursday, September 22, beginning on page 25515.

Mr. Speaker, all of the conferees except one who happened to be out of town signed the conference report, and I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to all of them for their cooperation in forging this compromise.

I want to especially thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COUGHLIN) for his dedication and support throughout the proceedings on the District's fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill.

I can truly say, Mr. Speaker, that he always has the best interest of the District in mind—whether we are in hearings; in markup; or in conference.

He is always fair and openminded, and it is truly a pleasure to work with such an outstanding individual.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good conference report and I urge its adoption.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the very distinguished chairman has very well summarized the results of the conference. As always, the very able gentleman from California has done an outstanding job in upholding the will of the House.

As the chairman has pointed out, although there is $25 million in the bill that was not considered by the House, these funds were considered subsequent to the House passage of the appropriations bill and are now authorized.

The only outstanding provision, as the chairman has also pointed out, that is over and above the President's request is some $25 million for the Senate's criminal emergency justice provisions. This was supported in the conference as a necessary addition to our criminal justice system in the District of Columbia, that would provide for 35 new positions and seven new judges, but pending authorization only, and would provide $22.3 million and 422 positions for additional correctional officers, parole officers, education, vocational, and capital programs for the Department of Corrections.

As the Members of this House know, your subcommittee has made a major responsibility on its part the fact that the District should run its budget on a balanced basis and should provide for the retirement of its debt in an orderly fashion so that it will be in good fiscal condition. Indeed, the bill does provide for a $15 million repayment of the general fund deficit.

The Office of Management and Budget has announced that they will not object to the bill. Although they had some reservations about the $25 million criminal justice initiative, the administration applauds the diligent efforts of the committee to resolve the St. Elizabeths Hospital funding issue and will support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE).

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the chairman and the ranking minority member for a job well done.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report making appropriations for the District for fiscal year 1984. In the face of some troublesome questions before the conferees, I think a very reasonable agreement has been fashioned.

At the outset, I would like to commend Chairman DIXON and Mr. COUGHLIN, the ranking minority member, for their interest in the District's budgetary affairs, and their efforts in producing a conference agreement worthy of this body's support.

Under the Federal payment to the District, which compensates the District for the presence of the Federal Government, the conferees have agreed to a figure of $386 million as requested by the administration. The $25 million difference between the conference amount and the House-passed figure of $261 million, reflects a $15 million increase in the Federal payment authorization as stipulated in Public Law 98–65, that authorization bill was not approved until after the House had passed its version of the D.C. appropriations bill.

The conferees have provided $25 million for a special criminal justice emergency initiative. Among other things, these initiative funds will go toward the hiring of additional judges for the D.C. Superior Court, once appropriate legislative authority has been passed, and for the enhancement of the D.C. Department of Corrections.

Within the Department of Correction initiative, new vocational education teachers will be hired for job training for certain inmates, and there will be an increase in the number of parole officers to handle the processing of eligible cases.

Elsewhere in the public safety and justice category, the conferees have provided funding to continue the operation of the police and fire clinic, which provides quality health care to police and firefighters, and funding for fully staffed operations of the D.C. fireboat.

In another area, the conferees have provided funds for a study by the D.C. Board of Education to explore the alternatives, both financially and promotionwise, to recognize outstanding teachers.

I think this a constructive initiative which is certainly parallel to the thoughts of the administration, and in the interests of education of our young people in general.

In the category of human support services, the conferees have allowed for $503.2 million for the funding of agencies which provide health care, day care, job training, vocational education, disability compensation and other services and activities associated with the well-being of the local citizenry.

In the category of reducing the District's accumulated general fund deficit, associated with a working capital shortfall built up in the 1970's, the conferees have provided that $15 million is to be applied toward reducing the cash portion of the general fund accumulated deficit. Of that sum, $5 million is approved as requested by the District, and $10 million is directed to be funded through savings identified by the Mayor, or revenues available to the District.

Mr. Speaker, I think the conferees' action in raising the figure to be applied to repayment of the deficit is consistent with the efforts in the fiscal year 1983 bill, and consistent with encouraging good financial management.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly touch on a subject in this bill which has been of concern to me—that being the financial posture of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

The conferees have restored the language cap on the amount which the District can pay to St. Elizabeths from its general fund. I personally would have preferred to see this cap eliminated, and I know the administration wanted to see the same.

However, like the administration, I too, am encouraged by the managers' statement language which makes clear that the St. Elizabeths problem of money shortfalls must be resolved, and that future Federal assistance is not to be automatically expected.

I commend the efforts of Mr. DIXON and Mr. COUGHLIN for securing a raise in the amount to be paid to St. Elizabeths which in turn will prevent the shortfall we expected. I hope this effort, and the expressions of concern on the part of myself and other Members, will encourage the District government to move forward with attending to this problem more closely.

In closing Mr. Speaker, I can tell the membership that I have received a statement from the administration on the 1984 District of Columbia bill, and they do not intend to object to it. I urge the House to pass this conference report.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the chairman of the District of Columbia Subcommittee and the conferees for their excellent work on this bill. I know there were many difficult issues facing the conference committee which by and large have been resolved in a fair and equitable manner. This is a good bill, a prudent bill, and a testament to the District's and the Congress ability to work together.

I have been very concerned over the level of funding of St. Elizabeths Hospital in the District and the hospital's ability to continue to provide consistent and ample services to area residents. I am also concerned over the future of the employees at St. Elizabeths, and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would at this time like to enter into a colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, am I correct that the conference report adds an additional $5.7 million over the Senate amount of $29.4 million and $10.5 million over the House figure of $24.7 million for St. Elizabeths Hospital?

Mr. DIXON. The gentleman from Maryland is correct.

Mr. HOYER. Am I also correct, Mr. Speaker, that the amount of $35.1 million for St. Elizabeths implies approximately $14 million in administrative savings?

Mr. DIXON. Yes, the Federal Department of Health and Human Services has reported that it would initiate management improvements which should result in savings of $14 million.

Mr. HOYER. I also understand, Mr. Speaker, that the conference committee has incorporated provisions protecting employees of St. Elizabeths from any adverse effects of these savings and also requiring the District to report to Congress prior to any transfer of functions at St. Elizabeths on the measures they are taking to protect these employees from possible adverse effects due to a transfer of function. Would the gentleman comment on those provisions and would the gentleman explain what steps will be taken by St. Elizabeths, the District, and the Congress to insure the continued high level of services rendered to patients in the drug and alcohol abuse program?

Mr. DIXON. Let me say to the gentleman from Maryland that the conference members were very much concerned that present employees of St. Elizabeths Hospital not be adversely affected, and language was placed in the joint statement of the managers—and this can be found on pages 5 and 9 of the slip copy of the conference report, House Report No. 98-379—expressing this concern. We fully expect all employees in the programs affected at St. Elizabeths to have first right of refusal for any hirings by the District government for the programs that it transfers from St. Elizabeths. We expect this to take place notwithstanding the city's residency requirements. These individuals are not new employees—they are dedicated people caught up in a problem not of their own doing. We have asked city officials to provide the Congress with a report 60 days prior to the effective date of any transfer, and let me assure you that we have the same concerns about these employees as the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for his assurances and for his explanation.

Again, I would like to commend the chairman, the ranking member and the members of the committee on both sides of the aisle for their efforts on this legislation and urge my colleagues to support the adoption of the conference committee report.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further additional requests for time. I would reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. PARRIS).

Mr. PARRIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the adoption of the conference report, and additionally to express to the chairman and members of the subcommittee and of the full committee my sincere appreciation for their consideration of the suggestions and requests that I have made as a Member of this body and other Members representing districts in the Washington metropolitan area have made concerning this matter.

Those things that impact on my district, being in close proximity to the District of Columbia, may be regarded as local matters by the balance of the Members of the Congress but for us they are important. The members of this subcommittee have invariably been most accommodating and although we have not always gotten all that we may have wanted they have been totally fair in their consideration. I want to publicly express my sincere gratitude to each of them for that.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 231, nays 177, not voting 25, as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2780, STATE AND LOCAL FISCAL ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS OF 1983

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2780) to extend and amend the provisions of title 31, United States Code, relating to the general revenue sharing program, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to a conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this side would like to know whether this has been cleared with the ranking minority member.

The minority would like to know whether the ranking minority member on the committee has been advised as to this and whether he agrees to it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I believe the staff has been advised. They agreed, I believe, to the recommendations that the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON), who is the ranking minority member, and the two other minority members on that subcommittee be appointed. We used the same procedure for the Democrats.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman whether the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON) has agreed.

Mr. BROOKS. If the gentleman will yield, Mr. Speaker, I think he has no objection to it. That was my understanding.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

The Chair hears none and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BROOKS, WEISS, CONYERS, LEVIN of Michigan, MACKAY, TOWNS, HORTON, WALKER, and MCCANDLESS.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL ANTITAMPERING ACT

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 216) to amend title 18, United States Code, to combat, deter, and punish individuals who tamper with household products with intent to cause personal injury, death, or other harm, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so in order to get a further explanation of what the gentleman from New Jersey is doing.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAWYER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment at the desk. It is my intent to offer the amendment and seek the passage of an amendment to the anti-tampering bill.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES)?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 216

An Act to amend title 18, United States Code, to combat, deter, and punish individuals who tamper with household products with intent to cause personal injury, death, or other harm, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Anti-Tampering Act."

SEC. 2. Chapter 65 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1365. Tampering with household products

"(a) Whoever, with intent to kill, injure or otherwise endanger the health or safety of any person or to cause significant damage or injury to the business of an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other business entity, tampers with and thereby taints, or tampers with and thereby renders materially false or misleading the labeling of, or container for, any household product which is in, is intended to be in, or continues to affect interstate or foreign commerce, or attempts, threatens, or conspires to do so, shall—

"(1) be imprisoned for not more than ten years or fined not more than $20,000, or both;

"(2) if serious bodily injury results, be imprisoned for not more than twenty years or fined not more than $50,000 or both; and

"(3) if death results, be imprisoned for any term of years or for life or fined not more than $100,000, or both.

"(b)(1) Whoever imparts or conveys false information, knowing the information to be false, concerning an act or attempted act which, if true, would constitute a violation of subsection (a) shall be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

"(2) Whoever willfully and maliciously imparts or conveys false information, knowing the information to be false, concerning an act or attempted act which, if true, would constitute a violation of subsection (a) shall be imprisoned for not more than five years or fined not more than $25,000, or both.

"(3) Whoever willfully and maliciously imparts or conveys false information, knowing the information to be false that a household product as described in subsection (a) is or has been tainted shall be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined not more than $10,000 or both.

"(c) A violation of this section may be investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and by any other Federal agency which has investigative jurisdiction over such violation under title 21 of the United States Code.

"(d) A person has the intent required for an offense under this section if the person knows or has reason to know that the normal and usual consequence of the actual, attempted, planned, or threatened tampering would be to kill, injure, or otherwise endanger the health or safety of any person or to cause significant damage or injury to the business of an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other business entity.

"(e) As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'household product' means—

"(A) any food, drug, device, or cosmetic; or

"(B) any article, product, or commodity of any kind or class which is customarily produced or distributed for sale through retail sales agencies or instrumentalities for consumption by individuals, or use by individuals for purposes of personal care or in the performance of services ordinarily rendered within the household, and which usually is consumed or expended in the course of such consumption or use;

"(2) the term 'food' has the definition given such term in section 201(f) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(f)) and also includes 'meat food product' as such term in defined in section 2(j) of the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 601(j)), 'poultry' as such term is defined in section 4(e) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 453(e)), 'poultry product' as such term is defined in section 4(e) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 453(f)), 'egg product' as such term is defined in section 4(f), of the Egg Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 1033(f)), and 'egg' as such term is defined in section 4(g) of the Egg Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 1033(g));

"(3) the term 'drug' has the definition given such term in section 201(g)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(g)(1));

"(4) the term 'device' has the definition given such term in section 201(h) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(h));

"(5) the term 'cosmetic' has the definition given such term in section 201(i) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(i));

"(6) the term 'labeling' has the definition given such term in section 201(m) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(m)); and

"(7) the term 'serious bodily injury' means bodily injury to a person which involves—

"(A) a substantial risk of death;

"(B) extreme physical pain;

"(C) protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty.".

SEC. 3. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 65 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1365. Tampering with household products.".

SEC. 4. (a) The following new section shall be added to title 35 of the United States Code:

"§ 155A. Patent term restoration

"(a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 154, the term of each of the following patents shall be extended in accordance with this section:

"(1) Any patent which encompasses within its scope a composition of matter which is a new drug product, if during the regulatory review of the product by the Federal Food and Drug Administration—

"(A) the Federal Food and Drug Administration notified the patentee, by letter dated February 20, 1976, that such product's new drug application was not approvable under section 505(b)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act;

"(B) in 1977 the patentee submitted to the Federal Food and Drug Administration the results of a health effects test to evaluate the carcinogenic potential of such product;

"(C) the Federal Food and Drug Administration approved, by letter dated December 18, 1979, the new drug application for such product; and

"(D) the Federal Food and Drug Administration approved, by letter dated May 26, 1981, a supplementary application covering the facility for the production of such product; and

"(2) Any patent which encompasses within its scope a process for using the composition of matter described in paragraph (1).

"(b) The term of any patent described in subsection (a) shall be extended for a period equal to the period beginning February 20, 1976, and ending May 26, 1981 and such patent shall have the effect as if originally issued with such extended term.

"(c) The patentee of any patent described in subsection (a) shall, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this section, notify the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks of the number of any patent so extended. On receipt of such notice, the Commissioner shall confirm such extension by placing a notice thereof in the official file of such patent and publishing an appropriate notice of such extension in the Official Gazette of the Patent Trademark Office.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 14 of such title 35 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"155A. Patent term restoration.".

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. HUGHES

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. HUGHES: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Anti-Tampering Act".

SEC. 2. Chapter 65 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1365. Tampering with consumer products

"(a) Whoever, with reckless disregard for the risk that another person will be placed in danger of death or bodily injury and under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to such risk, tampers with any consumer product that affects interstate or foreign commerce, or the labeling of, or container for, any such product, or attempts to do so, shall—

"(1) in the case of an attempt, be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both;

"(2) if death of an individual results, be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned for any term of years or for life, or both;

"(3) if serious bodily injury to any individual results, be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both; and

"(4) in any other case, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(b) Whoever, with intent to cause serious injury to the business of any person, taints any consumer product or renders materially false or misleading the labeling of, or container for, a consumer product, if such consumer product affects interstate or foreign commerce, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

"(c)(1) Whoever knowingly communicates false information that a consumer product has been tainted, if such product or the results of such communication affect interstate or foreign commerce, and if such tainting, had it occurred, would create a risk of death or bodily injury to another person, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(2) As used in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the term 'communicates false information' means communicates information that is false and that the communicator knows is false, under circumstances in which the information may reasonably be expected to be believed.

"(d) Whoever knowingly threatens, under circumstances in which the threat may reasonably be expected to be believed, that conduct that, if it occurred, would violate subsection (a) of this section will occur, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(e) Whoever is a party to a conspiracy of two or more persons to commit an offense under subsection (a) of this section, if any of the parties intentionally engages in any conduct in furtherance of such offense, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(f) In addition to any other agency which has authority to investigate violations of this section, the Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Agriculture, respectively, have authority to investigate violations of this section involving a consumer product that is regulated by a provision of law such Administration or Department, as the case may be, administers.

"(g) As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'consumer product' means—

"(A) any 'food', 'drug', 'device', or 'cosmetic', as those terms are respectively defined in section 201 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321); or

"(B) any article, product, or commodity which is customarily produced or distributed for consumption by individiuals, or use by individuals for purposes of personal care or in the performance of services ordinarily rendered within the household, and which is designed to be consumed or expended in the course of such consumption or use;

"(2) the term 'labeling' has the meaning given such term in section 201(m) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(m));

"(3) the term 'serious bodily injury' means bodily injury which involves—

"(A) a substantial risk of death;

"(B) extreme physical pain;

"(C) protracted and obvious disfigurement; or

"(D) protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty; and

"(4) the term 'bodily injury' means—

"(A) a cut, abrasion, bruise, burn, or disfigurement;

"(B) physical pain;

"(C) illness;

"(D) impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty; or

"(E) any other injury to the body, no matter how temporary.".

SEC. 3. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 65 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1365. Tampering with consumer products.".

SEC. 4. (a) Title 35 of the United States Code is amended by inserting after section 155 the following new section:

"§ 155A. Patent term restoration

"(a) Notwithstanding section 154 of this title, the term of each of the following patents shall be extended in accordance with this section:

"(1) Any patent which encompasses within its scope a composition of matter which is a new drug product, if during the regulatory review of the product by the Federal Food and Drug Administration—

"(A) the Federal Food and Drug Administration notified the patentee, by letter dated February 20, 1976, that such product's new drug application was not approvable under section 505(b)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act;

"(B) in 1977 the patentee submitted to the Federal Food and Drug Administration the results of a health effects test to evaluate the carcinogenic potential of such product;

"(C) the Federal Food and Drug Administration approved, by letter dated December 18, 1979, the new drug application for such product; and

"(D) the Federal Food and Drug Administration approved, by letter dated May 26, 1981, a supplementary application covering the facility for the production of such product.

"(2) Any patent which encompasses within its scope a process for using the composition of matter described in paragraph (1).

"(b) The term of any patent described in subsection (a) shall be extended for a period equal to the period beginning February 20, 1976, and ending May 26, 1981, and such patent shall have the effect as if originally issued with such extended term.

"(c) The patentee of any patent described in subsection (a) of this section shall, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this section, notify the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks of the number of any patent so extended. On receipt of such notice, the Commissioner shall confirm such extension by placing a notice thereof in the official file of such patent and publishing an appropriate notice of such extension in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office.".

"155A. Patent term restoration.".

Mr. HUGHES (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring before you the so-called antitampering bill, which will protect the consumers of this country from foods, drugs, cosmetics, and medical devices that have been tampered with. A year ago today, as I'm sure you all recall, the first of 7 people in the Chicago area died when they took a pain killer laced with cyanide. Since that time, the Congress has been engaged in a surprisingly difficult effort to draft legislation that will protect consumers from such occurrences and punish those who perpetrate such crimes. In fact, last December both Houses of Congress passed such a bill as part of a general crime package. Unfortunately, the entire package was vetoed by the President, and the Congress was forced to begin anew the process of drafting a bill that is satisfactory to all concerned. I believe that S. 216, with the amendments I am proposing, is that bill.

Last May, the House passed H.R. 2174 by a unanimous vote. That bill is the basis for the amendment to the Senate bill that I offer today. Its provisions are described in House Report 98-93. A few changes have been made, many of them technical or stylistic. For example, while H.R. 2174 as passed by the House required that the defendant "knowingly" tamper with certain products, the amendment deletes the word "knowingly." No substantive change is intended by the deletion of "knowingly." The change simply conforms the bill to the general drafting convention of title 18 of the United States Code. Title 18 generally does not explicitly set forth the state of mind required for an offense. Where it is not explicitly set forth, the state of mind required is "knowingly." This amendment therefore conforms the bill to that general drafting convention.

In addition, while H.R. 2174 used the term "covered" product to describe the products whose tampering the bill proscribes, the amendment uses the term "consumer" product. This change emphasized that the bill is designed to protect consumers. That is its primary focus and, with one basic exception which I will describe in a moment, that is what the bill does.

The amendment makes 3 significant substantive changes in H.R. 2174 as passed by the House. The first creates a new subsection (b), and relates to protection of a business that is the victim of a tampering or other tainting. New subsection (b) punishes both a person who, with the requisite intent, "taints" any consumer product and one who renders "materially false or misleading the labeling of, or container for, a consumer product." The amendment is narrowly drawn: A defendant may be convicted of this offense only if he or she acts "with intent to cause serious injury" to the business. The defendant need not, however, commit conduct that poses a risk to human safety. While there was significant debate about whether this bill should proscribe such conduct since, as I have noted, the bill is primarily designed to protect consumers, it is clear that in many cases, the results of such conduct are the same as when a tampering with risk to human safety occurs. Consumer confidence may be impaired if word gets out that a product is tainted. Also, the tainting may spawn copycat taintings that may cause risk to human safety, even if the original tainting did not.

Subsection (b) requires that the defendant intend that serious injury to a business result. The requirement of materiality insures, as does the requirement that the defendant intend serious injury to a business, that the defendant's actions do not simply constitute mild or insignificant harrassment. Thus in general the subsection will cover those instances where the business sustains significant financial loss, as from a major recall, or significant damage to its good will through loss of consumer confidence in the product.

The maximum penalty for violating new subsection (b)—3 years in prison and a $10,000 fine—reflects the fact that the defendant's conduct may not pose a risk to human safety. The penalty is considerably lower than for a violation of subsection (a), which does require that the defendant's conduct create a risk to human safety. Under subsection (a), A defendant may be sentenced to up to life in prison if death results from the tampering.

The second change, which is closely related to the first, concerns false claims that a product has been tainted in a way that would cause death or serious bodily injury. Concern was expressed that the false claims section of H.R. 2174 left a loophole in its coverage. A person who falsely claimed that a product had been tainted, but who did not allege that it had been tampered with in a manner that would violate subsection (a), would not have been liable under subsection (c) of H.R. 2174. The effect on the business and on consumer confidence will in all likelihood be the same as when a claim of tampering has been made—a false claim that a product has been tainted could lead a company to institute a major recall and could cause consumers legitimate reluctance to buy needed products. The new language therefore broadens the false claims section somewhat, to insure that claims involving tainting are prohibited. The section is, however, still narrowly drawn, so that only those false claims that cause a significant disruption are covered. The claim of tainting must be of such a nature that it creates serious and justifiable concerns of a risk of death or bodily injury to another person. False claims that a product has been tainted in insignificant ways that would not create such risks are not prohibited by subsection (c). The clearest example of a false claim that is not covered by new subsection (c) is that milk has somehow been tainted by a harmless red dye, which makes the milk unpalatable to the taste and displeasing to the eye, but in no way dangerous to another human being.

Thus, the new false claims section is carefully drafted to exclude coverage of disgruntled consumers who defame a company or its products, or who complain about products that are not satisfactory to them, but whose claims, if true, would not cause a risk of death or bodily injury. A consumer who grumbles that a particular hamburger is made with horsemeat, even if that consumer knows that the claim is false, and makes the claim with the intent to destroy the reputation of the company, or the confidence of consumers in it, is not liable under new subsection (c) because horsemeat in hamburgers will not cause a risk of death or bodily injury.

An example of a false claim that would, in appropriate circumstances, be covered by new subsection (c) is that a can of tuna is infected with botulism. Pursuant to paragraph (c)(1), such a claim would be covered if the person knows that the information is false and if the information is in fact false. In addition, the false claim must be made under circumstances in which the information may reasonably be expected to be believed. A more detailed explanation of these limiting provisions is provided in the report accompanying H.R. 2174.

"Tainting," as used in both subsections (b) and (c), is a new term in the House bill. It is broader than the concept of "tampering," as used in subsection (a). "Tampering" requires affirmative human conduct that changes the nature of the product, in a manner that causes a risk of death or bodily injury. "Tainting," as described in the Senate Report on S. 216, means "to modify with a trace of something offensive or deleterious, or to infect, contaminate, or corrupt * * * such an 'offensive' or 'contaminating' result would be the addition of an unsightly or nauseating substance, as well as a dangerous substance."

The third change, the so-called "Airco amendment," extends Airco's patent term on a new drug. Airco was entitled to a patent for the period beginning February 20, 1976, but the Federal Food and Drug Administration, acting on erroneous information, rejected its patent application. The error was not corrected until May 26, 1981. The amendment extends Airco's patent term for the amount of time the application had been erroneously rejected.

I believe that the changes made in H.R. 2174 are good ones. They cover conduct that has caused great concern to a number of people who have commented on the anti-tampering legislation. The changes clarify that such conduct is prohibited by the law, but they are drafted to insure that they do not prohibit legitimate conduct, or conduct that should not be dealt with by the Federal criminal law. As every day goes by without an anti-tampering bill, and as halloween approaches once again, the risk increases of an occurrence such as the one in Chicago last year. It is important to the consumers of this country that an anti-tampering bill be passed now. I urge your support for this bill.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment.

This rather fittingly, on the eve of Halloween where a lot of these problems are apt to occur, is being brought to the House. It is the first crime bill that we have had from our subcommittee get to the floor, although we have five others in float between the Senate and the full committee and expect to bring more. But this one has come up very timely since this is the anniversary of the first death of the Chicago Tylenol victims of tampering. And it is certainly aimed at the sick minds and methods of people who would wreak terror on whole communities, killing people and injuring people whom they do not even know, destroying or badly damaging the reputations of fine companies, and shaking the confidence of people in products they buy with reputable names and from reputable sources.

Seven Chicago victims were lost through the kind of activity which is brought within the scope of this bill. And it is unbelievable that people would engage in this kind of terrorism and it certainly calls for swift and stringent legislation which this product represents.

The penalties are severe on only threats or false claims up to 10 years with heavy fines, $50,000 fines where injuries occur and up to 20 years in prison, and if death results, $100,000 fine and any term of years including life.

The chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Chairman HUGHES of the Subcommittee on Crime and myself have cosponsored this bill and were able to, I think, put together a joint bill compromising points of differences into a very strong and very effective bill that will enable people to walk out of grocery stores and drugstores with confidence that what they have bought is what they intended and is safe to consume. And will continue what I think is a very appropriate monopoly of terror on Halloween in the little ghosts and goblins and not in some crackpots that do the kind of things that brought about this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there is one point of clarification that I wish to make with regard to the provisions of the Federal Anti-Tampering Act for the purpose of establishing legislative history. I took a personal interest in insuring that the new law adequately encompassed those products that consumers purchased with particular reliance on safety. To define "food," "drug," "device," and "cosmetic," the subcommittee relied on the definition now contained in section 201 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321). The subcommittee language is now part of the definition of the term "consumer product" in the Federal Anti-Tampering Act. Title 21, United States Code, section 321(f) states: "The term food means: First articles used for 'food' or drink for man or other animals; second, chewing gum: and third, articles used for components of any such article." Some persons raised the concern that the plain language of subsection (f) would be read as modified by other limiting sections within the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. For the record, I wish to clarify that it has been our intention and remains our understanding that, for the purposes of the Federal Anti-Tampering Act, the term "food" is defined by the plain language of 21 U.S.C. 321(f), and subsection 321(f) should not be modified by any other section. We intend to incorporate the discussion and all of the foods listed in the Senate Report 98-69 as well.

In addition to this specific comment, I concur with the remarks of Chairman HUGHES regarding the Federal Anti-Tampering Act.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER) for a very important bill and a bill that I am pleased to say that I am a cosponsor of.

It is pitiful to think that this country needs a bill, but the awful activity of 1 year ago certainly bears proof that this is exactly what this country needs.

This is a most important bill and I think on a very sad day, a very sad anniversary, is a very appropriate time for this Congress to take action to see what we can do to see that this never happens again.

I vigorously support this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to rise in support of this bill. This is something that I think is most important and most needed. The fact that it is not in the headlines today does not mean that this is not happening today. It is happening. There are isolated incidents, but nevertheless they are happening. And the particular incidents which happened last year could be repeated.

I commend the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES), the chairman of the subcommittee and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER), both of whom I have the pleasure of serving with on the subcommittee, for their interest and efforts on behalf of this bill. I am proud to be a cosponsor.

I urge all my colleagues to vote for this. This is something that needs to be placed in the law and needs to be placed in the law now.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say in closing that a great deal of work went into the bill and I want to commend in particular, the gentleman from Michigan, HAL SAWYER, the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Crime, for his outstanding work; the gentleman from Florida, CLAY SHAW, and the gentleman from Florida, LARRY SMITH, for their efforts; our colleague in the other body, Senator THURMOND, whose work was essential, and finally, the gentleman from New Jersey, PETER RODINO, the chairman of the full committee and the gentleman from New York, HAM FISH, the ranking Republican, who were all extremely helpful in securing passage of this important legislation.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous matter on the Senate bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to prohibit certain tampering with consumer products, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPORT ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1983

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 297 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3231.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3231) to amend the authorities contained in the Export Administration Act of 1979, and for other purposes, with Mr. SEIBERLING in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Monday, September 26, 1983, all time for general debate on the bill had expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the text of H.R. 3646 shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule, and each title shall be considered as having been read. It shall be in order to consider an amendment to section 109 of said substitute consisting of the text of the amendment recommended by the Committee on Armed Services printed in H.R. 3231.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 reads as follows:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. Titles I and II of this Act may be cited as the "Export Administration Amendments Act of 1983".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1?

If not, the Clerk will designate title I.

The text of title I reads as follows:

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1979

REFERENCE TO THE ACT

SEC. 101. For purposes of this title, the Export Administration Act of 1979 shall be referred to as "the Act".

VIOLATIONS

SEC. 102. (a) Section 11(b) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2410(b)) is amended by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraphs:

"(3) Any person who conspires or attempts to export anything contrary to any provision of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued under this Act shall be subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a), except that in the case of a violation of an export control imposed under section 5 of this Act, such person shall be subject to the penalties set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(4) Any person who possesses any goods or technology—

"(A) with the intent to export such goods or technology in violation of an export control imposed under section 5 or 6 of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued with respect to such control; or shall, in the case of a violation of an export control imposed under section 5, be subject to the penalties set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection and shall, in the case of a violation of an export control imposed under section 6, be subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a).

"(B) knowing or having reason to believe that the goods or technology would be so exported;

"(5) Any person who takes any action with the intent to evade the provisions of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued under this Act shall be subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a), except that in the case of an evasion of a foreign policy or national security control, such person shall be subject to the penalties set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

(b) Section 11(c) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) An exception to any order issued under this Act which revokes the authority of a United States person to export goods or technology may not be made unless the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate are first consulted concerning the exception.".

(c) Section 11(e) of the Act is amended by inserting "or any property interest or proceeds forfeited pursuant to subsection (f)" after "subsection (c)".

(d) Section 11 of the Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (f) and (g) as subsections (g) and (h), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) FORFEITURE OF PROPERTY INTEREST AND PROCEEDS.—Any person who is convicted of a violation of an export control imposed under section 5 of this Act shall, in addition to any other penalty, forfeit to the United States (1) any property interest that person has in the goods or technology that were the subject of the violation or that were used to facilitate the commission of the violation, and (2) any proceeds derived directly or indirectly by that person from the transaction from which the violation arose.".

(e) Section 11(h) of the Act, as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended by striking out "or (f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(f), or (g)".

ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 103. Section 12(a) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2411(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately before the first sentence; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The Secretary may designate any officer or employee of the Department of Commerce to do the following in carrying out enforcement authorities under this Act:

"(A) Execute any warrant or other process issued by a court or officer of competent jurisdiction with respect to the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.

"(B) Make arrests without warrant for any violation of this Act committed in his or her presence or view, or if the officer or employee has probable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing such a violation.

"(C) Search without warrant or process any person, place, or vehicle on which, and any baggage in which, the officer or employee has probable cause to believe there are goods or technology being exported or about to be exported in violation of this Act.

"(D) Seize without warrant or process any goods or technology which the officer or employee has probable cause to believe have been, are being, or are about to be exported in violation of this Act.

"(E) Carry firearms in carrying out any activity described in subparagraphs (A) through (D).

"(3)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the authority of customs officers with respect to violations of this Act shall be limited to (i) inspection of or other search for and detention and seizure of goods or technology at those places in which such officers are authorized by law to conduct such searches, detentions, and seizures, and (ii) any investigation conducted prior to such inspection, search, detention, or seizure. Upon seizure by any customs officer of any goods or technology in the enforcement of this Act, the matter shall be referred to the Department of Commerce for further investigation and other appropriate action under this Act.

"(B) In conducting inspections of goods and technology in the enforcement of this Act, the United States Customs Service shall limit those inspections to goods and technology with respect to which the Customs Service has received specific information of possible violations of this Act, and shall not conduct random inspections which would result in the detainment of shipments of goods or technology that are in full compliance with this Act.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, not more than $14,000,000 may be expended by the United States Customs Service in any fiscal year in the enforcement of export controls.

"(4) All provisions of law relating to the seizure, forfeiture, and condemnation of articles for violations of the customs laws, the disposition of such articles or the proceeds from the sale thereof, and the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures, shall apply to the seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under the provisions of this subsection or section 11(f) of this Act, insofar as such provisions of law are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subsection or section 11(f) of this Act; except that all powers, rights, and duties conferred or imposed by the customs laws upon any officer or employee of the Department of the Treasury shall, for the purposes of this subsection and section 11(f) of this Act, be exercised or performed by the Secretary or by such persons as the Secretary may designate.".

FINDINGS; DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 104. (a)(1) Section 2 of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2401) is amended in paragraph (3) by striking out "which would strengthen the Nation's economy" and inserting in lieu thereof "consistent with the economic, security, and foreign policy objectives of the United States".

(2) Section 2 of the Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(10) It is important that the administration of export controls imposed for foreign policy purposes give special emphasis to the need to control exports of goods and substances hazardous to the public health and the environment that are banned or severely restricted for use in the United States, which exports could affect the international reputation of the United States as a responsible trading partner.".

(b) Section 3 of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2402) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(12) It is the policy of the United States to sustain vigorous scientific enterprise. To do so requires protecting the ability of scientists and other scholars freely to communicate their research findings by means of publication, teaching, conferences, and other forms of scholarly exchange.

"(13) It is the policy of the United States to control the export of goods and substances banned or severely restricted for use in the United States in order to foster public health and safety and to prevent injury to the foreign policy of the United States as well as the credibility of the United States as a responsible trading partner.".

TYPES OF LICENSES

SEC. 105. Section 4(a)(2) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2403(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Licenses authorizing multiple exports, issued pursuant to an application by the exporter, in lieu of a validated license for each such export, including but not limited to the following:

"(A) A qualified general license, authorizing exports of goods for approved end uses.

"(B) A distribution license, authorizing exports of goods to approved distributors or users of the goods.

"(C) A project license, authorizing exports of goods or technology for a specified activity.

"(D) A service supply license, authorizing exports of spare or replacement parts for goods previously exported.

"(E) A comprehensive operations license, authorizing exports of goods or technology between and among a domestic concern and foreign subsidiaries, affiliates, vendors, joint venturers, and licensees of that concern which are approved by the Secretary.".

NATIONAL SECURITY CONTROLS

SEC. 106. (a) Section 5(a)(1) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App 2404(a)(1)) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The authority contained in this subsection includes the authority to prohibit or curtail the transfer of goods or technology within the United States to embassies and affiliates of countries to which exports of such goods or technology are controlled under this section.".

(b) Section 5(b) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No authority or permission to export may be required under this section before goods or technology are exported in the case of exports to a country which maintains export controls on such goods or technology cooperatively with the United States, except that the Secretary may require an export license for the export of such goods or technology to such end users as the Secretary may specify by regulation. The Secretary may also by regulation require any person exporting any such goods or technology otherwise subject to export controls under this section to notify the Department of Commerce of those exports.".

(c) Section 5(e) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(5) The export of technology and related goods subject to export controls under this section, including items on the list of militarily critical technologies developed pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, shall be eligible for a comprehensive operations license which would authorize, over a period of years and to countries other than those described in section 620(f) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, multiple exports and reexports between and among a domestic concern and foreign subsidiaries, affiliates, vendors, joint venturers, and licensees of that concern which are approved by the Secretary.

"(6) The export to countries other than those described in section 620(f) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 of goods and technology subject to export controls under this section shall be eligible for a distribution license or other licenses authorizing multiple exports. The Secretary shall periodically monitor exports made pursuant to such licenses in order to insure compliance with the provisions of this Act.".

(1) in the second sentence by striking out "by the latest such increase" and inserting in lieu thereof "by the regulations"; and

(2) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "The regulations issued by the Secretary shall establish as one criterion for the removal of goods or technology from such license requirements the anticipated needs of the military of countries to which exports are controlled for national security purposes.".

(e) Section 5(k) of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting ", including those countries not participating in the group known as the Coordinating Committee," after "other countries"; and

(2) by striking out "section 3(9)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (9) and (10) of section 3".

(f) Section 5 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(m) REMOVAL OF CERTAIN CONTROLS.—(1) In any case in which, during any 1-year period in which export license applications have been filed for the export of a good subject to an export control under this section, all such license applications have been approved to a country group, the Secretary shall, at the end of that 1-year period, remove the export control on exports of that good to that country group, except that the Secretary may require an export license for the export of that good to such end users in that country group as the Secretary may specify by regulation.

"(2) This subsection shall not apply to export controls which the United States maintains cooperatively with any other country.

"(n) GOODS CONTAINING MICROPROCESSORS.—Export controls may not be imposed under this section on a good solely on the basis that the good contains an embedded microprocessor, if such microprocessor cannot be used or altered to perform functions other than those it performs in the good in which it is embedded. An export control may be imposed under this section on a good containing such a microprocessor only on the basis that the functions of the good itself are such that the good, if exported, would make a significant contribution to the military potential of any other country or combination of countries which would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States.".

COORDINATING COMMITTEE

SEC. 107. Section 5(i) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(i)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(5) Agreement to improve the International Control List and minimize the approval of exceptions to that list, strengthen enforcement and cooperation in enforcement efforts, provide sufficient funding for the Committee, and improve the structure and function of the Secretariat of the Committee by upgrading professional staff, translation services, data base maintenance, communications, and facilities.

"(6) Agreement to strengthen the Committee so that it functions effectively in controlling export trade in a manner that better protects the national security of each participant to the benefit of all participants.".

FOREIGN AVAILABILITY

SEC. 108. (a) Section 5(f)(4) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(f)(4)) is amended by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In any case in which export controls are maintained under this section notwithstanding foreign availability, on account of a determination by the President that the absence of the controls would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States, the President shall take the necessary steps to conduct negotiations with the governments of the appropriate foreign countries for the purpose of eliminating such availability. If, within 6 months after the President's determination, the foreign availability has not been eliminated, the Secretary may not, after the end of that 6-month period, require a validated license for the export of the goods or technology involved.".

(b) Section 5(f)(3) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(3) With respect to export controls imposed under this section, in making any determination of foreign availability, the Secretary shall accept the representations of applicants unless such representations are contradicted by reliable evidence, including scientific or physical examination, expert opinion based upon adequate factual information, and intelligence information.".

(c)(1) Section 5(f)(5) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(5) The Secretary shall establish in the Department of Commerce an Office of Foreign Availability which shall be under the direction of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Trade Administration. The Office shall be responsible for gathering and analyzing all the necessary information in order for the Secretary to make determinations of foreign availability under this Act. The Secretary shall make available to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate at the end of each 6-month period during a fiscal year information on the operations of the Office during that 6-month period. Such information shall include a description of every determination made under this Act during that 6-month period that foreign availability did not exist, together with an explanation of that determination.".

(2) Section 5(f)(6) of the Act is amended by striking out "Office of Export Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "Office of Foreign Availability".

(d) Section 5(f) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) The Secretary shall issue regulations with respect to determinations of foreign availability under this Act not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1983.".

(e) Section 5(h)(6) of the Act is amended by striking out "and provides adequate documentation" and all that follows through the end of the paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the technical advisory committee shall submit that certification to the Congress at the same time the certification is made to the Secretary, together with the documentation for the certification, in accordance with the procedures established pursuant to subsection (f)(1) of this section. The Secretary shall investigate the foreign availability so certified and, not later than 90 days after the certification is made, shall submit a report to the technical advisory committee and the Congress stating that (A) the Secretary has removed the requirement of a validated license for the export of the goods or technology, on account of the foreign availability, (B) the Secretary has recommended to the President that negotiations be conducted to eliminate the foreign availability, or (C) the Secretary has determined on the basis of the investigation that the foreign availability does not exist. To the extent necessary, the report may be submitted on a classified basis. In any case in which the Secretary has recommended to the President that negotiations be conducted to eliminate the foreign availability, the President shall take the necessary steps to conduct such negotiations with the governments of the appropriate foreign countries. If, within 6 months after the Secretary submits such report to the Congress, the foreign availability has not been eliminated, the Secretary may not, after the end of that 6-month period, require a validated license for the export of the goods or technology involved.".

MILITARILY CRITICAL TECHNOLOGIES

SEC. 109. Section 5(d) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(d)) is amended by striking out paragraphs (4) through (6) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(4)(A) The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall complete the integration of the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list not later than April 1, 1985. The integration of the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list shall be completed with all deliberate speed, and the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall report to the appropriate committees of the Congress, before April 1, 1985, any circumstances which would preclude the completion of the integrated list by that date. Such integrated list shall include only a good or technology with respect to which the Secretary finds that countries to which exports are controlled under this section do not possess that good or technology, or a similar good or technology, and the good or technology or similar good or technology is not available in fact to such a country from sources outside the United States in sufficient quantity and of sufficient quality so that the requirement of a validated license for the export of such good or technology is or would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section, except in the case of a determination of the President with respect to goods or technology under subsection (f)(1) of this section. The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall jointly submit a report to the Congress, not later than April 1, 1985, on actions taken to carry out this subparagraph. In any case in which it is determined that a good or technology should be included on the commodity control list completed pursuant to this subparagraph notwithstanding foreign availability, the report to Congress shall specify why inclusion of that good or technology would significantly benefit United States military or national security.

"(B) The General Accounting Office shall evaluate the efforts of the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense to integrate the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list, and the feasibility of such integration. In conducting such evaluation, the General Accounting Office shall determine whether foreign availability was used as a criterion in developing the commodity control list pursuant to subparagraph (A) and whether the completed list reflected the intent of the Congress in enacting this subsection. In conducting such evaluation, the General Accounting Office shall have access to all information relating to the list of militarily critical technologies, and representatives of the General Accounting Office designated by the Comptroller General may attend any meetings held in the executive branch with respect to such list. The appropriate officers or employees shall notify the General Accounting Office of when and where any such meeting will be held. Not later than April 1, 1985, the General Accounting Office shall submit a detailed report to the Congress on the results of the evaluation conducted pursuant to this subparagraph.

"(C) The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense, in completing the commodity control list pursuant to subparagraph (A), and the General Accounting Office, in conducting the evaluation pursuant to subparagraph (B), shall consider mechanisms to reduce significantly the list of militarily critical technologies, including evaluating for possible removal from the list those goods or technology which are in one or more of the following categories:

"(i) Goods and technology the transfer of which would not lead to a significant near-term improvement in the defense capability of a country to which exports are controlled under this section.

"(ii) A technology that is evolving slowly.

"(iii) Technology that is not process-oriented.

"(iv) Components used in militarily sensitive devices that in themselves are not sensitive.

"(D) The reports submitted pursuant to subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall each include the results of the evaluation of the goods and technology set forth in subparagraph (C) and an evaluation of the feasibility of effectively imposing export controls on technologies as opposed to goods which are the products of those technologies.".

CRITERIA FOR FOREIGN POLICY CONTROLS; CONSULTATION WITH OTHER COUNTRIES; REPORT TO CONGRESS

SEC. 110. (a) Section 6(b) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) CRITERIA.—When imposing, expanding, or extending export controls on goods or technology under this section, the President shall consider whether—

"(1) the intended foreign policy purposes of the proposed controls can be achieved through negotiations or other alternative means;

"(2) the proposed controls are compatible with the foreign policy objectives of the United States and with overall United States policy toward the country to which exports are to be subject to the proposed controls;

"(3) the proposed controls will have an adverse effect on the economic or political relations of the United States with other friendly countries;

"(4) the proposed controls will have a substantial adverse effect on the export performance of the United States, on the competitive position of the United States in the international economy, on the international reputation of the United States as a reliable supplier of goods and technology, or on the economic well-being of individual United States industries, companies, and their employees and communities;

"(5) the United States has the ability to enforce the proposed controls effectively;

"(6) the proposed controls are likely to achieve the intended foreign policy purpose; and

"(7)(A) the good or technology, or a similar good or technology, is available in sufficient quantity from sources outside the United States to the country to which exports are to be subject to the proposed controls, or (B) negotiations have been successfully concluded with the appropriate foreign governments to ensure the cooperation of such governments in controlling the export of such good or technology to the country to which exports are to be subject to the proposed controls, except that the preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply if the President determines that the proposed controls are necessary to further efforts by the United States to counter international terrorism or to promote observance of internationally recognized human rights.".

(b) Section 6 of the Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (d) through (k) as subsections (e) through (l), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) CONSULTATION WITH OTHER COUNTRIES.—Before export controls are imposed under this section, the President should consult with the countries with which the United States maintains export controls cooperatively, and with such other countries as the President considers appropriate, with respect to the criteria set forth in subsection (b) and such other matters as the President considers appropriate.".

(c) Section 6(f) of the Act, as redesignated by subsection (b)(1) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(f) CONSULTATION WITH THE CONGRESS.—(1) The President may impose, expand, or extend export controls under this section only after consultation with the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate.

"(2) Following consultation with the Congress in accordance with paragraph (1) and before imposing, expanding, or extending export controls under this section, the President shall submit to the Congress a report—

"(A) indicating how the proposed export controls will further, significantly, the foreign policy of the United States or will further its declared international obligations;

"(B) specifying the conclusions of the President with respect to each of the criteria set forth in subsection (b), and any possible adverse foreign policy consequences;

"(C) describing the nature, the subjects, and the results of the consultation with industry pursuant to subsection (c) and with other countries pursuant to subsection (d);

"(D) specifying the nature and results of any alternative means attempted under subsection (e), or the reasons for imposing, expanding, or extending the controls without attempting any such alternative means; and

"(E) describing the availability from other countries of goods or technology comparable to the goods or technology subject to the proposed export controls, and describing the nature and results of the efforts made pursuant to subsection (h) to secure the cooperation of foreign governments in controlling the foreign availability of such comparable goods or technology.

The concerns expressed by Members of Congress during the consultations required by this subsection shall be specifically addressed in each report submitted pursuant to this paragraph.

"(3) To the extent necessary to further the effectiveness of the export controls, portions of a report required by paragraph (2) may be submitted to the Congress on a classified basis, and shall be subject to the provisions of section 12(c) of this Act.

"(4) In the case of export controls under this section which prohibit or curtail the export of any agricultural commodity, a report submitted pursuant to paragraph (2) shall be deemed to be the report required by section 7(g)(3) of this Act.".

(d) Section 6(i) of the Act, as redesignated by subsection (b)(1) of this section, is amended by striking out "(f), and (g)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(e), (g), and (h)".

EFFECT OF CONTROLS ON EXISTING CONTRACTS AND LICENSES

SEC. 111. (a) Section 6 of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405), as amended by section 110 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m) EFFECT OF CONTROLS ON EXISTING CONTRACTS AND LICENSES.—Any export controls imposed under this section shall not affect any contract to export entered into before the date on which such controls are imposed or any export license issued under this Act before such date. The preceding sentence shall not apply in a case in which the export controls imposed relate directly, immediately, and significantly to actual or imminent acts of aggression or of international terrorism, to actual or imminent gross violations of internationally recognized human rights, or to actual or imminent nuclear weapons tests, in which case the President shall promptly notify the Congress of the circumstances to which the export controls relate and of the contracts or licenses affected by the controls. Any export controls described in the preceding sentence shall affect existing contracts and licenses only so long as the acts of aggression or terrorism, violations of human rights, or nuclear weapons tests continue or remain imminent. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'contract to export' includes, but is not limited to, an export sales agreement and an agreement to invest in an enterprise which involves the export of goods or technology.".

(b) Section 7 of the Act (50 App. 2406) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) EFFECT OF CONTROLS ON EXISTING CONTRACTS.—Any export controls imposed under this section shall not affect any contract to export entered into before the date on which such controls are imposed, including any contract to harvest unprocessed western red cedar (as defined in subsection (i)(4) of this section) from State lands, the performance of which contract would make the red cedar available for export. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'contract to export' includes, but is not limited to, an export sales agreement and an agreement to invest in an enterprise which involves the export of goods or technology.".

(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall not apply to export controls imposed before the date of the enactment of this Act. The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to export controls in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act and export controls imposed after such date.

EXEMPTION FROM FOREIGN POLICY CONTROLS

SEC. 112. Section 6(g) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(g)), as redesignated by section 110(b)(1) of this Act, is amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "This section also does not authorize export controls on donations of goods, such as food and clothing, intended to be used to relieve human suffering."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "The President may impose export controls under this section on medicine, medical supplies, food, and donations of goods without regard to the other provisions of this subsection in order to carry out the policy set forth in paragraph (13) of section 3 of this Act.".

FOREIGN POLICY CONTROLS AUTHORITY

SEC. 113. (a) The first sentence of section 6(a)(1) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows: "In order to carry out the policy set forth in paragraph (2)(B), (7), (8), or (13) of section 3 of this Act, the President may prohibit or curtail the exportation from the United States of any goods, technology, or other information produced in the United States, to the extent necessary to further significantly the foreign policy of the United States or to fulfill its declared international obligations.".

(b) Section 6(a) of the Act is further amended by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (4) as paragraphs (3) through (5), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Any export control imposed under this section shall apply to any transaction or activity undertaken with the intent to evade that export control, even if that export control would not otherwise apply to that transaction or activity.".

(c) Section 6 of the Act, as amended by sections 110 and 111 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(n) EXPANDED AUTHORITY TO IMPOSE CONTROLS.—(1) In any case in which the President determines that it is necessary to impose controls under this section—

"(A) with respect to goods, technology, other information, or persons other than that authorized by subsection (a)(1) of this section; or

"(B) without any limitation contained in subsection (c), (d), (e), (g), (h), or (m) of this section, the President may impose those controls only if the President submits that determination to the Congress, together with a report pursuant to subsection (f) of this section with respect to the proposed controls, and only if a law is enacted authorizing the imposition of those controls. If a joint resolution authorizing the imposition of those controls is introduced in either House of Congress within 30 days of continuous session after the Congress receives the determination and report of the President, that joint resolution shall immediately be referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives. If either such committee has not reported the joint resolution at the end of 30 days of continuous session after its referral, such committee shall be deemed to be discharged from further consideration of the resolution.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'joint resolution' means a joint resolution the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That the Congress, having received on a determination of the President under section 6(n)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 with respect to the export controls which are set forth in the report submitted to the Congress with that determination, authorizes the President to impose those export controls.', with the date of the receipt of the determination and report inserted in the blank.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of the Congress sine die, and

"(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain are excluded in the computation of any period of time in which Congress is in continuous session.".

(d) The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section shall not apply to export controls imposed under section 6 of the Act before the date of the enactment of this Act which are extended in accordance with such section 6 on or after such date of enactment.

CRIME CONTROL INSTRUMENTS

SEC. 114. (a) Section 6(k)(1) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(k)(1)), as redesignated by section 110(b)(1) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, any determination of the Secretary—

"(A) of what goods or technology shall be included on the list established pursuant to subsection (l) of this section as a result of the export restrictions imposed by this subsection shall be made with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, or

"(B) to approve or deny an export license application to export crime control or detection instruments or equipment shall be made in concurrence with the recommendations of the Secretary of State submitted to the Secretary with respect to the application pursuant to section 10(e) of this Act, except that if the Secretary does not agree with the Secretary of State with respect to any such determination, the matter shall be referred to the President for resolution.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to determinations of the Secretary of Commerce which are made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

REIMPOSITION OF EXPORT CONTROLS

SEC. 115. (a) Section 6 of the Act, as amended by sections 110, 111, and 113 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o) EXTENSION OF CERTAIN CONTROLS.—Those export controls imposed under this section which were in effect on February 28, 1982, and ceased to be effective on March 1, 1982, September 15, 1982, or January 20, 1983 (except those controls with respect to the 1980 summer Olympic games), shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this subsection, and shall remain in effect until 1 year after such date of enactment. At the end of that 1-year period, any of those controls made effective by this subsection may be extended by the President in accordance with subsections (b) and (f) of this section.".

(b) Section 6(j) of the Act, as redesignated by section 110(b)(1) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any such determination which has been made with respect to a country may not be rescinded unless the President first submits to the Congress a report justifying the rescission and certifying that the country concerned has not provided support for international terrorism, including support for groups engaged in such terrorism, for the preceding 12-month period.".

(c) The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply with respect to any export control made effective by the amendment made by subsection (a).

PETITIONS FOR SHORT SUPPLY CONTROLS

SEC. 116. (a) Section 7(c)(1)(A) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(c)(1)(A)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) PETITIONS FOR MONITORING OR CONTROLS.—(1)(A) Any entity, including a trade association, firm, or certified or recognized union or group of workers, which is representative of an industry or a substantial segment of an industry which processes metallic materials capable of being recycled (i) with respect to which an increase in domestic prices or a domestic shortage, either of which results from increased exports, is or may be a substantial cause of adverse effect on the national economy or any sector thereof or on a domestic industry, and (ii) with respect to which a significant increase in exports is or may be a substantial cause of adverse effect on the national economy or any sector thereof or on a domestic industry, may transmit a written petition to the Secretary requesting the monitoring of exports or the imposition of export controls, or both, with respect to such material, in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act.".

(b) Section 7(c)(1)(B) of the Act is amended—

(1) in clause (i) by striking out "and" after "supply,"; and

(2) by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof ", and (iii) that the criteria set forth in paragraph (3)(A) of this subsection are satisfied.".

(c) Section 7(c)(1) of the Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(C)(i) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'substantial cause' means a cause which is important and not less than any other cause.

"(ii) Before March 1, 1984, the Secretary shall issue regulations, in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, which define the operative terms contained in section 3(2)(C) of this Act and in this subsection, including but not limited to the following: 'excessive drain', 'scarce materials', 'serious inflationary impact of foreign demand', 'domestic shortage', 'increase in domestic prices' and 'increase in the domestic price', 'representative of an industry or a substantial segment of an industry', 'domestic industry', 'specific period of time', 'national economy or any sector thereof', 'significant increase in exports', and 'adverse effect'.".

(d) Section 7(c)(3) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) Within 45 days after the end of the 30-day or 45-day period described in paragraph (2), as the case may be, the Secretary shall determine whether to impose monitoring or controls, or both, on the export of the material which is the subject of the petition, in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act. In making such determination, the Secretary shall determine whether—

"(i) there has been a significant increase, in relation to a specific period of time, in exports of such material;

"(ii) there has been a significant increase in the domestic price of such material or a domestic shortage of such material and exports are a substantial cause of such domestic price increase or domestic shortage;

"(iii) exports of such material are or may be a substantial cause of adverse effect on the national economy or any sector thereof or on a domestic industry; and

"(iv) monitoring or controls or both are necessary in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act.

"(B) The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a detailed statement of the reasons for the Secretary's determination pursuant to subparagraph (A) of whether to impose monitoring or controls, or both, including the findings of fact in support of that determination.".

(e) Section 7(c)(6) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) If a petition with respect to a particular material or group of materials has been considered in accordance with all the procedures prescribed in this subsection, the Secretary shall not consider any other petition with respect to the same material or group of materials which is filed within 6 months after final action on the prior petition has been completed.".

(f) Section 7(c) of the Act is further amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (8) and redesignating paragraphs (9) and (10) as paragraphs (8) and (9), respectively;

(2) by amending paragraph (8), as redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection, to read as follows:

"(8) The authority under this subsection shall not be construed to affect the authority of the Secretary under any provision of this Act other than this section."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(10) Notwithstanding subsection (a) or (b) of this section, no action in response to an informal or formal request by any entity described in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection to impose controls on or monitor the export of metallic materials capable of being recycled shall be taken under this section except pursuant to this subsection. The Secretary, in any other case, may not impose controls on or monitor the export of metallic materials capable of being recycled unless the Secretary makes the determination required by paragraph (3)(A) of this subsection with respect to such controls or monitoring and complies with paragraph (3)(B) with respect to that determination.".

(g) Section 13(a) of the Act is amended by striking out "section 11(c)(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 7(c)(1)(C)(ii) and 11(c)(2)".

DOMESTICALLY PRODUCED CRUDE OIL

SEC. 117. Section 7(d) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking out "unless" and all that follows through "met" and inserting in lieu thereof "subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection";

(2) in paragraph (2)(A) by striking out "makes and publishes" and inserting in lieu thereof "so recommends to the Congress after making and publishing";

(3) in paragraph (2)(B)—

(A) by striking out "reports such findings" and inserting in lieu thereof "includes such findings in his recommendation"; and

(B) by striking out "thereafter" and all that follows through the end of the sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "after receiving that recommendation, agrees to a joint resolution approving such exports on the basis of those findings which is thereafter enacted into law."; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 20 of this Act, the provisions of this subsection shall expire on September 30, 1987.".

REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

SEC. 118. Section 7(e)(1) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(e)(1)) is amended in the first sentence by striking out "No" and inserting in lieu thereof "In any case in which the President determines that it is necessary to impose export controls on refined petroleum products in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act, the President shall notify the Congress of that determination. The President shall also notify the Congress if and when he determines that such export controls are no longer necessary. During any period in which a determination that such export controls are necessary is in effect, no".

AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS

SEC. 119. (a) Section 7(g)(3) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(g)(3)) is amended by amending the second sentence to read as follows: "If the Congress, within 60 days after the date of its receipt of such report, does not adopt a joint resolution approving such prohibition or curtailment, then such prohibition or curtailment shall cease to be effective at the end of that 60-day period.".

(b) The third sentence of section 7(g)(3) of the Act is amended by striking out "30-day" and inserting in lieu thereof "60-day".

LICENSING PROCEDURES

SEC. 120. (a) Section 10(c) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2409(c)) is amended by striking out "90" and inserting in lieu thereof "60".

(b) Section 10(f)(2) of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "in writing" after "inform the applicant"; and

(2) by striking out ", and shall accord" and all that follows through the end of the paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "Before a final determination with respect to the application is made, the applicant shall be entitled—

"(A) to respond in writing to such questions, considerations, or recommendations within 30 days after receipt of such information from the Secretary; and

"(B) upon the filing of a written request with the Secretary within 15 days after the receipt of such information, to respond in person to the department or agency raising such questions, considerations, or recommendations.".

(c) Section 10(f)(3) of the Act is amended—

(1) in the first sentence—

(A) by inserting "the proposed" before "denial" the first two places it appears; and

(B) by striking out "denial" the third place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "determination to deny the application"; and

(2) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The Secretary shall allow the applicant at least 30 days to respond to the Secretary's determination before the license application is denied.".

(d) Section 10 of the Act is amended—

(1) in the section heading by adding "; OTHER INQUIRIES" after "APPLICATIONS"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(k) CHANGES IN REQUIREMENTS FOR APPLICATIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (b)(3) of this section, in any case in which, after a license application is submitted, the Secretary changes the requirements for such a license application, the Secretary may request appropriate additional information of the applicant, but the Secretary may not return the application to the applicant without action because it fails to meet the changed requirements.

"(l) OTHER INQUIRIES.—(1) In any case in which the Secretary receives a written request asking for the proper classification of a good or technology on the commodity control list, the Secretary shall, within 10 days after receipt of the request, inform the person making the request of the proper classification.

"(2) In any case in which the Secretary receives a written request for information about the applicability of export license requirements under this Act to a proposed export transaction or series of transactions, the Secretary shall, within 30 days after receipt of the request, reply with that information to the person making the request.".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 121. Section 14 of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2413) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (11) through (20) as paragraphs (12) through (21), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (10) the following new paragraph:

"(11) the removal of export controls on goods pursuant to section 5(m);".

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 122. (a) Section 7(i)(1) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(i)(1)) is amended in the last sentence by inserting "harvested from State or Federal lands" after "red cedar logs".

(c) Section 38(e) of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2778(e)) is amended by striking out "(f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(g)".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 123. (a) Section 18 of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2417) is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 18. (a) REQUIREMENT OF AUTHORIZING LEGISLATION.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, money appropriated to the Department of Commerce for expenses to carry out the purposes of this Act may be obligated or expended only if—

"(A) the appropriation thereof has been previously authorized by law enacted on or after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1983; or

"(B) the amount of all such obligations and expenditures does not exceed an amount previously prescribed by law enacted on or after such date.

"(2) To the extent that legislation enacted after the making of an appropriation to carry out the purposes of this Act authorizes the obligation or expenditure thereof, the limitation contained in paragraph (1) shall have no effect.

"(3) The provisions of this subsection shall not be superseded except by a provision of law enacted after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1983 which specifically repeals, modifies, or supersedes the provisions of this subsection.

"(b) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce to carry out the purposes of this Act—

"(1) $24,600,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985, of which for each such fiscal year $15,000,000 shall be available only for enforcement, $2,100,000 shall be available only for foreign availability assessments under subsections (f) and (h)(6) of section 5 of this Act, and $7,500,000 shall be available for all other activities under this Act; and

"(2) such additional amounts for each such fiscal year as may be necessary for increases in salary, pay, retirement, other employee benefits authorized by law, and other nondiscretionary costs.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1983.

TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY

SEC. 124. Section 20 of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2419) is amended to read as follows:

"TERMINATION DATE

"SEC. 20. The authority granted by this Act terminates on September 30, 1985.".

HOURS OF OFFICE OF EXPORT ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 125. The Secretary shall modify the office hours of the Office of Export Administration of the Department of Commerce on at least four days of each workweek so as to accommodate communications to the Office by exporters throughout the continental United States during the normal business hours of those exporters.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HUTTO

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUTTO: Page 17, strike out line 1 and all that follows through page 20, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

MILITARILY CRITICAL TECHNOLOGIES

SEC. 109. Section 5(d) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 240(d)) is amended by striking out paragraphs (4) through (6) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(4)(A) The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall complete the integration of the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list not later than April 1, 1985. The integration of the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list shall be completed with all deliberate speed, and the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall report to the appropriate committees of the Congress, before April 1, 1985, any circumstances which would preclude the completion of the integrated list by that date. Any disagreement between the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense as to whether a good or technology on the list of militarily critical technologies should be integrated into the commodity control list shall be resolved by the President not later than November 1, 1984. Such integrated list shall include only a good or technology with respect to which the Secretary finds that countries to which exports are controlled under this section do not possess that good or technology, or a functionally equivalent good or technology, and the good or technology or functionally equivalent good or technology is not available in fact to such a country from sources outside the United States in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality so that the requirement of a validated license for the export of such good or technology is or would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section, except in the case of a determination of the President with respect to goods or technology under subsection (f)(1) of this section. The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall jointly submit a report to the Congress, not later than April 1, 1985, on actions taken to carry out this subparagraph.

"(B) The General Accounting Office shall evaluate the efforts of the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense to integrate the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list, and the feasibility of such integration. In conducting such evaluation, the General Accounting Office shall determine whether foreign availability was used as a criterion in developing the commodity control list pursuant to subparagraph (A) and whether the completed list reflected the intent of the Congress in enacting this subsection. In conducting such evaluation, the General Accounting Office shall have access to all information relating to the list of militarily critical technologies. Not later than April 1, 1985, the General Accounting Office shall submit a detailed report to the Congress on the results of the evaluation conducted pursuant to this subparagraph.

"(C) The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense, in integrating the list of militarily critical technologies into the commodity control list pursuant to subparagraph (A), shall consider mechanisms to reduce the list of militarily critical technologies.

"(5) The Secretary of Defense shall establish a procedure for reviewing the goods and technology on the list of militarily critical technologies at least annually after the integrated list is completed pursuant to paragraph (4)(A), for the purpose of removing from the list of military critical technologies any goods or technology that are no longer militarily critical. The Secretary of Defense may, after the integrated list is so completed, add to the list of militarily critical technologies any good or technology that the Secretary of Defense determines is militarily critical. If the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense disagree as to whether any change in the list of militarily critical technologies by the addition or removal of a good or technology should also be made in the commodity control list, the President shall resolve the disagreement not later than three months after the change is made in the list of militarily critical technologies.

"(6) The Secretary of Defense shall, not later than April 1, 1985, report to the appropriate committees of the Congress on efforts by the Department of Defense to assess the impact that the transfer of goods or technology on the list of militarily critical technologies to countries to which exports are controlled under this section has had or will have on the military capabilities of those countries.".

Mr. HUTTO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Armed Services Committee amendment to section 109 of H.R. 3231.

H.R. 3231 was reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs on June 22, 1983, and was sequentially referred to the Committee on Armed Services for a period ending not later than July 22, 1983, for consideration of such portions of section 109 of the bill as fall within the committee's jurisdiction.

The Committee on Armed Services reported the bill with an amendment to section 109 of H.R. 3231 as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The purpose of the committee amendment is to clarify the authority of the Secretary of Defense to develop and maintain the militarily critical technologies list and to clarify the Secretary's role in the overall process of export controls for national security reasons.

The Committee on Armed Services does not disagree with the primary intent of section 109. The committee supports the general concept in H.R. 3231 of integrating the militarily critical technologies list and the commodity control list and efforts to reduce the size of the list. However, a careful reading of section 109 led us to recommend some modest changes in the language of that section.

The section of the bill that this amendment refers to is a very limited section within the context of the overall bill; it addresses the list of militarily critical technologies. This list is developed and maintained by the Secretary of Defense and consists of those goods and technologies that he considers would significantly improve the military capabilities of our adversaries.

Related to this list—but within the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce—is the commodity control list. This list is used to administer the export licensing system that restricts export of goods and technologies for national security, short supply, or foreign policy reasons. Only a portion of the commodity control list is related to items that are militarily critical and, therefore, controlled for national security reasons.

The section of the bill referred to the Committee on Armed Services requires that the list of militarily critical technologies be integrated into the commodity control list by April 1, 1985.

The amendment offered by the Committee on Armed Services would also require the integration of these two lists. In fact, one of the problems in integrating this list in the past has been disagreement between the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Defense as to which items on the militarily critical technologies list are appropriately included in the commodity control list. The amendment recommends that this problem be resolved by referring disagreements to the President.

From an overall perspective, the Committee on Armed Services believes that the bill as reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee would reduce the influence of the Secretary of Defense with regard to this list, first, by limiting the determination of whether or not a good or technology is available from a foreign source and, thereby, automatically decontrolled and, second, by specifying certain criteria for removing items from the list.

This amendment would move the section slightly back toward the present situation—but not all the way. The committee recommends that determination of foreign availability be based on the availability of goods and technologies that reflect the same characteristics, performance, and capabilities as the goods or technologies we are attempting to control.

This amendment would also delete certain criteria incorporated in the bill as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs that could lead to reductions in the list of militarily critical technologies. This amendment would support a reduction in the list in order to provide better controls over a smaller number of truly high technology items; however, this amendment stresses the fundamental criteria for reducing or adding items on the list should be on the basis of whether the items are militarily critical.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members adopt the amendment to section 109.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman in the well, Mr. HUTTO. The gentleman headed up a task force on behalf of the Armed Services Committee, which has shared jurisdiction over this legislation. The gentleman and his task force took a close look at the bill, its ramifications on technology transfers and how it may or may not enhance the military capability of an adversarial nation.

I would like to say that they have done a responsible job, and they have put forth a constructive amendment and one which I can support. I would like to make one observation, however.

On page 17, regarding the definition of "foreign availability," an amendment would change the word "similar" to "functionally equivalent," and then on line 21, the word "sufficient" would be replaced with "comparable."

I would only note that, as it relates to the militarily critical technologies list and the possible integration of that list with the commodity control list, that that is a proper definition and one which needed to be strengthened. But when it comes to licensing by the Secretary of Commerce, I think we also need to recognize the flexibility that is needed there and that the present definition, which is outside the scope of the amendment offered by the gentleman, should be retained as "sufficient" in lieu of "comparable."

I support the amendment.

□ 1500

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO), and also the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER) with regard to their comments on this particular amendment.

I was the ranking minority member who worked very closely with the gentleman from Florida, and we worked very constructively, I believe, together hammering out and making, I think, substantial improvements in their particular section under which the Committee on Armed Services was given sequential referral.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment recommended by the Committee on Armed Services to section 109 of the bill. Although the committee generally agreed with the intent of section 109 as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, we believed that the authority of the Secretary of Defense was changed too much and that, under the change, the effective balance between the Department of Defense and the Department of Commerce was modified in an adverse manner. The committee amendment reestablishes an appropriate balance.

First, although the committee agrees that the commodity control list and the militarily critical technologies list should be integrated, the bill as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs provides for no way to resolve disagreements between the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Commerce regarding the items that should be incorporated in the commodity control list. The committee recommends that any disagreements between the secretaries regarding whether goods or technologies on the militarily critical technologies list should be initially integrated into the commodity control list be resolved by the President by November 1, 1984—6 months before the lists are to be fully integrated.

Second, because the militarily critical technologies list is a dynamically changing document, the committee recommends that a formal procedure be established by the Secretary of Defense for review of the contents of the list at least annually with a view toward reducing the number of items on the list or adding to the list items determined to be militarily critical. As with the case of the initial integration of the militarily critical technologies list and the commodity control list, disagreements between the secretaries regarding whether items added to or removed from the militarily critical technologies list should be added to or removed from the commodity control list should be resolved by the President within 3 months of the change to the militarily critical technologies list.

Third, the committee recommends that, in determination of foreign availability, "functionally equivalent" goods and technologies be considered instead of "similar" goods and technologies and that the goods and technologies that are available be of "comparable" quality instead of "sufficient" quality. The determination of foreign availability results in items not being placed on the commodity control list and, thereby, decontrolled. The committee believes that such decontrol should occur only if the same capabilities are available from some other source.

The objective of this part of the committee amendment is to clarify the meaning of "a similar good or technology." The committee amendment would base foreign availability on possession of the good or technology, or a functionally equivalent good or technology, or availability, in fact, from a foreign source of the good or technology, or a functionally equivalent good or technology. Because the list relates to goods and technologies that have a military as well as a civilian use, an item available from a foreign source would be "functionally equivalent" if the function it performs in a military use is equivalent, in terms of characteristics, performance and capabilities to the function of the U.S. item.

Fourth, the committee agrees that the General Accounting Office should evaluate the efforts to integrate the lists and be given access to all information relating to the list of militarily critical technologies. However, section 109 of H.R. 3231 as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs also directs that the General Accounting Office be admitted to all meetings in the executive branch regarding the list. The committee believes such authorization to be unnecessary to conduct the evaluation and recommends that such authority not be granted.

Fifth, the committee supports the general effort to find mechanisms for reducing the militarily critical technologies list. However, the specific criteria suggested by the Committee on Foreign Affairs could imply that the Congress intends that certain militarily critical technologies be removed because they happen to possess one of the characteristics listed as criteria for possible removal. The committee believes that the removal of items for the list should be based primarily on the assessment of military criticality, taking into account the level of comparable technology available to proscribed countries. Because the committee emphasizes the use of military criticality as a criterion for reducing the list, the committee recommends that the Secretary of Defense increase efforts to assess the effect on the military capabilities of proscribed countries if they were to receive items included on the militarily critical technology list. The committee directs the Secretary of Defense to report by April 1, 1985, on such efforts.

Mr. Chairman, these changes are modest, but necessary, and I urge the members to support the amendment of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I too, wish to compliment the Committee on Armed Services for their extensive hearings and work on this legislation. The Armed Services Committee members recognize the serious consequences of the hemorrhaging of our technology. I rise in support of section 109 because I believe it is among the most important in the entire bill.

However, I have two reservations. First, we want to insure that the General Accounting Office has unrestricted access to information within the executive branch related to military critical technologies and has access to the administration documents pertaining to MCTL. After all, if GAO is going to be an intermediary and is going to help work out the solution, it must have the necessary information to make the proper judgments.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HUTTO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly understand the gentleman's concerns, and we have left that provision in where the General Accounting Office shall have accessibility to all of the information that they need.

We only struck the part where GAO would have been able to sit in on executive meetings. We thought that went a little too far, but we still allow them full access to information.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman for his explanation. His point is well taken.

My second reservation would be that we, in our committee work, found the National Academy of Sciences to have what I thought was good criteria. It was a goal, it was a target for people to keep in mind as they are making these very complicated decisions.

I would hope that we would continue to have the various groups looking at this legislation keep the National Academy of Sciences' recommendations in mind as they are integrating these lists.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of and enthusiastically support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HUTTO

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUTTO: Page 5, strike out line 1 and all that follows through page 6, line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) An officer of the United States Customs Service of the Department of the Treasury or other person authorized to board or search vessels who has reasonable cause to suspect that any goods or technology have been or will be exported from the United States in violation of this Act may—

"(A) stop, search, and examine, within or without his district, a vehicle, vessel, aircraft, or person, on which or whom he has reasonable cause to suspect there are any such goods or technology;

"(B) search, wherever found, any package or container in which he has reasonable cause to suspect there are any such goods or technology; and

"(C) seize and secure for trial any such goods or technology on or about such vehicle, vessel, aircraft, or person, or in such package or container.

"(3)(A) An officer of the United States Customs Service of the Department of the Treasury or other person authorized to board or search vessels may, while in the performance of, and in connection with, official duties, make arrests without warrant in the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.

"(B) Upon seizure of any goods or technology under paragraph (2) of this subsection, the matter shall be referred to the Department of Commerce for further investigation and other appropriate action under this Act.

Page 7, line 4, strike out the semicolon and all that follows through line 10 and insert in lieu thereof a period, closed quotation marks, and a second period.

Mr. HUTTO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think there has been some modification of this amendment. Is it a long one? Could we hear it read?

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, there has been no change to my knowledge. It is the same one that was printed in the RECORD of yesterday.

Mr. FRENZEL. I am sorry; I do not have that right here.

Mr. HUTTO. It is relating to Customs.

Mr. FRENZEL. Does it relate to Customs solely? Does it have any reference to import controls?

Mr. HUTTO. No.

Mr. FRENZEL. None at all?

Mr. HUTTO. No; just enforcement. Enforcement is all.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, this is a simple amendment that, in essence, improves the ability of the U.S. Customs Service to enforce the laws prohibiting the illegal export and diversion of critical technology to our adversaries.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3231 does serious injury to Custom's ability to enforce this legislation, and my amendment would rectify that damage. As my colleagues may be aware, there has been an ongoing debate within the administration between Customs and the Department of Commerce over who should have the primary role in enforcing the Export Administration Act. In my opinion and in the opinion of the members of the technology transfer panel of the Armed Services Committee, the primary responsibility for enforcement should continue to reside with the Customs Service.

Over the years, the Customs Service has built up a very effective international organization for this purpose and has had very impressive results in controlling illegal exports. The Customs Service—and only the Customs Service—has built up a vast network of overseas contacts in foreign custom services and law enforcement agencies which are invaluable in enforcing laws relating to illegal technology transfer.

The Customs Service has, since October 1981, pursued a domestic effort known as Operation Exodus which entails random and surprise inspections of many shipments destined for overseas. Operation Exodus has been a remarkable success; 346 cases of attempted illegal exports have been accepted for prosecution from these surprise inspections; there have been 220 indictments to date and 211 convictions.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment would allow the Customs Service to continue that record of excellence.

This amendment would delete the limitation on authorization of expenditures for the Customs Service's Operation Exodus that is contained in H.R. 3231. The Foreign Affairs Committee report on the bill claims "Operation Exodus has not been very cost effective * * * [and] has resulted in few prosecutions of serious violations under the Export Administration Act * * *."

Mr. Chairman, I submit that 346 cases accepted for prosecution, 220 indictments and 211 convictions is a record to be proud of and is exceptionally cost effective.

This amendment would also delete the section of H.R. 3231 that would prohibit custom's officials from making random, surprise searches. This technique is essential to the continued success of Exodus. This amendment directs that upon seizure, the matter then must be referred to the Department of Commerce for further action.

Mr. Chairman, in summary, my amendment attempts to preserve the exceptional record of achievement of the Customs Service by continuing the procedures under which such success was obtained.

I urge support of the amendment.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO), the chairman of the technology transfer panel of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment also was spawned out of the work of the special panel of the House Committee on Armed Services, although it falls outside the actual jurisdiction given to the committee in the sequential referral.

As my colleague from Florida indicated the Customs Service has compiled what we believe is a distinguished record of enforcement of the Export Administration Act. It would make no sense to destroy that capability now. Unfortunately, that capability, in fact, would be destroyed under the bill as originated without the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The bill as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs would prohibit the Customs Service from conducting random searches of exports. The random search and seizure effort of Operation Exodus has resulted in over 2,000 seizures of attempted illegal exports of items worth over $134 million. Critics of the Customs Service claim this record is insignificant compared to the unnecessary delays caused by the searches. I disagree on this point. In fiscal year 1982 only 0.025 percent, that is one-quarter of 1 percent, of shipments were delayed because of random inspections. I submit this is a very small price to pay if we can stop a small part of what has been described as a "hemorrhage" of technology to the East-bloc.

Additionally, I have been impressed with the overseas activities of the Customs Service in attempting to stem this illegal flow of technology. For example, Customs has 21 agents assigned to eight foreign countries and Hong Kong, and they regularly travel to other locations to conduct investigations. They are well known to foreign customs services and law enforcement agencies and have established a firm foundation of information exchange.

Mr. Chairman, provisions of H.R. 3231 would do irreparable harm to this fine organization by reducing its funding and putting unnecessary restrictions on its operations.

I urge the adoption of the amendment so that the Customs Service can continue its outstanding work in stemming the illegal flow of technology to our potential adversaries.

□ 1510

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As a member of the panel, I congratulate the gentleman and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO) on their excellent leadership in this area.

I would like to remark simply that I think it makes a lot of sense to allow the President to control any disputes or decide any disputes between the two Secretaries, the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Defense. He obviously has both interests in mind, that of increasing exports and also that of national security.

Also I think the area of taking away the right to make random searches is extremely deleterious to our efforts to keep critical technologies from going out of the country, because it basically gives probable cause rights to would-be smugglers.

So, Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentlemen on their work, and I think this amendment has a lot going for it. I urge its adoption.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I would like to add that without this amendment the bill as written would restrict Customs to inspections in situations where specific information on a possible violation has been received. Therefore, through their normal operation, if Customs sees a violation of the Export Administration Act, unless they are first told about the violation, they have no right to make arrests or continue the search. It seems rather ridiculous to take away from Customs, an organization that is there at the border and often inspects items on a random basis, their jurisdiction to continue their search or make arrests if they stumble on violations of the Export Administration Act.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. I feel that it is one that is extremely important. The fact is that the Customs Service has a long history of addressing these issues. Now is not the time to take those functions away from that service.

We currently have a situation where the enforcement functions belong in an area where they currently reside. We are trying to not streamline government but to make it more effective. I think this is not the right move, to remove it from the Customs Service. I think it should remain in that area, and I commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO) for offering this amendment.

I also commend the gentleman for chairing the panel that has done an excellent job in addressing an issue that I think is extremely important, and that is our technology transfer.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO) for the excellent leadership he provided as chairman of our technology transfer panel of the Armed Services Committee and also the gentleman from New Jersey for the benefit of his wisdom as our minority leader, I rise in support of this amendment. As a member of the panel I have spent a great deal of time in reviewing this bill, especially the area dealing with enforcement authority. We have, on the panel, debated extensively the need to increase Commerce's function versus keeping enforcement where it is today—with Customs. The result to me is obvious—why duplicate functions between two Federal agencies. That is our problem today in so many areas of the Federal Government—duplication. Customs has been designed to search, seize, arrest, and carry firearms. Commerce is designed to encourage, serve, and promote the Nation's international trade, economic growth, and technological advancement. Mr. Chairman, I submit this policy is working, there is no need to change it, and therefore I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that I oppose this amendment and remind my colleagues that we have for the first time given Customs specific authority, and indeed Customs does operate under two different jurisdictions, the Arms Export Control Act being one of them, and they would continue to be able to operate in this manner.

I might point out that the statistics that we were given indicate that a number of these seizures that were made were made under that authority of the Export Control Act and not the Export Administration Act.

So I would oppose this amendment. I think there is room in this Nation for active efforts on the part of both agencies, but I think this legislation is designed to give that authority and does focus for the first time that authority to the Customs Service. So I do not think the amendment is necessary.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague, the gentleman from Florida, yield?

Mr. MICA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman not agree that we are creating actually a new law enforcement agency, another layer of enforcement, by putting Commerce into the authority that the committee has given them under this bill?

Mr. MICA. No. Let me say that I think that Commerce is already involved in this issue. What we are trying to do is say that for the first time we give Customs direct control. I do not think it is a duplicative effort at all. I think it is a needed effort that has been focused on by this committee.

Mr. HUTTO. But the Department of Commerce may not search, seize, arrest, or carry firearms at the present time. So that committee is giving this authority to Commerce.

Mr. MICA. Commerce is already doing the job. We want to give them the authority to do the complete job.

Mr. HUTTO. But how can they do it without a lot more money and a lot more personnnel and without creating another layer of enforcement?

Mr. MICA. The bill does have money, authority, and personnel in it.

Mr. HUTTO. Could the gentleman tell us how much?

Mr. MICA. It is $15 million, I believe.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the Commerce Department has statutory authority for enforcement of the Export Administration Act. The Customs Service lacks that statutory authority. Indeed, they have been funded more or less through the back door to the tune of nearly $30 million.

What we have attempted to do is more clearly define the functional tasks of each of the departments and then to provide a budget that is sufficient for each to do its respective job.

So Commerce had the authority, and as the gentleman from Florida notes, we have tried to give them the enforcement resources to do their job effectively and also to recognize for the first time the Customs Service.

What the gentleman's amendment does is to wipe out those new tools that are there so that Commerce can do the job they are expected to do under the Export Administration Act.

Mr. MICA. And again I would like to point out that a number of the activities that were cited in the statistics were taken care of under dual jurisdiction of the Export Administration Act.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MICA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman heard in my earlier statement that Customs, through the years of their service and expertise in the enforcement relative to exports, has gained friendly or a working relationship, I should say, with organizations overseas. They know how to handle this problem.

To take Customs out of the enforcement, as the gentleman would do under this bill, would, I think, negate all these years of experience we have gained, and I think we ought to let the experienced people handle this sort of operation.

Mr. MICA. Let me say again, Customs has other authorities to operate under.

I commend the gentleman for his concern and his commendations that have been put forth on the work of Customs. They do an excellent job. We for the first time give them some authority, but we also allow $15 million for Commerce to do the job right that they have already been charged with doing; so I do believe that we are both seeking the same goal.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, in this bill the ability of Customs is eliminated in their enforcement function of random search. The gentleman does not think this is a needed part of this?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICA. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how we can eliminate Customs authority when it has not been properly defined in statute. This Operation Exodus has developed as a result of executive branch discretion. We have attempted to provide explicit definition of enforcement responsibilities for both the Customs Service and the Department of Commerce. If we did nothing at all, there would be no reference in the statute whatsoever about the Customs Service role.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think there is or has been demonstrated here an inflated opinion of the capability of the Customs Service to serve as the administrator of this particular act. We will notice that in the bill itself, beginning on page 5 under "Enforcement Authority" there is provided a beefed up enforcement authority, which includes both the Treasury and the Customs Service, and that specific language governs the authority of the Customs Service at the bottom of pages 6 and 7.

The Bonker bill is an improvement over what we have today. The authorizing committee for the Customs is the Ways and Means Committee. We spend a fair amount of time trying to figure out what they can do, what they cannot do, and what they should do.

Our judgment on Project Exodus was that it was a failure. It resulted mostly in the delay of U.S. shipments abroad which were harmless. In fact, in one port, inspection of four out of five seizures were for material that later went forward and was released.

The reason, of course, is that Customs does not have the competence to understand the operations of this law and the kind of equipment we are talking about. Commerce which administers the list, coordinates with the Defense Department works on the definitions, is the agency that understands the kind of goods we are talking about. In my own Customs district there was alleged to be one agent that knew something about hi-tech equipment that might require a license.

Other districts may not be so fortunate. But one person cannot know all things and cannot be everywhere. In every case, Customs must go back to the Commerce Department to render the final decision.

All those press releases that Customs sent out about the good things that happened in Exodus were inspiring, but the actual record was not. Mostly, they uncovered technical violations or licenses that were missing for products that should never have required licenses in the first place.

The real mischief that was done by those random searches was that companies had their letters of credit run out or the sales canceled. In my own district we had large layoffs in two companies because of shipments that were seized without good reason by Project Exodus and later released, at which time either the credit or the sale was gone.

So I believe it is a good thing to follow the intent of the bill, and to defeat this amendment.

Our committee recommended that no more than $14 million be given to customs for the enforcement of Project Exodus. We said, yes, they could go ahead under certain conditions. That is how the Foreign Affairs Committee picked up the number that is in this particular bill. It was our recommendation.

We hope that the Senate will act on that authorization bill and preserve that amount. We do not know if they will or not; but in the meantime, it seems that it may be a little presumptuous for others who may or may not know the capability of Customs, particularly dealing with hi-tech items, to want to give a greatly expanded more authority.

The Bonker bill demands "probable cause" for investigation by the Commerce Department. The Hutto amendment says "reasonable cause."

Mr. Chairman, I can assure the Members there are worlds of difference between the two. Reasonable cause is a much lower standard. And it seems to me, giving a license to poke around at random among shipments and perhaps delay shipments and cause layoffs and so on.

I believe that the Bonker bill strengthens enforcement under the Export Administration Act. Going back to the Hutto language would be a terrible mistake for this body to make, because I think Customs has not had the demonstrated ability to manage this particular item of its shared jurisdiction effectively. It will be covered under this bill. It will be involved.

Most of the seizures that made any difference in the indictments referred to earlier probably came from tips. Those will still be part of the process. They will be followed up both by Commerce and by Treasury.

I think it is important to maintain the primacy of the agency of Commerce which must administer the law, rather than have another group out working on the side, as might occur under the Hutto amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to take my time to ask the gentleman from Minnesota who just spoke a few questions about this deletion or this reduction to $14 million in enforcement moneys to the customs agents. I would ask the gentleman to answer a few questions for me.

As I understand, and we sat on this panel in the Committee on Armed Services and listened to the chairman make his pitch for this bill. One problem that has occurred is that a lot of shipments have waited on the docks, so to speak, while Customs made random searches and by the time the searches were finished, contracts had expired and we had foreign customers who were angry. Is that accurate?

Mr. FRENZEL. In my judgment, it is.

Mr. HUNTER. All right. My question is, why in that case did they move to solve that problem by reducing the President's request for Customs from I think it was $34 million or $35 million down to $14 million, because obviously enforcement is to a large degree a function of dollars spent?

Even if you add up the extra money that has been requested for Commerce in moving this turf battle to a situation in which Commerce takes a bigger chunk, if you put in total enforcement dollars, as I recall, the total Commerce and Customs dollars that are allocated under this bill are still less than the President requested. So the point is that if you are going to have searches and if you are going to do a reasonable job, you are going to have less dollars to do the job and that would imply to me that unless you absolutely forget about your duties, or Customs and Commerce both forget about their duties in trying to keep this flow of export technology down, we are going to see a lot more delays.

I think my question is, why did we not fund more money for this thing so we could do a good job with enough people and we could go in without having given probable cause protection to would-be smugglers and take care of all the problems—more money.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the problem we had to deal with is that Customs embraces a good deal more than Project Exodus. As the gentleman knows, we have drugs, we have contraband articles coming in everywhere.

We gave the Customs Service in our authorization a good deal more than the President suggested, more than I wanted to give them. We decided that the least effective work they were doing was Project Exodus and we desired not to have the random search go on, because it was quite obvious from the evidence that we had that it was not effective and it was resulting in delayed shipments and the loss of jobs. So we felt since Exodus was not an effective function the money should be used elsewhere. Actually, we gave the Customs Service more than the President wanted.

Mr. HUNTER. All right. My second question is, the thrust of the testimony we heard from your leadership and their testimony was that one reason we do not need the licenses to Cocom nations is because most of the violations that take place, most of the flow of critical technology to the Soviet Union, for example, comes about because of crime, because of smuggled goods, because of illicit movement of technology.

Again, if that is true, how can we possibly stem that flow of illegal technology, forgetting how inefficient one might think Customs is, with a total expenditure for Customs and Commerce of something under $35 million, if this is, indeed, the lifeblood of the Western democracies?

□ 1530

Mr. FRENZEL. If I may answer, the $14 million we have provided for Customs was strictly for Project Exodus. We wanted less of a random search but did not ban it. There is nothing to prevent the Customs Service from using all the rest of its resources to do its mission and whatever it thinks is necessary and most effective. We tried, however, to guide it away from the random searching of Project Exodus, but we did not deny it the ability to do what it thought it needed to do.

Mr. HUNTER. The last question. Under your bill, does anybody have the right to random searches?

Mr. FRENZEL. Yes. Well, I am sorry, you will have to ask the gentleman from Washington. Under his bill, Customs does not have the right to random searching, as I understand it. But I think you will have to talk to him.

Mr. BONKER. The gentleman is correct. It precludes random searching by the Customs Service. But I do not believe there is any language that would preclude the Department of Commerce, which really has the expertise to do this kind of work. So, they could carry out that kind of activity without any legislative restraint in this bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentlemen for their answers.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have three or four observations.

Obviously what we are dealing with here is a turf battle, a war between Commerce and Customs in performing certain security functions that are important for the national defense of the United States. We are dealing with something that is very, very important.

(On request of Mr. COURTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. HUNTER was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield further to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I think it is important to note we are dealing with a very sensitive and important area.

First of all, I would like to observe that generally the purpose of the creation of the Department of Commerce in the very beginning was to encourage exportation, encourage the sale of U.S. products to various countries, encourage therefore job creation in this particular country through those exports. That is one of its functions.

To say that the enforcement power to prevent exports should be placed into the Commerce Department, whose main function is to make sure that those items are exported, seems to be giving the authority to the exact wrong person. The purpose of Commerce is to encourage exports, not to discourage them.

So, I think this bill gives the authority to the exact wrong organization.

Second, it seems to me that the Customs people are there on site. They are all over the country. They have expertise. They can size individuals up, because they are on the job, they are streetwise. They are similar to the cop that has been on patrol for 10 or 15 years. They can spot unusual circumstances and situations. To say that this organization, Customs, with their expertise, with their experience, with the fact that they are spread all over the country, in all the ports of disembarkation should not be permitted to prevent the exporting of technology seems to be absolutely an absurd policy.

Third, I would like to draw the attention of the Members to the language in the bill. It says on page 6 as follows, on line 9:

> In conducting inspections of goods and technology in the enforcement of this Act, the United States Customs Service shall limit those inspections to goods and technology with respect to which the Customs Service has received specific information of possible violations.

So, what you are doing is telling Customs Service that even if they stumble upon a clear violation of the export of technology they can do nothing, they have got to turn their backs. Certainly there is not going to be someone from Commerce, nearby to effect the arrest, thus creating an awkward situation, an unworkable situation.

That seems to be the worst part of this bill, and of course that is a part that once again the gentleman from Florida's (Mr. HUTTO) amendment changes and improves.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. What do you suppose Customs would be doing when they would find this export violation? Most of their work, as the gentleman knows, is involved in trying to verify, and to check out, and to rate, imports so that we can collect the duties and keep nasty substances that we do not want out of this country.

So, they are not routinely running around inspecting exports where they are going to notice these kinds of violations.

As a matter of fact, their successes in Exodus have almost invariably been due to tips, which the Bonker bill permits.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The response is not really complete. What you are doing is eliminating from the Customs Service the jurisdiction, the power, the capability of making arrests under many, many circumstances. I think that is absolutely the wrong way to go.

I see that the gentleman who is the sponsor of the bill stood up. I would like to ask the gentleman, how many people from Commerce does he figure will be in the field at the places of disembarkation throughout the United States under this particular legislation?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

One of the problems has been that the Department of Commerce has lacked the resources to do an effective job.

Last year, Customs spent $30 million in its operation Exodus program. The Department of Commerce, I think, spent $3.5 million. No wonder the track record is not very good.

What we have attempted to do in this legislation is to not only increase their enforcement authority but to increase their budget from $5 million, which is being requested by the President, to $15 million.

(On request of Mr. COURTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. HUNTER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. If I may proceed, you can imagine how we could double and even triple their enforcement capability if we increase their budget from $5 million to $15 million. I might add that we are not disrupting or taking away any explicit authority that Customs traditionally has had in this area. We are trying to define its proper role. The bill addresses the problem of random inspections. It states that, "The Customs Service shall not conduct random inspections which would result in the detainment of shipments of goods or technology that are in full compliance with this act."

What we are trying to correct here is this problem of going out on a dock and just looking at boxes and detaining them for 3 or 6 or 10 weeks, thereby putting our manufacturers at a considerable disadvantage.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I asked a very, very specfic question and you answered the question by saying, well, we are increasing the wealth and the resources of the Department of Commerce from $5 million to $13 or $15 million and therefore their capabilities will increase by a factor of three. But in the same breath, you indicated that their capabilities are very, very low.

My position is that increasing their resources by $10 million is not going to stop the flow of technology. It is not going to place enough Commerce people in the field such that they are onsite to make the type of arrests and inspections that are necessary.

Therefore, I ask the question again. With the resources provided under the legislation, how many inspectors from the Department of Commerce are going to be at the various places and ports of disembarkation and exporting facilities that we have in the United States? Will they all be covered? How many people?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. There are presently 60 enforcement personnel under the Department of Commerce in its budget of $3.5 million. So, I rather imagine you could triple that to perhaps as many as 200 enforcement personnel who would have the authority to do the job. But I do not think you are necessarily going to have better enforcement if you have two Federal agencies with two separate programs out there doing essentially the same thing.

What we have attempted to do in this legislation is make our enforcement program more effective, utilizing both the Customs Service and the Department of Commerce.

Mr. COURTER. If the gentleman would yield once more, my problem, and I would not be so concerned as much as I am about this section of the bill if it did what you said, if it would permit the cooperation between these two organizations that do have expertise, but it does not. It clearly shifts jurisdiction when it comes to interception and arrest in the export of military critical technologies from Customs to a different department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. FRENZEL and by unanimous consent, Mr. HUNTER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think the answer is that Customs and Commerce have had to cooperate for years on the administration of this act. The very language on pages 6 and 7 provide that they are going to continue to cooperate.

I doubt you are going to have Commerce officials permanently on station in any port. Maybe you will, but I doubt it. I think that when they have reason to believe, the probable cause, information, they are going to ask Customs to go in just as they are doing today and that is where you read those Project Exodus press releases.

Mr. COURTER. It is Commerce.

Mr. FRENZEL. Commerce is going to send Customs in and say, take care of it.

The problem arose because there was poor coordination.

We sent Custom agents out doing a job for which we had not trained them.

Over the last year and one-half, there has been better and better coordination between Customs and Commerce. Remember, Commerce is the agency charged with that act. It is the lead agency that deals with the Defense Department and Treasury. This is a "Tinkers, to Evans, to Chance" operation here. Proper administration requires cooperation between Defense, Commerce, and Customs and has to be in the driver's seat with respect to Treasury.

You cannot put Customs out there on its own operating without the direction of Commerce.

So I think you are still going to have those Customs agents do much of the physical work at the request and direction of the Commerce Department. But you are going to have Commerce and Defense working better together. You are going to have the Customs people punching into computers and getting much more prompt answers from Commerce, so you will not have equipment sitting on the docks for long periods of time.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman.

I would like to conclude simply by saying that I have spent a lot of time looking at this bill and at the Hutto amendment. It still appears to me that the one way that we could combine, we could take care of two goals: thorough searches to see that our vital technology is not going, and expeditious treatment to industry, is to fund more money, and that is the one thing this bill does not do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HUNTER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. HUNTER. Let me say one thing to my friends that are concerned about a strong national defense but are concerned about our defense budget. I think the one thing we can do to see that we do not have to have an extremely large defense budget is to see that vital technology does not flow out of this country into the Soviet bloc.

The best vote you could make today, one of the best votes you will be able to make this year for a strong national defense is to support the Hutto amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I would like to make a concluding statement on this amendment, which I oppose.

Mr. Chairman, I think all of us want the same thing. We want more effective enforcement of our technology transfer laws.

I think, in that sense, I can support the gentleman from Florida in his efforts to more clearly define those authorities and to make possible the resources so that whoever is charged with enforcement responsibility has the resources to do the job.

What we have attempted to do in this legislation is to not only strengthen the law enforcement capability but to provide the resources necessary to do the job for both the Customs Service and the Department of Commerce.

We had to, at some point, be more definitive in these responsibilities. Otherwise, we would continue with overlapping jurisdiction and possibly a waste of money.

So what is at stake here is not whether we are going to have the Commerce Department or the Customs Service charged with responsibility. Both of them will be involved. Both have inherent statutory responsibilities. Both will have the resources necessary to do their work.

In fact, if we were to adopt the gentleman's amendment, it would not change in any way the authorizations now involved for both departments. Indeed, if we pass it, what we will do is maintain the same level, which is $14 million for Customs and $15 million for the Department of Commerce. But we will have removed Commerce's enforcement capability.

In other words, we are saying, here is the money to do the job but we are taking away your tools to do it effectively.

The committee has put a lot of thought into this legislation. We have consulted with everybody involved. We worked closely with the Ways and Means Committee, which I think supports our efforts, and I think we have come up with a balanced approach, one that will avoid duplication and give our enforcement agencies the tools to do an effective job.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I support the enforcement and police powers of this provision because I believe that the Department of Commerce is the appropriate agency to have primary enforcement responsibilities.

The reason I say that is because Ted Wu, the new Deputy Assistant Secretary of Export Enforcement, who is highly experienced in export control matters, having prosecuted the major export enforcement cases which have arisen in recent years. Mr. Wu's investigating staff at Commerce has been increased significantly. In fact, they have hired more than 35 criminal investigators and these people have the experience, they have the intelligence, they have the analysts and the program professionals, and I think that they can do the best possible job.

In export violations we are often in a very fast-moving and unpredictable position. The violators are often foreign nationals who must be arrested quickly before they can flee the country.

That is precisely why I think Commerce needs this authority. There is no other agency that I think can do the job as efficiently.

The U.S. Marshals Service often does not have adequate time because of all of the other programs they are connected with. That is why I think in this case I feel that the agents at Commerce could do the best job for us. That is why I am reluctant in opposing this.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HUTTO. Would the gentleman not agree that this is really adding an additional law enforcement agency? Can the gentleman tell me: Are the Commerce agents now uniformed agents; are they plainclothesmen or what?

Mr. ROTH. I can see the gentleman's point. Your point is well taken.

But I would not agree that we are adding an additional layer here because these people have the responsibility now. If they did not have the responsibility now I would say that the point was more valid.

But I do not see that because they really have the responsibility.

Mr. HUTTO. Would you not agree that there has been expertise over the years gained by Customs and, if you are going to make this drastic change from one department to another, would it not have been better to have a lateral transfer of some of these agents over to Commerce?

Mr. ROTH. As I said, the gentleman heard what I said and this is the way I feel about it. I suppose you make value judgments here. I would be repeating myself. The gentleman heard what I said before and that is pretty well the way I feel about it. Commerce has done a very credible job preventing illegal diversions and improved the licensing system.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me and just would like, by way of example, to once again express my frustration on the way the bill comes to the floor and my enthusiastic support for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO).

The way the bill is crafted now it means that the Customs Service is going to have to de facto prior authorization from the Department of Commerce before they can interrupt a transfer of technology to a foreign country under which controls are placed.

That seems to be the folly of the particular section that we are dealing with. What is going to happen is that if someone from the Customs Service finds hashish in a boot, in one ski boot, and finds high tech computer chips in the next boot, he is going to have to call up Commerce and they are going to have to fly in from some other place to make a determination as to whether that is a violation of the Export Administration Act.

It seems to me this ridiculous specialization is going to cause a great deal of problems and slowdown rather than speed up the process at our various borders, first.

Second, and finally, I repeat the fact that there is a section that actually specifically limits the amount of resources for Customs Service and that is found on page 6, lines 17 through 20. That limitation is placed at $14 million, a totally arbitrary figure.

It seems to me it is a figure that not only is arbitrary but is impossible to make a determination as to how much of the resources of the Customs Service during the year reached $14 million.

□ 1550

When do you know? When they are performing two, three, four different functions at the same time.

So that limitation on the resources of the Customs Service also I think is a monstrous truck hole and flaw in the legislation as it is brought to the floor.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, if I may respond to that in a very curt way: Resources also, you have to look at qualifications when you look at the resources. The Commerce officers are certainly more qualified—to detect high technology than would be Customs.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I was going to say the same thing, Mr. Chairman. Customs officers who have begun to develop some competence have all been trained by officials of the Commerce Department to whom they report, and they report on their work and tell them whether they are doing it right or not. So obviously this bill has authority in the right place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. HUNTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. ROTH was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROTH. I will yield a little later, but I just want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his contribution because I think that is the logic that we have to draw.

Mr. HUNTER. Let me ask the gentleman, the standard now is that unless Customs has probable cause they cannot search a particular container, is that right, unless they are given probable cause?

I know the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) mentioned probable cause.

Mr. ROTH. That is the way the law is written now in the statute, as I understand, yes.

Mr. HUNTER. That is contrasted with reasonable cause.

Mr. ROTH. Right.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it is important for Congress to understand what the difference is. Let us say somebody calls up on the phone, you get an anonymous call that says there are some laser lenses stacked in a container three rows from the last row on the dock ready to go. Can Customs come in and search that container for those laser lenses?

Mr. ROTH. To answer the gentleman's question, I am not an attorney, but before I think the gentleman from Minnesota already made a distinction between reasonable and probable cause.

Mr. HUNTER. Maybe the gentleman from Minnesota could speak to that.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I would be happy to yield to the chairman.

Mr. BONKER. I think present statute gives Customs broad authority to exercise its enforcement responsibilities in this respect. I do not think the bill really limits or inhibits the Customs Service except for the problem of random samplings.

If anybody has to do that, it should be the Department of Commerce which has the expertise in this high technology area, to know what it is doing when it goes on an inspection tour.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee.

Let me read a little section in the report here that says, section 103 of the bill which it says amends section 12:

To limit enforcement activities by the Customs Service to pre-seizure targeted inspections, detentions, preliminary investigations and seizures, and to require that upon seizure.

Then it goes on to refer to the Department of Commerce.

My question is, Is a matter of commonsense in this scenario when you get the anonymous call that there are some laser lenses contained in a certain container in the third row from the right on the dock, does Customs Service have the right to go in and break that package open and maybe some other packages?

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I think the language in the bill is absolutely clear. To answer your question, I do so as follows: In fact, the Customs Service could not make an arrest, could not detain.

The language on page 6 clearly limits the authority of the Customs Service. That is the form the bill is written.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will continue to yield.

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. What you are saying is that if flight 83 has taken off and they have to go back and check with Commerce to get the OK, that is going to impede them?

Mr. COURTER. That is correct.

(On request of Mr. MICA and by unanimous consent, Mr. ROTH was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MICA. I would disagree very strongly with the interpretation that has been given. Customs does not need prior authority from Commerce to do its job. Customs operates under a number of authorities.

Under this specific legislation Customs has certain duties that it must follow, certain responsibilities. They operate under numerous jurisdictions. Only for random searches under this particular piece of legislation.

If the gentleman will allow me to continue a moment, I think the people of this country want to see more enforcement and they would like to see a good job done by Customs and Commerce. That is why I am opposing the Hutto amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to remember that Customs is not an enforcement agency like Commerce is. Commerce sets the policy, in fact, it is training the Customs officers. I think that is a difference that we must also recognize.

Mr. MICA. I appreciate the gentleman's comment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman (Mr. ROTH) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. COURTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. ROTH was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the gentleman simply this: He mentioned that he wants to see Customs and Commerce people do their job. If you add up the total amount of moneys that are available for execution of their job under Customs and Commerce, regardless of the division, the difference in the division, it looks like it is what, $14 million for Customs and $15 million for Commerce, something like $29 million, which is considerably less than what the President asked for.

If in fact efficiency in running this thing in an expeditious manner and making thorough checks is to some degree a function of money, why did you cut the bucks off? Why is there a lower amount of money than what the President asked for?

Mr. ROTH. Well, as I said, it is not so much the money, it is not how much money you have, it is the kind of personnel you have. And I think the people at Commerce, quite frankly, the job that they have done is commendable. I think with the amount of money we have allocated, they can do the job that is expected of them.

I think that is one more reason why the provision in the bill should stand.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and I will stop now.

It seems to me we have a classic case when the proponents of the bill as written say that the bill says one thing, and when those people who are concerned with it, the clear reading, it seems to me, says something else.

If the bill says what the proponents of the legislation say it did, I would not have any problems with it.

But I think the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) clearly put the question when he raised the question as to whether the Customs Service could make an arrest or interfere or stop the export of these laser lenses, when they were given an anonymous phone call or something.

Under the legislation as written, clearly they could not.

I urge the body to vote for the Hutto amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENZEL) there were—ayes 8, noes 14.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

□ 1610

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

□ 1620

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PICKLE

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PICKLE: Page 13, line 18, strike out the quotation marks and second period.

Page 13, insert the following after line 18: "(7) Agreement to provide for the imposition and enforcement of export sanctions by the governments participating in the committee against the Soviet Union or any other country if the Soviet Union or other country commits violent acts against unarmed civilians of another country.".

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted this amendment to the chairman of the subcommittee and to the ranking member of the subcommittee. It appears on page 26205 of the September 28, 1983, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment would seek an agreement to provide for certain export sanctions by the governments participating in the committee as against the Soviet Union or any other country if they commit violent acts against unarmed civilians of other countries.

Mr. Chairman, over the past several years, the United States has attempted, largely unsuccessfully, to impose economic or other sanctions against the Soviet Union as a means of expressing our displeasure with Soviet acts of aggression against the world.

I am sure the Members of this House share my disappointment in the uneven and unpredictable nature of Western support for U.S. efforts to retaliate against the Soviets for these acts of aggression. The brutal attack on Korean flight 007 is only the latest example of how this lack of Western solidarity serves to make the entire civilized world appear impotent in the face of Soviet violence.

In 1980, in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the United States stopped licensing exports of strategic goods and high-technology items, deferred consideration of SALT II, boycotted the 1980 Olympic games and placed an embargo on grain sales. However, the support from other Western nations and our allies was less than enthusiastic.

In 1981, the United States imposed sanctions against Poland and later against the Soviet Union in response to the imposition of martial law in Poland. The sanctions included termination of the Export-Import Bank credit insurance; suspension of Polish airline landing rights; suspension of Polish fishing rights in U.S. waters; and a request that our allies restrict high-technology sales to Poland. Again, the support from our allies was less than enthusiastic.

In both cases, the unwillingness of our allies to join us in imposing sanctions against the Soviets undermined our efforts to retaliate effectively against Soviet aggression.

But as so many of the Members of this House noted just 2 weeks ago, we do need to do something. I think we can. Mr. Chairman, my amendment calls on the President to negotiate an agreement with the Cocom governments if he can that assured sanctions to be negotiated will be invoked in the event of any future Soviet attack on unarmed civilians of another nation. I think this amendment is a constructive proposal in the wake of one of the most brutal attacks on civilians in peacetime in recent history. We need to seek some kind of agreement in advance with our Cocom members so that we might be able to excise our collective will—I do it together, of course, we may not be able to get our committee together, but we ought to try.

I ask for your support.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the gentleman for attempting to deal with a very difficult issue, and that is how can we involve our allies in collective action on future occasions when we attempt to use economic sanctions and we find ourselves really the only country willing to take that step. The result often is that we do more punishment to our own exporters than we do to the adversarial nation.

So I think the gentleman is on the right track, and although the Cocom organization deals primarily with national security controls, and generally we are talking about foreign policy controls, I do think that the gentleman's amendment in this case is relevant.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest one change, and perhaps it can be accomplished by unanimous consent, and that is that on line 2, it refers to enforcement of sanctions by the governments.

Mr. PICKLE. The wording is the enforcement of "export" sanctions. That is in the amendment.

Mr. BONKER. All right. If the gentleman is offering in his language "export sanctions" or "export controls," I think that is completely agreeable.

Mr. PICKLE. That is the wording.

Mr. BONKER. I would be pleased to support it.

Mr. PICKLE. That is the wording at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE) has expired.

(On request of Mr. LAGOMARSINO and by unanimous consent, Mr. PICKLE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to commend the gentleman for this amendment. It seems to me that the gentleman makes a very good point when he talks about deciding in advance what kind of action we would take. Unfortunately, however, it really is not that kind of a situation in many respects, because although the gentleman mentions Afghanistan as being a 1980 phenomenon, it goes on today, and I suspect that even as we speak there may well be violations that would come within the coverage of the gentleman's amendment, that is, attacks on unarmed civilians.

So I think it is very important that we do this. I think it is important that we have agreements with our allies ahead of time if we possibly can, although we can never foresee exactly what the Soviets are going to do. Had we had that kind of consultation, for example, prior to the 1980 invasion of Afghanistan, it is very likely that we would have had much better cooperation from our allies and others than we ended up having. That, of course, affects the effectiveness and, as has been pointed out, the way it is now, most of the burden falls on American business and that is not only unfair, it is ineffective.

But could we have the cooperation of other countries in the world, perhaps it would be more effective, so I hope the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

Mr. PICKLE. I hope we can get that cooperation. Certainly if we do nothing, we will be just like we are, and that is not very helpful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. PICKLE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman on his amendment. I think it is a very good amendment. I think it sets a goal. It gives a target to shoot for so that we are not always caught off guard.

It provides for some forward looking thinking, which is something that we in this body must always appreciate.

Another purported concept I like about the amendment, it accepts foreign policy controls. As the chairman of our committee has pointed out, foreign policy control is one very important element of this legislation.

So I wanted to compliment the gentleman on his amendment and his forward thinking.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for support of the amendment.

□ 1630

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE) transcends the bounds of germaneness in that it goes beyond the purposes of the bill.

I did not raise a point of order because I felt the gentleman's amendment was a good idea, and, in addition, was not forcing on anyone and not mandating any particular action. It was simply calling for the best effort on the part of the President to do something that we would all like him to do if he can.

In the future, however, if there are amendments that seem to go beyond the rules of the House, and are forcing, or do establish bars or prohibitions, I simply want to serve notice that I will attempt in those cases to raise points of order.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. SNOWE

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. SNOWE: Page 3, line 14, strike out "paragraph" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraphs".

"(4) Any individual or business concern that violates any national security control imposed under section 5 of this Act which the United States maintains cooperatively with other countries, or any regulation, order, or license related thereto, may be subject to such controls on the importing of its goods or technology into the United States or its territories and possessions as the President may prescribe.".

Ms. SNOWE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman from Maine (Ms. SNOWE) would like to proceed, I will reserve my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) reserves his point of order.

The gentlewoman from Maine (Ms. SNOWE) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of her amendment.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, as we begin to mark up the Export Administration Act, I do believe that the committee should give consideration to a serious problem, and that is, of course, the leakage of militarily critical technology to the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc nations. As the situation currently exists, we find that there are companies that indeed sell sensitive technology to the Soviet Union. These sales are in direct violation of Cocom agreements, not to mention the fact that these violations are done at the expense of law-abiding U.S. companies.

There is no effective deterrence mechanism within Cocom or within the Export Administration Act to prevent the diversion of technology to the Soviet Union. So what I am seeking to do by this amendment is not only to insure the security interests of the Western alliance, but also, I believe, to establish the principle of fairness, that is, that U.S. companies should no longer have to suffer the loss of foreign markets because foreign firms evade our international agreements simply to increase their sale of goods.

So what my amendment does is to provide the President of the United States with the discretionary authority to impose import restrictions upon any company or individual who violates multilateral agreements concerning national security controls.

The purpose of my amendment is essentially twofold: First, to put our Cocom partners on notice that we adhere to Cocom agreements and we expect them to do so as well; and second, to provide firm enforcement language to indicate that the United States expects compliance by all parties to Cocom agreements.

Cocom was formed in 1949. The United States joined with our allies to form what was called the Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls, and the stated goal of that committee is to insure that high technology goods with direct and indirect military applications be denied access to our adversary nations. We find that the United States has faithfully abided by all of these agreements; unfortunately, some of our allies have not.

As examples, businesses operating abroad, supposedly operating under the restrictions of Cocom, have been found to sell strategic technology to the Soviet Union, so the Soviet Union has profited, not only in saving millions of dollars in research and development but also in time and effort and in many other ways that give them the advantage in military security, not to mention the fact that it also jeopardizes our national security interests.

The present Export Administration Act does not provide a solution to this problem. The purpose of the import control penalty that I advocate is to give the United States a strong new role to deter these companies and individuals who persistently, deliberately, and willfully violate Cocom. I believe that in a sense this amendment would strengthen Cocom and the security interests of the free world. As we have noted, in the past Cocom has not been entirely effective because no government has been willing to challenge the violators.

We have indeed documentation of many cases where foreign governments have chosen to look the other way rather than interfere with the economic gain of a particular company that lies within its jurisdiction and is in violation of Cocom agreements.

To quote Jim Mack of the National Machine Tool Builders Association, he said this before a committee of the Congress: That the threat of the imposition of import sanctions "may well be the only effective tool to insure that there is a more effective Cocom." He went on to say this:

Experience has taught us that simple persuasion and endless negotiations have not been effective in assuring multilateral compliance with multilateral agreements to control exports for the protection of the mutual security of the Western Alliance.

The domestic machine tool industry provides a perfect illustration of the dilemma that we face today. Machine tools have been essentially regulated under the Export Administration Act because they have been important to our defense production. Take, for example, the fact that in 1981 the Soviet Union imported more than 1 billion dollars' worth of machine tools. The United States only supplied $17 million of that market. But comparable equipment manufactured by our Cocom partners entered the Communist countries in clear violation of Cocom agreements.

Therefore, my amendment would not only insure that our allies would be required to uphold their obligations to deny potential adversaries access to essential technology, but, I also believe that my amendment would undercut any monetary gain as a motivating force for violating national security controls and would also serve to further enhance the effectiveness of Cocom as an organization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Maine (Ms. SNOWE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. SNOWE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, I believe, would not cause any problems for our trading partners. It is limited in scope to those countries that participate in Cocom. This important control penalty that I advocate would impose restrictions only on U.S. companies, U.S. subsidiaries, and U.S. licensees of the U.S. technology that violates multilateral agreements or violates national security controls.

That is all we are talking about here. It would not extend the extraterritorial reach of the U.S. Government beyond those individual violators. In fact, it would not restrict the imports of a country as a whole. It would only restrict the imports of a company or an individual who happens to violate these agreements.

I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, I say to the members of this committee, that we must put Cocom on notice that we are not going to tolerate or accept these violations, and that we in the United States are willing to take meaningful action against those who are willing to turn export controls to their own advantage at the expense of Western security goals.

I might also say that the Commerce Department informed me that in 1982 there were 10 companies in violation of national security controls. That is 10 too many. Certainly one is too many. I believe if this amendment were in place, we would have an effective deterrence against those violators who are willing to breach national security controls.

Finally, I might add two other points. One is that if a company had a choice between illegal trade and losing lucrative U.S. markets, I do not believe it would be a difficult decision for them to make.

□ 1640

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. SNOWE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. SNOWE. Finally, I might add, Mr. Chairman, that as we begin to relax some of the trade restrictions under the Export Administration Act, I think it is even more essential that we have an effective mechanism in place to insure that we do not jeopardize Western security interests.

Therefore, I would urge that the committee would support and adopt this amendment.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order and I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is in violation of clause 7, rule XVI, and is not germane to the bill.

The tests of germaneness include whether the fundamental purpose of an amendment is germane to the fundamental purpose of the bill or title and whether an amendment contemplates a method of achieving that end that is closely allied to the method encompassed in the bill.

Another test of germaneness is whether an amendment, when considered as a whole, is within the jurisdiction of the committee reporting the bill and whether the amendment demonstrably affects a law within another committee's jurisdiction.

The Ways and Means Committee is the committee with jurisdiction over restrictions on the importation of goods and services. Also, section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 governs the control of imports that have an effect on national security. The gentlewoman's amendment clearly seeks to establish a separate mechanism and authority for controlling imports if the effect on the national security is related to high technology exports and, therefore, demonstrably affects a law within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Chairman, because I believe the amendment violates both of those tests of germaneness, I make a point of order that the amendment violates clause 7, rule XVI.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlewoman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Ms. SNOWE. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman is recognized.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, I certainly rise in opposition to the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota.

First of all, let me indicate that the amendment I have offered meets the test of germaneness, I believe, as outlined in rule XVI, clause 7:

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The subject that we have under consideration is a bill that modifies the Export Administration Act. This act deals with the flow of goods between the United States and foreign countries, and with an organization we maintain cooperatively with other countries to regulate the flow of goods and technology between all countries of the world. Specifically, the report of the Foreign Affairs Committee states as the purpose of the act:

The Export Administration Act of 1979 provides broad authority for controlling the export from the United States to potential adversary nations of civilian goods and technology.

The report goes on to state:

The broad policy provision of the act allows considerable latitude to the executive branch to implement national security and trade policies.

The subject of my amendment, similarly, deals with the flow of goods between the United States and foreign countries. My amendment allows the executive branch authority to protect national security and to conduct a coherent trade policy.

My amendment provides the President certain powers, namely, the imposition of import controls, as a means of enforcing the cooperative agreements we maintain with other countries.

The amendment is offered to the violations section of the bill and, as such, merely extends the already existing powers available to punish violations under the Export Administration Act.

My amendment also meets the fundamental purpose test of germaneness. The Rules of the House under rule 16 indicate that the fundamental purpose of an amendment must be germane to the fundamental purpose of the bill. In this instance, the fundamental purpose of both the bill and the amendment is to allow the United States to effectively regulate the flow of goods between countries. Deschler's Procedure, chapter 28, section A6.1 indicates:

In order to be germane, an amendment must not only have the same end as the matter sought to be amended, but must contemplate a method of achieving that end that is closely allied to the method encompassed in the bill . . .

I would point out to the Chair that the bill we are considering contains language in section 322 of title III prohibiting the import into the United States of South African Krugerrands or other gold coins minted in South Africa. Thus, the bill already contains specific language imposing import restrictions. The import control language in my amendment follows the purpose of the bill as reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee—that of controlling sensitive technology which is vital to our national security.

The House rules further indicate that a general subject may be amended by specific propositions of the same class. As elaboration, I cite section A9.21 of chapter 28 of Deschler's Procedure:

Where a bill seeks to accomplish a general purpose by diverse methods, an amendment which adds a specific method to accomplish that result may be germane.

In this instance, the general purpose of the bill is to authorize U.S. participation in Cocom and to regulate the flow of sensitive technology between countries. My amendment sets forth a specific method, that of import control authority, as a means to accomplish the general purpose of the bill.

Deschler's Procedure further states in chapter 28, section A5.1:

In determining the fundamental purpose of a bill and of an amendment offered thereto, the Chair may examine the broad scope of the bill and the stated purpose of the amendment and need not be bound by ancillary purposes that are merely suggested by the amendment.

I would point out to the Chair that my amendment has as its broad purpose the strengthening of our export policy and our relationship with our Cocom partners. That, as well, is what is addressed in the scope of the bill before us.

My amendment also meets the test of committee jurisdiction in determining germaneness. The Foreign Affairs Committee, under rule X, is given jurisdiction over:

(1) Relations of the United States with foreign nations generally,

(2) Measures to foster commercial intercourse with foreign nations and to safeguard American business interests abroad, and

(3) Measures relating to international economic policy.

My amendment falls generally under these jurisdictional grants, and specifically is covered by the authority of the Foreign Affairs Committee "to foster commercial intercourse with foreign nations and to safeguard American business interests abroad."

The purpose of my amendment is to strengthen our Cocom alliance and to bring about a better system of international commerce. My amendment, in addition, seeks to safeguard American businesses and to make certain they are put on an equal footing with foreign competitors.

I am not, I might add, seeking to establish overall trade policy. The intent of the amendment is to simply strengthen the provisions of this bill. My amendment only provides import authority under a very limited set of circumstances, and that is when a company or an individual violates a national security control of Cocom. The provision is directly related to the Export Administration Act, and is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

I might add that the committee just accepted an amendment by the gentleman from Texas that essentially does the same thing that my committee amendment purports to do.

I thank the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SEIBERLING). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair has examined the sanctions contained in the Export Administration Act and is satisfied that the act as amended by the pending bill does not contain authority to impose import sanctions, that the matter is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The gentlewoman has cited a general jurisdictional claim of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; however, the specific jurisdiction over imports is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Chair would cite the precedent appearing at chapter 28, subsection 4.34 of Deschler's Procedure:

To a title of a bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce containing diverse petroleum conservation and allocation provisions, an amendment imposing quotas on the importation of petroleum products from certain countries was held to be a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means and was ruled out as not germane.

The Chair would also cite chapter 28, subsection 4.30 of Deschler's Procedure wherein:

To a section of a bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture providing a 1-year price support for milk, an amendment expressing the sense of the Congress that the President shall impose certain tariff duties on imported dairy products was held to go beyond the purview of the pending section and to involve a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and was ruled out as not germane.

There are other similar precedents, but it seems to the Chair those are sufficient for purposes of supporting this ruling.

Accordingly, the Chair rules that the amendment of the gentlewoman is not germane, to title I and, therefore, it is ruled out of order. The point of order is sustained.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COURTER

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COURTER: Page 13, insert the following after line 20:

SEC. 108. (a) Section 5(f)(1) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(f)(1)) is amended by inserting after the second sentence the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'detrimental to the national security of the United States' means likely to result in a significant reduction in the military capabilities of the United States or likely to result in a significant advance in the military capabilities of countries to which the goods or technology involved are controlled under this section."

Page 13, strike out line 20 and "2404(f)(4)" on line 21 and insert in lieu thereof "(b) Section 5(f)(4) of the Act".

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I had the amendment read because it is not a long one. Basically, the amendment adds a definition to words that have already been in the act.

Right now, as we know, the act permits the export of militarily critical technologies, to controlled countries if they are available in sufficient quantity and quality to make the requirement of a validated license ineffective. The bill goes on and says that, "Unless the President determines that the absence of export controls would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States."

In other words, there is an overriding exception that is designated in the act. Now, I felt, and also, Mr. Chairman, the ladies and gentlemen of the special panel of the House Armed Services Committee that reviewed the act felt that we should have a definition of what is meant by "detrimental to the national security of the United States." We define that simply by using the following words:

Those actions that would result in a significant reduction in the military capabilities of this country or a significant advance in the military capabilities of the country receiving the technology.

Therefore, the amendment is a very simple one. It simply attempts to clarify what we mean by detrimental to the national security of the United States. It does not in essence add a new feature to the act, it does not change the act significantly. We think that as members of the Armed Services Committee it clarifies really what we mean by national security.

I yield to the gentleman who is the chairman of the committee who has jurisdiction over the matter (Mr. BONKER).

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We have had an opportunity to examine the gentleman's amendment. I would like to ask, on page 13 you strike language beginning on line 20. Can you explain the intent of that deletion?

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I noticed that myself. I ask unanimous consent at this particular time to strike from my amendment the last three lines which is exactly applicable to the language that the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER) referred to. That was not intended to be part of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONKER. So what we are faced with now is the amendment as you have presented it which adds language on page 13 that relates to the term "detrimental to the national security of the United States"?

Mr. COURTER. That is correct. We are left with that particular language. The language simply defines what we mean by detrimental to this country as two instances.

First, reducing our capabilities, or increasing the capabilities of a country on which controls are placed.

Mr. BONKER. I have no problems with the gentleman's amendment. I think it is consistent with what we are attempting to achieve in this bill.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman for his agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER), as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HUGHES

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUGHES: Page 5, strike out lines 3 through 24.

Page 6, line 1, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

Page 6, line 24, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

Page 6, lines 24 and 25, strike out "seizure, forfeiture," and insert in lieu thereof "forfeiture".

Page 7, line 3, strike out "seizures and".

Page 7, line 5, strike out "this subsection or".

Page 7, line 7, strike out "this subsection or".

Page 7, lines 10 and 11, strike out "this subsection and".

Mr. HUGHES (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington reserves a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is one of a series of bills in which other committees of the House have authorized wide-ranging law enforcement authority for departments or agencies of the Government without the opportunity for the Committee on the Judiciary to make an in-depth analysis of these provisions. This is, as I stated in the committee debate on the RCRA bill, another example of the unnecessary proliferation of law enforcement authority.

The bill provides that the Secretary of Commerce may designate any officer or employee of the Department to execute warrants, make arrests without warrant, search without warrant, seize without warrant, and carry firearms. My amendment would strike these authorities.

Before we permit this proliferation of law enforcement authority to continue, the Congress, and specifically this committee, should take a close look at whether it is justifiable in each instance and, even if it is justifiable in a particular instance, whether an omnibus coordinated approach would make much more sense.

The granting of law enforcement authority to the Commerce Department and to other Federal agencies raises questions of efficiency and coordination. The question is whether it is efficient for Commerce Department officials to begin conducting searches and seizures. Their primary function in the enforcement of this particular statute is to investigate the export trading cases. It is the job of other law enforcement authorities, specifically the Customs Service, to conduct searches and seizures and make arrests. I believe it is inefficient to duplicate law enforcement efforts and training for these agencies. I believe that duplicative training of officers is unnecessary and a waste of the taxpayers' money. The situation compounds the problem of inefficient use of time when one considers that frequent retraining in law enforcement techniques is essential.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this type of request from various agencies of the Government teaches us one thing: Our law enforcement efforts are not efficiently coordinated. Rather than continuing to expand the number of agencies that have law enforcement authority, I believe that we should strive to utilize the law enforcement resources that we have in a much more efficient manner. This, of course, would require a termination of the turf battles that exist between and among agencies and require them to coordinate their activities and work in an efficient manner. The amendment which the Members have before them seeks to encourage that end. I urge the support of the Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER) insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of a point of order, and would like to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, this committee has already debated and voted on the law enforcement provisions that are contained under title 1. We were able to determine, I think by a division vote, that the Commerce Department needs the resources and the authority to do an effective job on enforcement.

Now the gentleman says that the Judiciary Committee has not had the opportunity to consider whether this new enforcement authority is justified. Actually the Judiciary Committee had referral of this bill but they never considered it, or at least they never reported out an amendment as the Armed Services Committee has done as a result of its sequential referral over the legislation.

So, I feel that to come in now with an amendment, after the Judiciary Committee failed to exercise its proper role in our consideration of this section of the bill, and the fact that the Committee of the Whole has now had an opportunity to debate the enforcement sections contained in title 1, that this amendment ought to be defeated.

Therefore, I propose that we oppose the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONKER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

□ 1700

Mr. HUGHES. The gentleman is correct.

The Committee on the Judiciary did not take this up, but that is because, first of all, the Judiciary Committee did not have very much time. It fell at a very bad time. We were unable to get a quorum, as the gentleman perhaps may know. So we were not able to deal with the problem.

But we have taken a very similar position as other agencies have endeavored to proliferate law enforcement authority. The Environmental Protection Agency now wants to have law enforcement authority. The Department of Labor wants certain law enforcement authority for certain aspects of their enforcement authority and, frankly, it is a question of where do you stop.

We have law enforcement agencies that have primary responsibility for enforcement.

Mr. BONKER. I would just say we are attempting to give the Commerce Department new enforcement authority and the resources to do the job. If we fail to make that complete, then they are not going to do the job effectively.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BONKER AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HUGHES

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BONKER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HUGHES: Page 5, strike out lines 1 through 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) The Secretary may designate any officer or employee of the Department of Commerce who is carrying out enforcement functions under paragraph (1) to execute any warrant or other process issued by a court or officer of competent jurisdiction with respect to the enforcement of the provisions of this Act, and the Secretary may designate any certified law enforcement officer to carry firearms in executing such warrant or process. The Secretary shall ensure that the officers and employees designated under this paragraph have the appropriate training to exercise the authorities for which they are so designated.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRENZEL. The amendment says that it strikes out lines 1 through 22. The copy of the bill I am working off of goes through line 24. Have I gotten a bad copy?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment strikes out through line 22 and that lines 23 through 25 are a separate subsection.

Mr. FRENZEL. We are on page 5 of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, may I further inquire, then does it strike out section 103(1)(2)(A)(B)?

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes out page 5, lines 1 through 22 and it inserts in lieu thereof the language in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER).

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I will not consume the 5 minutes.

What the substitute attempts to do is to retain the authority in the bill for the Commerce Department to engage in searches, seizures, and arrests, but it will require a warrant. In other words, what we want to do is address what I think is the Judiciary Committee's concern that any officer of the Commerce Department can engage in this activity freely but that it must seek and gain a warrant before it carries out its duties under this law.

I hope the gentleman could accept that as a compromise.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have to reluctantly oppose the amendment. Basically all it does is just eliminate the authority to make warrantless arrests.

I do not see that as an improvement. If anything, I think that that would be counterproductive.

If you are going to grant arrest authority then it seems to me you have to grant full arrest authority. So I would find that the worst of all worlds.

But it does not take away from the fact that we have a proliferation of law enforcement functions in a number of agencies. It is not a question that the Customs Service cannot provide the function. They can. They have the jurisdiction. The Customs Service is in a law enforcement agency and they have jurisdiction.

The fact of the matter is we have a turf battle between two agencies and we have it every day of the week between law enforcement agencies. We are proliferating that type of confrontation between agencies that have law enforcement functions.

Where are you going to stop? Just about every agency and department of Government has enforcement authority. Are you going to give them police authority to boot? Are you going to give each and every agency that has some enforcement authority the right to make arrests, the right to make searches and seizures?

It seems to me that we have got to stem the tide of creating this kind of authority in every agency. This is a situation that I think is just going to proliferate the kind of confrontation that works against law enforcement in this country.

We have situations where they fight over who is going to make the arrests. Fistfights take place between agencies as to who in fact is going to make the arrest under given circumstances because we have created a proliferation of this authority.

It seems to me what we have to do is defeat this amendment.

We have a law enforcement agency that has primary responsibility for it. If they do not have enough resources, we should provide for the resources for the Customs Service. But the enforcement authority remains in Customs and that is where we should keep it.

Mr. BONKER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. The Customs Service does not have the statutory responsibility in this case to administer and enforce the Export Administration Act.

What we have attempted to do in the earlier debate was to properly define the role of those two agencies. We have done that and we have now authorized money for both agencies to do their work.

But if now we accept the gentleman's amendment we withdraw the authorities that are in this bill and then they will not have the tools necessary to do an effective enforcement job.

The gentleman keeps talking about the proliferation of law enforcement agencies but he is not looking at the merits of this particular bill. The Department of Commerce is charged with the responsibility of enforcement action under the Export Administration Act. If you withdraw this authority I do not know how they will equip themselves to do the job we ask of them.

Mr. HUGHES. The fact of the matter is the Customs Service has the authority to enforce the Export Administration Act.

Mr. BONKER. The Customs Service does not have the responsibility. There is no statutory reference whatsoever for the Customs Service to enforce the act.

This program was conceived by the White House in cooperation with the Defense Department to get the Customs Service into random inspections. The Department of Commerce has always had the responsibility.

The criticism has been that they did not do it effectively. If we do not give them the personnel and if we do not give them the authority, then they cannot be effective in the job that we ask of them.

So we are giving them new authority. The responsibility is already there. It does not rest with the Customs Service. They already have law enforcement authorities under other statutes.

Mr. HUGHES. The Customs Service, as I understand the law, has ample authority to enforce the Export Administration provisions that have been violated.

Mr. BONKER. I will have to correct the gentleman. There is nothing in the existing Export Administration Act that makes any reference whatsoever to the Customs Service. This Operation Exodus program was developed within the administration. The law charges the Department of Commerce with enforcement.

Mr. HUGHES. The fact remains that the Customs Service has arrest authority to enforce the general laws dealing with the borders, to the export of the technology, which falls within the parameters and jurisdiction of the Customs Service.

If in fact there are specific situations that occur where an official within the Commerce Department needs to be deputized, we have the authority to do that. If specific individuals need specific authority on specific cases, why do we have to grant broad law enforcement authority to Commerce at this point?

□ 1710

Mr. BONKER. Well, the gentleman is correct. The Customs Service has broad authority to enforce trade laws, but it does not have any specific authority to date in the Export Administration Act. And that is what we are attempting to deal with here.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey has phrased the situation correctly, I believe. It is a matter of turf.

The committee of jurisdiction, however, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has looked at the law and decided that the agency that is in charge of administering the law should also enforce the law.

I do not see why the rest of us should second-guess the jurisdictional committee's decision and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Washington will be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

Messrs. BURTON of Indiana, CRAIG, MILLER of California, WAXMAN, and MAVROULES, and Mrs. BOXER changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. WALGREN and Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, in order to conform my amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment as follows:

Page 5, strike out lines 1 through 22.

Page 6, line 21, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

Page 6, lines 21 and 22, strike out "seizure, forfeiture," and insert in lieu thereof "forfeiture".

Page 6, line 25, strike out "seizures and".

Page 7, line 2, strike out "this subsection or".

Page 7, line 4, strike out "this subsection or".

Page 7, lines 7 and 8, strike out "this subsection and".

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to solicit an explanation as to what the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) has done by his unanimous consent request.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this is what I have done: This merely conforms my amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, the amendment that was drawn to the original bill. That is all it does.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey to modify his amendment?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would, under my reservation of a right to object, ask the gentleman to just explain the gist of his amendment. After all that we heard on the last amendment, I kind of lost track of what it does exactly.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I might say to the gentleman that the amendment strikes the arrest and the warrant and warrantless arrested party that is in the legislation. It would provide basically for a police department within the Department of Commerce when in fact the Customs Service already has a broad law enforcement authority.

There basically is a turf battle between some enforcement officers within Commerce and basically the Customs Service, and I just do not think that it is well for us to continue to proliferate law enforcement authority in every agency and department that has some enforcement function.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and let me say that I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) to modify his amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I think that all the Members understand the amendment. I am not going to take a great deal of time.

I just think that this is an important principle. Every agency and department in the Government of the United States has some enforcement function. If we were to give each and every agency the authority to make arrests, warrant and warrantless arrests, and the right to make searches and seizures, we would be proliferating the law enforcement function into every nook and cranny of every agency and department of the Government.

We do have right now sufficient authority in the Customs Service to enforce the Export Administration Act. To try to single out this special group over in the Department of Commerce for this type of authority is, I think, not the right way for us to go. We should stem the hemorrhage of law enforcement authority and shore up the agencies and departments that already have law enforcement functions. The Department of the Treasury already has enforcement authority in this area of the law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I disagree with the gentleman's assertion that Members understand this amendment. I do not believe they understand the amendment unless they have had the benefit of being here for the past hour and engaging in the debate.

Mr. Chairman, the Department of Commerce has the statutory responsibility for enforcement of the export Administration Act. The U.S. Customs Service presently is not recognized by the act. It charges the Department of Commerce to carry out the enforcement responsibilities.

What the Hughes amendment does is to remove Commerce's ability to carry out its enforcement responsibilities, and if that occurs, then the Customs Service that has general law enforcement authority moves in.

If Members are in favor of exports, if in their districts they have run across examples of the Customs Service unnecessarily detaining exports through its Operation Exodus program, then they have to vote against this amendment. If we are going to have an efficient export control policy, it is the Department of Commerce that must have that authority because they have the expertise.

So, Mr. Chairman, if Members are for exports, if they are for more efficiency in the enforcement of this program, they have got to vote down the Hughes amendment and stay with the committee.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman and his subcommittee and his full committee have reaffirmed that the Department of Commerce is the administrator of the Export Administration Act, which has been a fact for many years. They have been obliged to rely on the Customs Service for enforcement. They will continue to rely on the Customs Service for a good deal of their enforcement.

However, the gentleman's committee and other committees of Congress have decided that we would be more effective in our enforcement of this act and we could prevent illegal imports if the Commerce Department had a little extra authority to enforce what it must administer. In this bill we give the Commerce Department a little money for enforcement, and now if we accept the Hughes amendment, they will not be able to execute that enforcement.

Mr. Chairman, if Members want to protect our country against illegal imports, if they want the best administration of the Export Administration Act, they will vote down the Hughes amendment.

□ 1750

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation, the language that is found in the bill on page 6, line 17, is still a part of the legislation, which says that notwithstanding any other provision of law, not more than $14 million may be expended by the U.S. Customs Service in any fiscal year in the enforcement of export controls.

Now, is it not the case that if the Hughes amendment is adopted that we will be saying to the Customs Service, "You have the entire con here, but you only have $14 million."

How are we going to enforce the law that we have written and put on the books if that were to occur?

Mr. BONKER. The gentleman is precisely correct. Furthermore, we have given the Commerce Department the money to do an effective job. To remove the law enforcement authority, I think, is to waste the money.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I would like to just point out, Mr. Chairman, that there are some footnotes to this that ought to be made plain.

First of all, this reenactment bill contains a good deal of new language. The language which is the subject of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is not language that was ever contained in the existing act. This is new authorizing language to allow for the Department of Commerce to acquire law enforcement capability which they do not now have the authority to continue on with.

In addition, there is no requirement that anyone under this act carrying firearms be a certified law enforcement officer. There is no requirement that anybody making a warrantless arrest be a certified law enforcement officer. There is nobody even required when making an arrest, not even a warrantless arrest, to be a certified law enforcement officer.

This bill greatly expands the power of the Department of Commerce, which now exists, to enforce their laws to the point where they enforce them by law enforcement, rather than legal enforcement.

The difference is that the Department of Commerce may now attempt to make a case, bring the legal proceedings to the Justice Department, and have the people who violate it brought to trial.

The problem with this bill is this provides for the Department of Commerce to get law enforcement capability in effect to be able to be a law enforcement agency. They do not have the men, the materiel, the personnel or anyone else right now to do this.

I would suggest to my colleagues here that this is not the appropriate way to have the Government run. Every agency should not be able to be a police agency.

There needs to be a comprehensive approach. This would be the worst possible way to get a comprehensive approach. You will have people under this bill carrying firearms because the Secretary of Commerce provides for it to these people, without ever having been certified or trained in the use of those firearms. The language is very clear.

I would suggest that at some point in time there may be a need for this kind of agency having its own law enforcement. Right now the Customs Service provides it. It can do the law enforcement work and the agency, the Commerce Department, does the legal work subsequent to the enforcement having been provided by a constituted agency with law enforcement personnel.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to joint in the statement of the gentleman from Florida. There is a tendency recently to proliferate arrest authority. We are not talking about enforcement authority. Every department has the duty to enforce something, but they do not run around with guns and the power to make arrests. They go to the agencies operating in their fields that are police agencies to make those arrests if it deemed necessary.

We just recently in our committee turned down the Environmental Protection Agency who wanted to arm its agents and send them out making arrests.

I said, not totally jocularly, "Imagine Rita Lavelle with the power to carry a gun."

I think we have enough armed people around. Customs is operating right in this area with the authority to make arrests. The Coast Guard is operating very closely to it with the power to make arrests.

It strikes me that every department wants their own armed police force. I think we have gone far enough. I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just urge support for the position that has been expressed by the gentleman from Florida. I join in support of the remarks he has made. If the trend that we have been tending to follow were to be continued, you might as well arm all the bureaucrats and give them arrest powers, because they all have some duties relating to the enforcement of law. Perhaps we have too much law enforcement power being exercised by the Federal Government, but it does not always require arrest authority and the authority to carry firearms.

I am afraid it is a very mistaken impression that is being fostered by the committee in this bill with regard to the particular aspect that we are talking about now.

Let us not go further in creating a police state. Let us rely upon the existing law enforcement authorities.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I think we need to know exactly what we are dealing with. The Export Administration Act is before this body, not the EPA.

We just have had a lot of discussion about technology leakage, items going to the Soviet Union. We are not playing games here. We are talking about technology transfer. The only body charged with enforcement in this law now or in the new law is the Department of Commerce, not Customs.

We just had a resolution here and we are about to vote on one to strip their ability to do their jobs.

Again, we are talking about the one agency in our Government that knows anything about high technology, technology transfer, the major issue of this decade. I think they are the ones that should do the job.

We just defeated, and I think some Members misunderstood this, an amendment that would have modified those powers. Certainly if we could do it over again right now, we should go back and pass the amendment that we just defeated, but that is too late. If we need to do anything right now, it is to defeat the Hughes amendment. If we want to make some adjustments in the future, certainly, but do not strip the only body in our Government that has the ability, the expertise, to look at high technology items and make a determination and to enforce the ability to do their job.

I think there has been a tremendous misunderstanding. It is the Commerce Department who deals on a day-to-day basis with high technology and international trade and it should be the Commerce Department that has every ability for law enforcement to do that job.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICA. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. The gentleman is entirely accurate on his point.

I would like to ask the Members of this body, how many have had contacts from firms in your own districts who have their products end up on docks and other holding places because the people they are supposed to be dealing with in Customs do not have the technical expertise to make an evaluation.

When you have that kind of factor of unreliability added, can you imagine whether or not they are going to go to a French firm that has the opportunity to deliver products on time? I can tell you that is the case and that is why we have to keep the people involved who do have the expertise, the people from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, let me say, I think Customs has a role. Obviously, it has a role. We are not trying to eliminate the role of Customs. Customs should play a part. Commerce should play a part. The expertise and the ability of both should be used; but the gentleman is right. This is a turf battle. Some are saying, "Just give it all to Customs. They don't involve themselves in international trade. They are not high technology experts, but give it all to Customs."

I think the American people want to see a stop in this flow of technology transfer and we know that the Commerce Department is the department with that expertise.

□ 1800

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICA. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HUTTO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Members need to know that we are greatly increasing the role of Commerce as an enforcement agency which they do not now possess. Is that not correct?

Mr. MICA. As I have said several times here today during the debate, all afternoon, Customs is not in any way charged with the authority in this legislation for export administration. Commerce has that role. We are simply giving them the ability to fulfill that role.

Mr. HUTTO. Through general law Customs has been doing that. Now you are trying to give Commerce a greater role and duplication and more enforcement by the Commerce Department.

Mr. MICA. I would respectfully disagree with the gentleman. What we are trying to do is take everything out of Commerce, give it all to Customs, and I think that is inappropriate. I think this body recognizes if they understand the issue that both bodies, Commerce and Customs, should be involved in this issue. You do not just give it to one agency that does not have the expertise to do the job.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES), as modified.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 160, noes 243, not voting 30, as follows:

Mr. HUNTER, Mrs. HOLT, and Mr. JEFFORDS changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3231, the Export Administration Act of 1983.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER), a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee on which I serve, who is Chairman of the International Economic Policy and Trade Subcommittee for his efforts in reporting this legislation to the floor. This is a carefully drafted bill, Mr. Chairman, which responsibly balances the national security interests of our country with the need to increase our export competitiveness.

During Foreign Affairs Committee consideration of this legislation, members heard much testimony about the good intentions of the current law, but the fact that its provisions set up unreasonable barriers to American exports. As evidence of this I would like to share with my colleagues excerpts of a letter I recently received from Alexander B. Trowbridge, president of the National Association of Manufacturers. The NAM represents many exporting corporations, and Mr. Trowbridge's letter evidences just why the law needs to be changed:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS,
Washington, D.C., July 29, 1983.

Hon. PETER H. KOSTMAYER,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: Soon, the House will vote on H.R. 3231—The Export Administration Act of 1983. This is very important legislation for the American business community and NAM strongly endorses it as a balanced approach to U.S. export control policies.

From the perspective of my NAM position as well as from my former service as Secretary of Commerce, I have had an opportunity to gauge the increasingly harmful impact of our export control policies on U.S. commerce over the past two decades.

Just as one recent and specific example, we received a call several months ago from a small mid-western manufacturer of scientific equipment. The firm has exported for about ten years, with 35-40% of its gross annual sales derived from its export business. One of the firm's newest product lines, an electrochemical analyzer, incorporates an embedded non-reprogramable microprocessor. To the company's knowledge, no similar instrument is produced anywhere in the world and it has no conceivable military use. In developing this innovative instrument to include a non-reprogramable microprocessor the company had no idea that they were throwing themselves into the morass of U.S. export control policies.

Scientific instruments with embedded microprocessors are controlled for national security purposes even though the microprocessor involved is readily available from suppliers in the U.S. and almost anywhere else in the world. Similar integrated circuits are used in such ordinary products as kitchen appliances, automobiles, and television sets. It is possible to export the latter products without a special license; it is not possible with the former. The rationale applied in the case of automobiles or refrigerators is that no one would buy a product costing thousands of dollars just to obtain a microprocessor costing a few dollars. It is puzzling why the very same practical approach cannot be applied to products such as scientific instruments which contain similar embedded microprocessors and which do not have end-use capabilities of significant military importance.

Is such a policy an export disincentive for U.S. firms? I'll let the small mid-western manufacture speak for itself: "We have not introduced any product previously which required licensing or other controls. As we learn more about the procedure and strain involved, we can understand the very great need for change in the export control legislation."

The irrational nature of our export control policies is hardly a revelation. It was only a year ago that the U.S. was embroiled with our Western European allies in a dispute over the U.S. controls on equipment for the Soviet gas pipeline. NAM member companies since then have reported that foreign invitations to bid often specify non-U.S. equipment. The British Credits and Guarantee Department (EGCD) has announced it will no longer insure losses on sales to the Soviet Union arising from actions by the U.S. Government. Decisions such as these cannot help but make U.S. manufacturers suppliers of last resort in transactions involving any politically sensitive area of the world.

Spectacular confrontations such as the pipeline happen only so often. Cases similar to the small scientific manufacturer's occur daily.

The Export Administration Act of 1983 (H.R. 3231) addresses some of the most fundamental issues which American industry has raised concerning U.S. export control policies. The most important provisions in the bill would:

(1) limit the interference of U.S. foreign policy controls with existing contracts and restrict these controls to goods and technology produced in the U.S.;

(2) provide a clear statutory basis for various types of multiple export licenses so that in certain instances companies would not have to receive licenses for each individual export transactions;

(3) lift the burden of U.S. licensing procedures on U.S. exports to nations such as Japan, France, Great Britain, and other major U.S. trading partners;

(4) require that foreign availability of competing products be taken into account in maintaining U.S. national security controls; and

(5) maintain Commerce Department responsibility for implemenatation of the Act and enhance the Department's power to enforce the law.

The letter goes on to say, that although there are provisions in H.R. 3231 that the association would like to see altered, the NAM expresses overall support for H.R. 3231, and concludes:

This legislation makes necessary and long overdue changes in U.S. export control policies. In fact, if H.R. 3231 were law today, the small, mid-western manufacturer mentioned earlier would find exporting its new equipment a lot easier. Section 106(f) of the bill addresses the type of problem this company is now having with U.S. control laws.

I hope that you will support H.R. 3231 as it is voted upon in the House.

Sincerely,

ALEXANDER B. TROWBRIDGE.

Mr. Trowbridge refers in his letter to a midwestern manufacturer, but exports have a tremendous impact on the economy in my own State, Pennsylvania. According to the Department of Commerce some 284,000 Pennsylvania workers owe their jobs to exporting. This is 6.5 percent of private sector employment in Pennsylvania, a figure well in excess of the U.S. national figure of 5.6 percent.

These export-related jobs are spread throughout the Pennsylvania economy. The same Department of Commerce statistics show that exports account for 171,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector, and 112,000 jobs in trade, business services, transportation, communications, utilities, and agriculture.

Because of the importance of enhancing our country's competitiveness in the world market, and because of the importance of exports to job creation in Pennsylvania, I am pleased to support strongly H.R. 3231. I look for ways to continue to work with the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, the Electronic Industries Association, the Scientific Apparatus Makers Association, and other business groups that have worked closely with the Foreign Affairs Committee on this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3231.

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3231, the Export Administration Act extension. This bill strikes the proper balance between our national security interests and our need to enhance export competitiveness.

Exports, and the jobs generated through exporting, are critical to the health and security of our domestic economy. In my district, the greater Toledo, Ohio, area, which has an unemployment rate of 11.4 percent, decreases in exports have resulted in the loss of thousands of jobs. The U.S. share of world exports has been steadily declining in recent years. Our export policies which cause foreign customers to view American companies and farmers as unreliable suppliers are part of the reason for this decline. The Export Administration Act will improve the day-to-day implementation of U.S. export controls and create jobs without compromising our national security.

The Export Administration Act of 1983 addresses some fundamental problems faced by American exporters:

First, it limits the interference of U.S. foreign policy controls over existing contracts.

Second, it provides clear statutory basis for various types of multiple export licenses so that in certain instances companies would not have to receive licenses for each individual export transaction.

Third, it lifts the burden of U.S. licensing procedures on U.S. exports to nations such as Japan, France, Great Britain, and other major U.S. trading partners.

Fourth, it requires that foreign availability of competing products be taken into account in maintaining U.S. national security controls.

We can no longer afford to give away our export markets. Passage of the Export Administration Act is crucial. It will enable U.S. business to compete more effectively in the international arena.●

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to the Export Administration Act introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GRAY). The effect of this amendment would be to direct the President to develop regulations prohibiting new investments in South Africa. Subsequently, the President would be able to lift this economic sanction only with a formal determination that the South African Government has made substantial progress toward full participation by all of its people in the social, political, and economic life of the country and toward an end to the explicitly racist development policy commonly known as apartheid.

With U.S. investment comprising over 17 percent of all foreign investment in South Africa, we are supporting, to a substantial degree, the minority white population—which represents less than one-fifth of the total population—in its use of political and economic power, and physical force, to further its notions of white supremacy and entrench it privileged position against the demands, and basic human rights, of the majority nonwhite population.

By passing the Gray amendment, we would demonstrate to the world that we are no longer willing to subsidize a regime that blatantly and brutally discriminates against the majority of its citizens.

Until the South African Government begins to alter, dramatically, its social, political, and economic structures, its policies must be recognized for what they are and for what they represent, and rejected by the world.●

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore. (Mr. WRIGHT) having assumed the chair, Mr. SEIBERLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3231) to amend the authorities contained in the Export Administration Act of 1979, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is going to make an announcement for the benefit of the Members so that we know what faces us in the immediate offing, the next some minutes.

The Chair is about to receive a message from the Senate. The Chair anticipates that it will include a message transmitting a Senate joint resolution—the Lebanon resolution.

The Chair will recognize then the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) for a motion.

Following the disposition of that resolution, we will entertain a motion to send to conference the continuing resolution.

Those two items of business will be attended to tonight and I hope on an expedited procedure.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 368. Joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) entitled "Joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes," request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. CHILES, and Mr. DECONCINI to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 159. Joint resolution providing statutory authorization under the war powers resolution for continued United States participation in the Multinational Peacekeeping Force in Lebanon in order to obtain withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, earlier today, on rollcall No. 363, to recommit H.R. 3929, with instructions, I mistakingly voted "nay" when I intended to vote "yea."

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my statement appear in the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

MULTINATIONAL FORCE IN LEBANON RESOLUTION

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 318, I call up from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 159), providing statutory authorization under the war powers resolution for continued U.S. participation in the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon in order to obtain withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 159

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This joint resolution may be cited as the "Multinational Force in Lebanon Resolution".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the removal of all foreign forces from Lebanon is an essential United States foreign policy objective in the Middle East;

(2) in order to restore full control by the Government of Lebanon over its own territory, the United States is currently participating in the multinational peacekeeping force (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "Multinational Force in Lebanon") which was established in accordance with the exchange of letters between the Governments of the United States and Lebanon dated September 25, 1982;

(3) the Multinational Force in Lebanon better enables the Government of Lebanon to establish its unity, independence, and territorial integrity;

(4) progress toward national political reconciliation in Lebanon is necessary; and

(5) United States Armed Forces participating in the Multinational Force in Lebanon are now in hostilities requiring authorization of their continued presence under the War Powers Resolution.

(b) The Congress determines that the requirements of section 4(a)(1) of the War Powers Resolution became operative on August 29, 1983. Consistent with section 5(b) of the War Powers Resolution, the purpose of this joint resolution is to authorize the continued participation of United States Armed Forces in the Multinational Force in Lebanon.

(c) The Congress intends this joint resolution to constitute the necessary specific statutory authorization under the War Powers Resolution for continued participation by United States Armed Forces in the Multinational Force in Lebanon.

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONTINUED PARTICIPATION OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES IN THE MULTINATIONAL FORCE IN LEBANON

SEC. 3. The President is authorized, for purposes of section 5(b) of the War Powers Resolution, to continue participation by United States Armed Forces in the Multinational Force in Lebanon, subject to the provisions of section 6 of this joint resolution. Such participation shall be limited to performance of the functions, and shall be subject to the limitations, specified in the agreement establishing the Multinational Force in Lebanon as set forth in the exchange of letters between the Governments of the United States and Lebanon dated September 25, 1982, except that this shall not preclude such protective measures as may be necessary to ensure the safety of the Multinational Force in Lebanon.

REPORTS TO THE CONGRESS

SEC. 4. As required by section 4(c) of the War Powers Resolution, the President shall report periodically to the Congress with respect to the situation in Lebanon, but in no event shall he report less often than once every three months. In addition to providing the information required by that section on the status, scope, and duration of hostilities involving United States Armed Forces, such reports shall describe in detail-

(1) the activities being performed by the Multinational Force in Lebanon;

(2) the present composition of the Multinational Force in Lebanon, including a description of the responsibilities and deployment of the armed forces of each participating country;

(3) the results of efforts to reduce and eventually eliminate the Multinational Force in Lebanon;

(4) how continued United States participation in the Multinational Force in Lebanon is advancing United States foreign policy interests in the Middle East; and

(5) what progress has occurred toward national political reconciliation among all Lebanese groups.

STATEMENTS OF POLICY

SEC. 5. (a) The Congress declares that the participation of the armed forces of other countries in the Multinational Force in Lebanon is essential to maintain the international character of the peacekeeping function in Lebanon.

(b) The Congress believes that it should continue to be the policy of the United States to promote continuing discussions with Israel, Syria, and Lebanon with the objective of bringing about the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon and establishing an environment which will permit the Lebanese Armed Forces to carry out their responsibilities in the Beirut area.

(c) It is the sense of the Congress that, not later than one year after the date of enactment of this joint resolution and at least once a year thereafter, the United States should discuss with the other members of the Security Council of the United Nations the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping force to assume the responsibilities of the Multinational Force in Lebanon. An analysis of the implications of the response to such discussions for the continuation of the Multinational Force in Lebanon shall be included in the reports required under paragraph (3) of section 4 of this resolution.

DURATION OF AUTHORIZATION FOR UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN THE MULTINATIONAL FORCE IN LEBANON

SEC. 6. The participation of United States Armed Forces in the Multinational Force in Lebanon shall be authorized for purposes of the War Powers Resolution until the end of the eighteen-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this resolution unless the Congress extends such authorization, except that such authorization shall terminate sooner upon the occurrence of any one of the following:

(1) the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, unless the President determines and certifies to the Congress that continued United States Armed Forces participation in the Multinational Force in Lebanon is required after such withdrawal in order to accomplish the purposes specified in the September 25, 1982, exchange of letters providing for the establishment of the Multinational Force on Lebanon; or

(2) the assumption by the United Nations or the Government of Lebanon of the responsibilities of the Multinational Force in Lebanon; or

(3) the implementation of other effective security arrangements in the area; or

(4) the withdrawal of all other countries from participation in the Multinational Force in Lebanon.

INTERPRETATION OF THIS RESOLUTION

SEC. 7. (a) Nothing in this joint resolution shall preclude the President from withdrawing United States Armed Forces participation in the Multinational Force in Lebanon if circumstances warrant, and nothing in this joint resolution shall preclude the Congress by joint resolution from directing such a withdrawal.

(b) Nothing in this joint resolution modifies, limits, or supersedes any provision of the War Powers Resolution or the requirement of section 4(a) of the Lebanon Emergency Assistance Act of 1983, relating to congressional authorization for any substantial expansion in the number or role of United States Armed Forces in Lebanon.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIORITY PROCEDURES FOR AMENDMENTS

SEC. 8. (a) Any joint resolution or bill introduced to amend or repeal this Act shall be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, as the case may be. Such joint resolution or bill shall be considered by such committee within fifteen calendar days and may be reported out, together with its recommendations, unless such House shall otherwise determine pursuant to its rules.

(b) Any joint resolution or bill so reported shall become the pending business of the House in question (in the case of the Senate the time for debate shall be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents) and shall be voted on within three calendar days thereafter, unless such House shall otherwise determine by the yeas and nays.

(c) Such a joint resolution or bill passed by one House shall be referred to the committee of the other House named in subsection (1) and shall be reported out by such committee together with its recommendations within fifteen calendar days and shall thereupon become the pending business of such House and shall be voted upon within three calendar days, unless such House shall otherwise determine by the yeas and nays.

(d) In the case of any disagreement between the two Houses of Congress with respect to a joint resolution or bill passed by both Houses, conferees shall be promptly appointed and the committee of conference shall make and file a report with respect to such joint resolution within six calendar days after the legislation is referred to the committee of conference. Notwithstanding any rule in either House concerning the printing of conference reports in the Record or concerning any delay in the consideration of such reports, such report shall be acted on by both Houses not later than six calendar days after the conference report is filed. In the event the conferees are unable to agree within forty-eight hours, they shall report back to their respective Houses in disagreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate-passed resolution (S.J. Res. 159) is essentially the same as the House-passed version except for the provision of an amendment offered by this gentleman yesterday, and that amendment required a Presidential report every 60 days; the Senate version requires the report every 90 days.

House Joint Resolution 364, which passed yesterday, included an amendment which called for a Presidential report every 60 days and an amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR) which placed the United States in opposition to the partition of Lebanon. Neither are included in the Senate version before us.

With respect to the reporting requirement we have, however, received a commitment from the President that he will report in accordance with the House resolution; that is, every 60 days, instead of every 90 days as required in the Senate-passed resolution.

And he also will include the additional information required by the amendment which was adopted by the House.

This assurance we have received verbally will be followed up with a letter to the Speaker from the President.

The Senate bill also provides for an expedited procedure on any future resolutions on this subject.

It is our understanding that this procedure that the Senate has written in is consistent with the rules of the House with respect to the committee's jurisdiction.

In my view, this provision is an improvement in two important respects.

First, it enhances our oversight capability.

Second, it given the Congress a tool with which to act even more expeditiously in the event conditions change in Lebanon.

As I referred to earlier, one regrettable and unavoidable loss as a result of the Senate's action involves the language suggested by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR).

As the Members know, that language expressed the congressional view that Lebanon should not be partitioned. Despite the absence of this language, we remain committed to the important objective it states. And I can assure the gentlewoman from Ohio we will take some action in the immediate future to insure that the Congress will have a chance to state its opposition to the partition of Lebanon.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman let me finish?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to express my appreciation to the gentleman for his efforts in getting the so-called Stratton amendment approved by the White House. And I wanted him to know that if I were to vote against the resolution in the revised form, it would not be because of any want of gratitude for the gentleman's efforts, but because I deeply feel that the 18-month provision is not satisfactory.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. The gentleman, I presume, is going to vote for this resolution. In my opinion, he will amend his ways thereby.

Mr. Speaker, we had a long and fruitful and constructive debate yesterday on this legislation. I believe there is no further need for further discussion or delay. I urge the adoption of Senate Joint Resolution 159.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, feel as the gentleman does that it was regrettable that the statement indicating the sense of Congress not to partition Lebanon is not in this resolution. I still intend to vote for it, however. And I am glad to hear the gentleman's commitment to have another resolution similar to the one that the gentleman introduced regarding that amendment in the near future.

The reason I think that is important, I think it is a very important signal to signal to all interested parties, including the internal factions of Lebanon and to the occupiers of that country that Lebanon will not be partitioned and that our Congress stands behind that.

So, I will go along with the resolution as it is, Mr. Chairman, with the stated commitment that the gentleman made publicly. And I appreciate it.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEISS).

Mr. WEISS. I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that it is late in the day and Members have planes to catch and places to go, but we also have 1,600 young Americans in Lebanon whose lives are at risk.

And so I hope that the Members will excuse my taking 2 minutes to talk about them, because I think that the American people are looking to us, not as to whether we get out of here 5 minutes earlier or 5 minutes later, but whether, in fact, we are doing all we can to protect their lives an the lives of other Americans who may be placed in that situation.

I simply want to state that on the basis of what the President has said that he understands this resolution to be there is no commitment on his part as of now that the period of time for keeping American forces in Lebanon is limited to 18 months. Indeed, the best that he says about it is that he will at the end of that time be sure to have further conversation with the Congress about it.

What we are doing truly by this resolution is giving the President a blank check to do whatever he desires to do for as long as he desires to do it.

The American people do not want that done; we ought not to be doing it.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution and I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. Speaker, the other body improved the Lebanon resolution in only minor ways. The bill should be defeated.

The basic defect in the legislation remains the same—the Congress is effectively dismissed from its constitutional responsibility over the Nation's warmaking. The Constitution has been turned on its head.

Article I section 8 of the U.S. Constitution requires that Congress decides if and when the country goes to war. This is what our founders intended, and this interpretation is supported by all of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention and the Federalist papers.

This exclusive congressional responsibility was observed faithfully by all the Presidents of the 18th and 19th centuries. President Thomas Jefferson even requested and got congressional permission before he attacked the Barbary pirates.

It is in our century, the 20th, that Congress began to turn over to the President the Power to go to war.

Without the Congressional consent required by the Constitution, Presidents sent troops to China, Panama, Honduras, Dominican Republic, Cuba, Haiti Mexico, Korea, Cambodia, and Vietnam.

It was only after the disasters of Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam that Congress began to see how irresponsible and dangerous this practice was, and in 1973 enacted the War Powers Act.

It is my view that the surrender to the President of Congress warmaking power has us in a fix in Lebanon. The President has refused even to comply with the War Powers Act which would require a congressional vote on our involvement in Lebanon. Instead, we are asked to approve an agreement that authorizes the President to make war in Lebanon for at least 18 months.

The Secretary of State tells us last Wednesday that the agreement is a one-way deal—that Ronald Reagan reserves the right to increase the size, the mission, or the deployment of our military forces without any authorization from Congress.

We are asked to license bombs from our airplanes and 16-inch shells from the battleship New Jersey that will be fired into Arab villages and town squares. The Tomahawk cruise missiles from the New Jersey can reach not only Suk Al Gharb but also Damascus and perhaps Bagdad.

Does that not suggest the ominous possibility, even if not today a probability, of an escalated war in the Arab world?

We are told that we must trust Ronald Reagan and his team of amateurs, whose total experience in foreign affairs is less than that of a junior Member of Congress and whose conduct of our foreign affairs has been a dismal disaster.

Others have explained the complexities of Lebanon and the naivete of accepting Ronald Reagan's assurance that it is the responsibility of the United States to bring peace to a region that has seen 20 centuries of hatreds and bloodshed and in the conflict of 1975-76 more than 50 ceasefires.

There is no assurance of wisdom if the Constitution is respected and Congress decides by majority vote, after public debate and deliberation, if the United States should go to war.

But that is the process established by the people who wrote the Constitution. They considered it essential that warmaking decision be subject to a process requiring debate, explanation and justification.

Process is really what our country is all about. Our respect for process makes it possible for Congress to operate. Process rules our system of justice.

I suggest that we should have no choice but to comply with the constitutional process our founders established to determine the most important decision—whether to go or not to go to war.

I urge a no vote on this resolution.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. WINN).

Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, I want to urge my colleagues to support this resolution. I commend the chairman for the fine work that he has done.

I want to reiterate his statement that we, too, have talked to the White House and that they have said that they would voluntarily report every 60 days to meet the request and the requirements of many Members of both Chambers.

I wanted to tell my colleagues, particularly on this side, that we are in agreement with that.

I urge my colleagues to support the resolution.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to those assurances it is my understanding that the State Department has agreed to brief the Speaker, and the leadership every 2 weeks on the situation in Lebanon.

● Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, in August of 1982 President Reagan sent a contingent of 800 U.S. marines to Lebanon, as part of the mulitinational peacekkeeping force, to supervise the PLO evacuation of Beirut. On September 10, the PLO left. On September 29, 1982, President Reagan sent 1,200 U.S. marines to Lebanon—again as part of the multinational peacekeeping effort.

On August 29 of this year, two of our marines were killed. On September 6—two more. Since that time 2,000 more of our soldiers have been sent to Lebanon. We have begun supplying weapons to the Lebanese Army and supporting them in combat—in a civil war.

On last Wednesday, our Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. His purpose was to facilitate the striking of the compromise—so-called—that is now before this body. Mr. Shultz made some rather uncompromising statements. Among them was the following—while the President has agreed to sign House Joint Resolution 364, he still has some reservations. The President, in Mr. Shultz' words, "is not going to get himself in the position as Commander in Chief, where his hand are tied." In other words, the President will not be bound by this so-called compromise.

House Joint Resolution 364 is not a compromise. It is a continuation of the status quo. The President will not be bound by the War Powers Act in the future, just as he has not been bound by it in the past. Mr. Shultz told us nothing new last week. Our marines will continue to be shot at and killed in the future, just as they have been over the past year.

For the Congress to affix its stamp of approval for a continuation of this business as usual—with the President taking the unilateral decision to commit our Armed Forces to an increasingly hostile situation in Lebanon so that they can get shot at and killed—is a travesty.

We, in this House, represent the American people. They do not want their sons killed in Lebanon. Under article I, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States, we, the Congress, have the power to declare war. We have not done so. We have not done so—and we cannot do so because the people who elected us—the people whom we represent would not allow us to do so. We, therefore, cannot sit in this Chamber and ratify the continuation of our military involvement in the civil war in Lebanon.

To vote for this so-called compromise would be just that—a vote for the continuation of the status quo. I, therefore, urge you to join me in voting no to House Joint Resolution 364.●

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate joint resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

□ 1830

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the Senate joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 253, nays 156, not voting 24, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Nelson of Florida for, with Mr. Stokes against.

Mr. LUKEN and Mr. UDALL changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. BEILENSON, HANSEN of Idaho, and CRAIG changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 368, CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCHUGH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. WHITTEN, BOLAND, NATCHER, SMITH of Iowa, ADDABBO, YATES, ROYBAL, CONTE, MCDADE, EDWARDS of Alabama, and MYERS.

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME TOMORROW OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT AND AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 368, CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order at any time tomorrow or any day thereafter to consider the conference report and amendments in disagreement on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes, and that said conference report and amendments in disagreement be considered as having been read when called up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

CHANGING DISTRICT DAY FROM OCTOBER 10 TO OCTOBER 4, 1983

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that District Day be observed under clause 8, House rule XXIV, on Tuesday, October 4, instead of October 10, 1983, because the House will not be in session on October 10 because of the legal holiday, Columbus Day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object, but I would inquire only if this has been cleared with the minority.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the minority can speak for itself.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ACTION IS NEEDED ON NATURAL GAS LEGISLATION

(Mr. OLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Speaker, during this summer we seem to have forgotten that colder weather is just around the corner. When it gets cold, people have to heat their homes. And unless Congress takes up legislation soon to address the problems of natural gas prices, many of our constituents are going to face impossible personal budget problems paying their gas bills.

I recognize that changing our natural gas laws is a complex subject. Many of the existing statutes were enacted when natural gas was thought to be in short supply and at a time when we needed to encourage new exploration and production.

But today, our supplies of gas are up and our consumption is down. Nevertheless, prices have increased 20 to 60 percent in many areas and seem to be defying traditional laws of supply and demand. While this is a complex issue, our decisions are not going to get any easier by waiting.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues on the appropriate committees to take whatever steps are necessary to bring a bill to the House floor so that we may take action before the winter winds begin to blow.

So far, over 50 different bills have been introduced on this subject. They vary in their treatment of several important points. Since these bills will likely be modified in the course of the legislative process, I want to take this opportunity to outline my views on these various issues.

NO DECONTROL OF OLD GAS

Gas which was discovered prior to April 1977 is referred to as old gas. I am convinced that old gas must be kept under price controls. According to the Amnerican Gas Association, old gas accounted for about 45 percent of all the gas delivered to the Nation's 160 million gas consumers in 1982. They estimate that decontrolling old gas would increase the cost of this gas by 75 percent by 1985. This rapid price increase to the already high cost of gas is unacceptable.

Decontrolling old gas would also reduce the existing incentives to explore for new sources of natural gas and bring them into prodcution. Today these incentives exist because gas producers are permitted to charge higher rates for new gas than they can for old gas. If this difference in price is not maintained, why should a producer produce more costly gas? By selling old gas at new prices he would greatly increase his profit without the risks and costs of exploration. Studies of the Energy Information Administration, the Department of Energy, and the General Accounting Office all indicate that overall gas supplies would be greater and average gas prices would be lower if old gas controls are retained. I believe this is a vital feature which must be provided for under new natural gas legislation.

NO MANDATORY CARRIAGE

Some bills before Congress include a provision forcing gas pipelines with available capacity to transport gas not owned by the pipeline company from producers to other buyers—such as industrial gas users. This provision is called mandatory carriage. Under these provisions, to the extent that the pipelines have room to transport additional gas, they would be required to assume the role of a common carrier. This is similar to a railroad which carries products it does not own from the seller to the buyer. Under these provisions, the allocation of the pipeline capacities would be handled by the Federal Government.

While this might sound good at first, one of the potential problems with this proposal is that the cost of transporting gas to utilities might be increased as other gas customers compete for the available pipeline space in order to bypass their local utilities.

Another concern which has been raised is that the local utilities would no longer be able to charge industrial gas purchasers, who use this mandatory carriage provision, for their fair share of the gas utility's fixed costs in its distribution system. The result could be that we would see a dramatic increase in gas costs to residential and commercial gas consumers. These consumers would not really be in a position to contract for their gas independent of the utility and would end up paying for a greater share of the utility's fixed distribution system costs.

Finally, these mandatory carriage provisions would greatly increase the involvement of the Federal Government in routine transportation questions because someone would have to make the determination on how much pipeline capacity is available and which independent purchasers would be able to move their gas using this additional pipeline capacity.

For all of these reasons I believe that natural gas legislation should not contain mandatory carriage provisions. With them there is too great of a potential that residential and commercial natural gas consumers would see unnecessary increases in the cost of their gas.

RENEGOTIATING CONTRACTS

One of the reasons natural gas prices have been increasing is that the contracts between the producers, the pipelines, and the end purchasers often contain provisions which do not reflect today's realities.

In the mid-1970's, natural gas was in short supply and many priority customers—such as hospitals and schools—were in danger of running out of gas. At that time, newly discovered gas and more elaborate gas recovery technologies offered the hope for reliable future supplies of gas. In many cases, though, this newly discovered gas was more difficult and more costly to recover.

Part of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 (NGPA) attempted to encourage new gas production by decontrolling new gas prices and establishing price incentives for harder to recover classes of gas.

To insure that the producers would take steps to make this new gas available, many pipelines signed take-or-pay contracts. These essentially said that pipelines were committed to pay for this more expensive gas in anticipation of future growth in sales. This guaranteed the producers that this more expensive gas would be purchased and they then had the incentive to bring this gas into production.

Since then we have seen a major change in our supply and demand picture—consumption has dropped as prices increased and supplies have increased.

Many of the bills which have been introduced in Congress attempt to encourage the renegotiation of these contracts to reflect today's realities and to restore reason to natural gas prices.

TAKE OR PAY

Under the take-or-pay contracts much of the gas moving through the pipelines is made up of a mix of high priced and lower priced gas. The higher the precentage of more expensive gas in the mix, the higher—and more distorted—prices are to consumers. In many cases this mix is not determined by the availability of lower priced gas, which is usually not a part of the take-or-pay contracts. Instead, it is determined by changes in consumption levels of end users and the previously entered into commitments to purchase an agreed amount of higher priced gas.

Any legislation on this subject must balance the need to moderate today's high gas prices while maintaining sufficient incentives to encourage new gas exploration and production. The fairest solution is for legislation to provide that during a 3-year period these take-or-pay contracts should be renegotiated to provide that purchases are obligated to buy no more than 50 percent of the gas they had contracted for.

One way to accomplish this in an equitable manner would be for the renegotiated contract to retain the buyer's original commitment to purchase the total volume previously contracted for, but to stretch out the time period in which the gas would actually be delivered and consequently paid for.

MARKETING OUT

This legislation should also recognize that in some cases it might be in the best interests of either the purchaser or the producer to terminate an existing contract and seek other suppliers or purchasers. The legislation should give both parties this option by granting one-time only authority to withdraw—or marketing out—of an existing contract within a specified period of time.

This authority, in combination with a provision lowering take-or-pay clauses to 50 percent, would provide producers the leverage to bring down artificially high gas prices. At the same time, it would provide producers the ability to get out of any contract which might be renegotiated to the extent that they could not receive a fair return. They then would have the option to seek other purchasers.

In providing natural gas purchasers the tools to moderate existing contracts to bring down current prices, it is important to insure that these changes will occur through renegotiations and be fair to all parties. I believe a 50 percent take-or-pay provision and a one-time only marketing out provision will accomplish this objective.

RESTRICT NEW MAJOR UTILITY CONTRACTS

While we currently enjoy adequate supplies of natural gas, we must recognize that there is the potential for future supply shortages. Efforts are now underway requiring utilities to shift away from oil and natural gas as fuels to generate electricity. Congress would be shortsighted if it allowed utilities to return to natural gas as a fuel for electricity. In times of short supply this would only increase the demand for gas, forcing residential and commercial customers to pay even more for their gas. It would also increase the cost of electricity to these same consumers.

Legislation to address our current natural gas price problems must not contain language which would make it easier for utilities to enter into major new contracts to purchase gas to generate electricity, unless overwhelming environmental benefits can be demonstrated.

NO FAVORED NATION CLAUSES

Many gas contracts contain clauses requiring that gas prices escalate to the highest prices paid for gas produced in a given region. These clauses do not reflect the real cost of the gas that is actually being delivered. They are artificial price escalators which ignore reasonable returns on investment. These clauses should be declared null and void in any bill brought before Congress.

Similarly, legislation should repeal price escalators which are based on prices paid for other commodities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if legislation is brought to the House floor reflecting these points, the American natural gas consumers will see significant moderation in their natural gas bills without jeopardizing the existing incentives for producers to continue to explore for new gas and to bring new gas into production.

As I mentioned at the outset, we must bring a natural gas bill to the House floor soon so that it has a chance of being enacted before the colder weather arrives. I am prepared to do whatever I can to help bring legislation of this type to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to join with me in resolving the current impasse.

THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

(Mr. WYLIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I was present to hear the President of the United States address the annual meetings of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. Once again I was pleased to hear President Reagan state his strong support for the International Monetary Fund, an institution he correctly describes as the "linchpin of the international financial system." The President flatly stated, "I have an unbreakable commitment to increase funding to the IMF." Like many of us in Congress, the President recognizes that the IMF legislation is crucial for a sustained recovery in the United States and abroad.

I also was pleased to read the lead editorial in yesterday's Washington Post, which underscored the President's challenge for Congress to put aside its partisan concerns and work in a bipartisan fashion to pass the IMF legislation. Only in that way can we avoid the mistakes of the late 1920's which, as the Post editorial recalls, led us on the path to economic isolationism.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the House Banking Committee, FERNAND ST GERMAIN, and I have spent many, many hours working closely together on this important legislation. I fully expect the spirit of bipartisanship to continue and pledge my best effort to continue to work with the chairman as we complete legislative consideration to fulfill the U.S. commitment to the International Monetary Fund.

I include the Washington Post editorial in my statement as well as excerpts from the President's address before the IMF:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 28, 1983]

MR. REAGAN ON THE IMF

President Reagan delivered a well-deserved kick to Congress yesterday for its recalcitrance in strengthening the International Monetary Fund. Here's one issue that's pretty simple: the president is right and Congress is wrong. Congress, and particularly the House, has allowed itself to be intimidated by a cuckoo alliance of the least reliable elements of right and left, united in a dim populist resentment of the banks and isolationist hostility to the rest of the world.

The rest of the world is currently well represented here in Washington at the annual meetings of the IMF and the World Bank, which Mr. Reagan was addressing. But it would be a great mistake for congressmen to think that the reasons for expanding the IMF's resources are mere sweet charity, to help other countries and to make the United States more popular abroad. The reasons for lending that $8.4 billion to the IMF lie much closer to home, and Mr. Reagan put them well. The basic purpose of a sound financial system is to support trade, and more than 2 million American jobs—one out of every eight jobs in manufacturing—depend directly on U.S. exports.

If the United States defaults on its responsibility, no other country has the economic power to take it up. There would be an imminent threat of the whole financial network's coming unraveled—the "economic nightmare" of which Mr. Reagan spoke. Congressmen might usefully remind themselves that it's not a hypothetical case. It's what happened in the years after 1929.

Congress, in the 1940's, remembered the Depression with bitter clarify and worked strenously to build the bulwarks against any repetition. The system has worked so well that a later generation's congressmen have forgotten what the danger was. Fortunate lives make short memories. The congressmen of the 1980s—with some notable exceptions—have grown careless. They seem to think that American economic strength is now so great that the country doesn't have to worry about exports, or credit, or the stability of the banking system. But of course that's what the congressmen elected in 1928 throught too.

Mr. Reagan's vigorous endorsement of the IMF—the "linchpin," he called it yesterday, of the world's financial system—shows a clearer understanding of it than he had three years ago. As a candidate, he was no particular friend of the IMF or the World Bank. But in office, working close to the practical necessities of the moment, he has changed his view. He knows that, without the IMF, Latin America's trade might already have collapsed with terrible repercussions in this country. Upon closer acquaintance he has come to a warmer appreciation of the job that the IMF is doing. It's a message that Congress will ignore only at the country's peril.

EXCERPTS FROM THE REMARKS BY HON. RONALD REAGAN, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, AT THE 1983 ANNUAL MEETINGS OF THE BOARDS OF GOVERNORS OF THE WORLD BANK AND THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The IMF is the linchpin of the international financial system. Among official institutions, it serves as a counselor, coaxing the world economy toward renewed growth and stability. At various times in its history, the IMF has provided important temporary balance of payments assistance to its member nations—including my own. At times, it must play the "Dutch uncle," talking frankly, telling those of us in government things we need to hear, but would rather not. We know how significant the IMF's role has been in assisting troubled debtor countries, many of which are making courageous strides to regain financial health. We warmly applaud the efforts of Mr. de Larosière and his staff.

My Administration is committed to do what is legitimately needed to help ensure that the IMF continues as the cornerstone of the international financial system. Let me make something very plain: I have an unbreakable commitment to increased funding for the IMF. But the U.S. Congress so far has failed to act to pass the enabling legislation. I urge the Congress to be mindful of its responsibility, and to meet the pledge of our government.

The IMF quota legislation has been pending for several months, and I do not appreciate the partisan wrangling and political posturing that have been associated with this issue during recent weeks. I urge members of both political parties to lay aside their differences, to abandon harsh rhetoric and unreasonable demands, and to get on with the task in a spirit of true bipartisanship. The stakes are great. This legislation is not only crucial to the recovery of America's trading partners abroad and to the stability of the entire international financial system, it is also necessary to a sustained recovery in the United States.

The sum we are requesting will not increase our budget deficit, and it will be returned with interest as loans are repaid to the IMF. What's more, it will keep the wheels of world commerce turning and create jobs.

Exports account for one out of eight manufacturing jobs in the United States. Forty percent of our agricultural products are exported. I am afraid that, even today, too few in the Congress realize the United States is interdependent with both the developed and developing world.

Examine the record: the United States has been a dependable partner, reaching out to help developing countries who are laboring under excessive debt burdens. These major debtor countries have already undertaken difficult measures in a concerted effort to get their economic houses in order. Most of them are working closely with the IMF to overcome economic hardships. They continue to demonstrate a commendable willingness to make necessary adjustments. That is why I can state that our participation in the IMF quota increase is not a government bailout of these debtor countries or of the banks which are sharing the burden. On the contrary, IMF plans to assist financially troubled countries call for the banks to put up more new money than the IMF itself.

This is by nature a cooperative enterprise. If the Congress does not approve our participation, the inevitable consequence would be a withdrawal by other industrial countries from doing their share. At the end of this road could be a major distruption of the entire world trading and financial systems—an economic nightmare that could plague generations to come. No one can afford to make light of the responsibility we all share.

THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a provision order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I was told earlier today that our Republican colleagues in the House have called for a special order this evening to deal with the question of the Federal deficit, and I have taken the time this evening to congratulate my colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

I say this because President Reagan's rampant, runaway, recordbreaking, revolutionary deficits are one of the gravest problems our Nation faces today, and since this administration apparently cannot deal with them, it is high time that somebody in the Republican Party addresses the problem.

Assuming this Republican effort is serious and not rhetorical, their willingness to talk about the ever-mounting Reagan Republican deficits will give heart, of course, to all of us. Perhaps now the Soviets will come clean about the Korean air massacre and Mr. Nixon about Watergate, and maybe Mr. Reagan's election team on the 1980 Debategate. Yet if our Republican friends wish to admit the error of their party's ways over the past 20 years and to work seriously with us Democrats to put the Nation back on course to fiscal solvency, I say to all of you, "Welcome."

But if they come here tonight to cover up the deficit problem or to explain it away or, even worse, to try to blame it on someone else, I say to them, "I am here to warn you. I am here to say to you that Mr. Reagan's red ink won't wash off of any of you."

President Reagan is merely the latest and, by all odds, the most accomplished of a long line of Republican Presidents who have proven adept at swelling the deficit beyond manageable proportions.

□ 1900

Now, let us take a look at some figures which make clear the difference between Democrats and Republicans on this important question of national solvency.

Now, these are the facts, attested to by the actual record of Mr. Stockman's Office of Management and Budget and by the Congressional Budget Office, which is of course a nonpartisan institute in this Congress.

From World War II through the projected fiscal year of 1984, including the 1976 transition quarter, when the fiscal year calendar was changed, Democrats were Presidents for 20 years and, coincidentally, Republicans were Presidents for 20 years. In eight of those years, there were Federal surpluses. Five of the eight surplus years were presided over by Democrats. The Democratic surpluses totaled $25.8 billion; the Republican surpluses, $7.6 billion. These, gentlemen, are the facts. You, of course, should frown at those facts, because they are most revealing.

The Democratic surpluses were larger than the Republican surpluses by a margin greater than 3 to 1.

Now, I see the distinguished minority leader, my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, and the distinguished minority whip, my good friend, the gentleman from my neighboring State of Mississippi, are present in the Chamber this evening. So I would ask you, how would you respond and account for these facts?

Projecting through fiscal year 1985, the record shows 17 years of Republican deficits; 16 of Democratic deficits. The Democratic deficits totaled over these years $316 billion. The Republican deficits—now get this—$920 billion.

Once again, the actual amount of the Republican deficits were three times greater than the amount of the Democratic deficits.

My colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle, how do you account for these facts? I hope you will respond to this this evening during your special orders.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Congressional Budget Office, 1983 projections, as reported in August of that year, the average Reagan deficit over 4 years will be $179 billion per year in his administration.

Now, this average for one Reagan year at a time, all by itself, one Reagan year, is more than one-half the total Democratic deficits for the entire 40 year period—a half of the Democratic deficits for the entire 40 year period. How about that? You will have the opportunity this evening to respond to that question.

By the CBO estimates, the Reagan deficits will average 5.5 percent of the gross national product by the end of his term.

Now, it was this fact that Martin Feldstein, the President's own chief economic adviser, observed, and I quote: "Peacetime deficits of that magnitude are unknown in the United States," he observed.

Mr. Speaker, now this alarming statistic is known in the United States. How do you respond to that, my friends on the other side of the aisle?

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the proportions of the national deficit emergency under Mr. Reagan's administration will even be more clear if we can visualize them, and I have brought a chart into the Chamber in order to assist us in visualizing the magnitude of the Reagan administration's deficits.

Now, on this chart which is compiled entirely from statistics furnished by David Stockman's Office of Management and Budget and by the Congressional Budget Office, we can clearly see the trouble that we are in. These lines here beginning in 1982-83 projected out through 1988 were all caused from the Reaganomics economic policy that governs the fiscal policy of this Nation today.

It is obvious that the deficit problem became radically worse as soon as Mr. Reagan's economic plan went into effect. It took about a year for it to go into effect.

I see the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA) standing there. He was instrumental in bringing about Reaganomics as the national economic policy in our Nation and what we now characterize as the Gramm-Latta amendment that has dramatically impacted upon our deficits, as illustrated by this graph which shows the red-ink that is mounting every day since the President's economic policy came into effect.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not yield at this time. I will yield to the gentleman in a few minutes as soon as I finish my remarks.

It is obvious that the deficit problem became dramatically worse in 1982 as soon as Mr. Reagan's economic policy came into effect, which produced a deficit of more than $110 billion, which was Mr. Reagan's first deficit—$110 billion.

Now, I remember back in 1980 when Mr. Reagan was running for President, I was out on the campaign trail in Mountainview, Ark., and I heard Mr. Reagan blister Mr. Carter for having a $30 billion deficit.

Now, here just 3 year later, Mr. Reagan has produced himself a $110 billion deficit, almost four times greater than the deficit that Mr. Reagan was criticizing Mr. Carter for having produced back in 1980.

For fiscal year 1983, $200 billion—$200 billion and the figures are even worse after that time, mounting up and up, with projections for 1988 of about $300 billion, caused from Reaganomics—$300 billion 10 times greater than the $30 billion that Mr. Carter produced in deficits just back in 1980.

You remember how Ronald Reagan, the candidate, was ranting and raving about a $30 billion deficit just 3 years ago? And look, in 1988, if the current economic policy continues in effect, he will produce almost a $300 billion deficit.

Now, that is a monumental achievement in all record books of all time.

Mr. Speaker, these are not just deficits. These can best be characterized as mega-deficits, deficits which Mr. Stockman himself has stated go out as far as the eye can see. Well, we are looking at worse than that. I do not think the eye can see that far.

I will give Mr. Reagan credit for one thing. He is an achiever. All his life he has been an achiever. On the subject of deficits, gentlemen, he is an overachiever. He is a tremendous success. There has been no head of State ever before in the history of the world to produce the deficits that Mr. Reagan has produced.

I will give credit where credit is due.

Now, it is not by accident that Mr. Reagan is in a league all by himself as the world's greatest deficit maker. And more than that, it is not an accident that over a 10-year period Republican Presidents have had fewer and smaller surpluses and more and greater deficits than Democratic Presidents. Add it up. It is in the RECORD. I will say it again.

Republican Presidents over the last 20 years have had fewer and smaller surpluses than Democratic Presidents, and the Republican Presidents have had greater and more deficits than Democratic Presidents. It is all in the RECORD. Add it up.

Now, ironically—but I might and must add tragically—tragically, tomorrow is September 30, the end of the current fiscal year. It is the deadline, gentlemen—I am sure that you all remember it—it is the deadline that Mr. Reagan and the Republican party set for themselves as the time that the budget would be balanced. Tomorrow is the day. Tomorrow is the day that Ronald Reagan promised to balance the budget. But instead of balancing the budget, we have, according to the Government projections, a $200 billion deficit. It is a tragedy. And that was the day that Mr. Reagan had promised to balance the budget.

Now, how did this catastrophe happen? It was no accident. I ask how did it happen. You might answer this question, gentlemen, tonight, when you take your time—how did this happen?

When Mr. Reagan entered office in 1981, it was his choice, between balancing the budget as he had promised or rewarding the wealthiest Americans with his giveaway tax package, Reaganomics' tax package. They chose fiscal insolvency, and they chose the course on purpose. It was no accident. It was a conscious choice to spend and borrow the Federal Government into oblivion.

Debated, the Republicans won, they carried their own bill, they got everything they asked for. It was a conscious choice. And they chose for the worst possible reason to mortgage the national future of our Nation to the interests of the Nation's fat cats. And instead of a tax cut, what we had—instead of the largest tax cut which was promised, we had the largest tax shift in American history, maybe in the history of the world—a 10-percent shift, 10-percent tax cut for the corporate America over a 10-year period, and a 10-percent tax increase for middle America over a 10-year period, gentlemen. You ought to address that when you take the well this evening.

Mr. Speaker, we Democrats have run deficits over the last 40 years, although only one-third as much as Republicans have. We have had deficits, but only one-third as much as the Republicans have. It is all facts and figures. Have your economists study those figures, add them up, produce the facts and figures for yourself. Do not trust my figures. I am getting them from the Congressional Budget Office and from the Office of Management and Budget. But get your own figures. They will produce the same results.

Mr. Speaker, it is a truth, it is a fact that I state here this evening. But at least we have always been able to provide both for national defense and for the welfare of our people. The Republicans under Mr. Reagan have run up these outlandish, tragic deficits while mercilessly cutting at the heart of the programs that benefit the poorest people in our Nation. That is the difference. Democrats have provided for both defense and welfare whereas Republicans have increased defense spending—and I supported some of those increases—but they have cut at the heart of the programs that are intended for the poorest people in our Nation.

The record will show these facts to be correct. We Democrats have never neglected either the internal or the external welfare of our Nation. How is it possible that Mr. Reagan has achieved these astronomical deficits while failing to achieve either.

I have heard the rhetoric on numerous occasions—I have heard it, all of us have heard it—we have seen the slick television ads claiming fiscal responsibility. You have heard the slogan, they even have a little refrain—tax and spend, tax and spend, tax and spend. I will expect it to be put to music during the next election. But, Mr. Speaker, I do wish that the Republicans in this body, this evening, would account for all of these facts which I have spread upon the record this evening. They will speak soon to this problem of the deficit. And I wonder what they will say in response to these things that I have said this evening.

What it all means to me is that the people have not been shown the facts. And I am grateful for this opportunity to be here this evening in this forum, broadcast over television, for people to see for themselves the facts which have caused these gigantic and tragic deficits.

[1] As reported in the Economic and Budget Outlook: An Update (Congressional Budget Office, August 1983).

I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER).

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to inquire whether or not it is not true that referring to broadcasting of the proceedings of the House on television is not a violation of a rule of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman (Mr. ALEXANDER) should direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, 9 years ago the Congress enacted the Budget Act in order to control spending. The Federal deficit in that year was a little more than $4½ billion.

Two years later, under Republican Presidents, the deficit had grown to more than $66 billion.

Two years later, the deficit loomed at nearly $50 billion under a Democratic President.

Tomorrow, we end another fiscal year, this time under a Republican President who campaigned on the promise of a balanced budget, and who demanded that this Congress enact a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

The deficit for this fiscal year, under the economic program of this administration, will be more than $200 billion.

Two conclusions are apparent:

First, the Budget Act has not worked. After 10 years of record deficits, huge spending, and irreponsible tax policies, we face the largest deficits in American history. Indeed, during the 4 years of this administration we will record higher deficits than in all the administrations since World War II.

It is also obvious that deficits are not the exclusive responsibility of any party.

Deficit spending is no less the underwriter of Reaganomics than it was the financier of the Great Society.

But after 10 years of the Budget Act, it is evident that the current budget policy is really no policy at all.

There is no discipline in our spending and tax decisions. We are not forced to choose among priorities, because we choose all priorities and charge the cost off to the deficit.

I, for one, am tired of financing the spending splurges of this generation by sending a trillion dollar IOU to my children.

It is time to tear up the national credit card by adopting a new, bold and effective budget strategy which will force this Congress, and our constituents, to make hard decisions.

That new strategy is the pay-as-you-go budget.

Pay-as-you-go prohibits the Government from spending any more money next year than it did this year, unless Congress is willing to totally offset that new spending either by raising revenues or by cutting spending elsewhere in the budget.

Pay-as-you-go says to the Congress, to the President, and to our constituents that we must have the courage to pay for our spending decisions.

Under pay-as-you-go, we would establish a spending baseline at the current year's budget outlay total.

Unlike a strict budget freeze, which prohibits the Congress from making future spending decisions, pay-as-you-go permits additional spending above this baseline—for education, defense, social security Cola's, highways, or any other program—but only if we are willing to pay for those new spending decisions.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, this plan will rapidly and assuredly shrink our deficits. Had we accepted pay-as-you-go when I first proposed it in 1982, our deficit this year would have been about half the $200 billion we are going to have to explain to our deficit-conscious constituents.

Had we accepted pay-as-you-go for the fiscal year we are beginning on Saturday, our deficit for 1984 would be $150 billion rather than the $169 billion now projected.

By 1986, the pay-as-you-go budget would shrink the deficit to less than $50 billion—less than half the level optimistically predicted in the budget resolution we just passed.

Adoption of the pay-as-you-go budget process would be a historic moment for this Congress. No longer would we continue to spend billions of deficit dollars to conceal waste, special-interest benefits, or outdated and lavish programs that the economy cannot afford, the voters do not support, or the Congress does not have the courage to pay for.

Pay as you go is a workable and nonpartisan plan. It is similar to the budget procedures used by over 40 of our State governments. It does not mean that spending cannot increase; it does mean that new spending will not mean new deficits.

It does not mean that there will be no new taxes; but it does mean that if taxes are needed, they will be used to finance specific spending priorities that are essential to the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, over 150 years ago, Thomas Jefferson wrote that it is incumbent on every generation to pay its own debts as it goes. I think the time has come to follow Mr. Jefferson's instructions.

Later this month, this House is going to vote on the reconciliation bill for 1984. Like most of our past reconciliation bills, this legislation will illustrate that the budget resolution which we recently passed bears little resemblance to the real budget we will be reviewing 1 year from tonight.

So let us begin the next budget cycle on a different basis. To begin that effort, I plan to offer an amendment to the reconciliation bill which will commit the Congress to follow a pay as you go budget beginning in 1984. I welcome the support of the many Members of the House—both liberals and conservatives—in calling for adoption of this amendment when we vote on the reconciliation bill.

Rhetoric on balancing the budget and reducing the deficit comes cheap. I believe that what the American people want is not just a balanced budget amendment, but a process that will produce a balanced budget.

After all the pie-charts, delta squares, M-1's and other assorted budgetary hokus-pocus, the pay as you go budget process is the only way to honestly and effectively shrink the deficit and control spending. It is time we committed ourselves to pay as you go.

Tonight as we hear charges and countercharges about who is responsible for the deficit, let us not forget that it is this Congress on a bipartisan basis, year in and year out, that has voted for more spending than the people of this country could ever possibly pay for in each year.

So the challenge to this Congress in the reconciliation bill will be whether or not they want to start out the next cycle with very strict limitations on our ability to spend beyond what this Nation can afford. We had full Democratic support for pay as you go in 1982, but only two Republican votes in that budget process. In fact, pay as you go I think received the highest number of votes of any budget resolution, but no Republican support.

We could have had a deficit much smaller had we had support from the other side of the aisle.

We saw overwhelming support the other day for pay as you go on the jobs bill by the gentleman from the other side of the aisle. So I think the time has come to test that will and to see whether or not, in fact, we want to tear up the national credit card and start a procedure by which we can get rid of these inordinately heavy deficits we are asking the American people to carry around.

I want to thank the gentleman form Arkansas for taking this time to deal with the discussion of the deficit. I will be most happy to read the response of my colleagues in the Record to the pay as you go budget.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman from California for his contribution.

I now yield to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. McNULTY).

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, the administration's promise of a balanced Federal budget by 1984 is proving to be its most serious and spectacular failure. That failure is the result of massive miscalculation. What is certain is that our economy cannot continue to endure $200 billion deficits. The administration simply must face up to this monster.

In plain English, we will never have a complete economic recovery if we do not reduce the deficits. We will never have full employment. Interest rates will go back up. We will go back to the days of economic stagnation. And we will be powerless to stop what is happening to us.

Mr. Speaker, huge deficits per se are not as tangible an enemy for Americans as unemployment, recession or inflation. But huge deficits underlie economic sickness of the worst sort. We must act to reduce these deficits now, or we will be paying for them the rest of our lives.

To finance this year's deficit the Government will have to borrow more than 60 percent of all private savings—60 percent of all the money that is available for lending and investment—in the United States. And in an economy that is trying desperately to recover, as ours is now, that money should be available for lending and investment. It should go to business and industry for new plants, equipment and jobs, and to consumers for houses and automobiles. Instead, we are squandering more than half our available investment capital paying for our inability to live within our means.

If the Government continues to require more than half of all available credit, even during economic recovery, interest rates will go up. Rising interest rates will ultimately choke off a recovery, and the result inevitably will be economic stagnation.

Mr. Speaker, the size and scope of these staggering budget deficits indicate several things to me. They indicate that this administration is not sufficiently serious about its commitment to bring Federal spending into line with Federal revenues an important commitment—the administration seems to believe that cutting taxes, increasing defense spending, and cutting into domestic programs is enough, and that it is unfortunate that the balanced budget part of their equation never materialized. These deficits indicate that the administration believes it can proclaim itself fiscally responsible, and that it will be so, even as it submits to the most enormous deficits that we have ever seen.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that the administration will awaken to the huge problem created for the American economy, and will begin to exert the leadership it can provide to move us away from the brink of disaster. Without that leadership, it will be up to us in the Congress to do something with difficulty to correct this deficit crisis. Either way it will be long and difficult, but crises of this magnitude are best approached in a cooperative manner. I claim since my campaign last summer to have invented the term "a new national bipartisan fiscal policy."

This is to let the administration know that I sense that many in the Congress are serious, open to such a policy, and ready to go to work.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arizona.

I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS).

□ 1930

Mr. WATKINS. I appreciate the gentleman from Arkansas for having this special order and I appreciate very much his yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I came to this Congress 7 years ago out of a business community. I was a businessman. And I stand in all sincerity and very genuine in my concern about the recordbreaking deficits that occurred during the last 3 years.

Having been a businessman in Oklahoma, a businessman in the building business, where I built family homes, and also apartments, I know the tragic problem that we have had with high interests. And I know with the record-breaking deficits that we have now and as far as our eyes can see, that we are in for a rough and bumpy road ahead. And this is why I have taken these few moments to address this problem as I see it as a businessman, not as a politician.

My banker, who happens to be a Republican, as I visited with him on numerous occasions and unfortunately I had to borrow a lot of money when I was in business and nearly every time my banker would say to me, "Wes, are you cautious with this particular financing, with this particular land development, with this particular building program? Are you cautious?"

I know what my banker was saying to me. He was saying, "Wes, have you got everything covered? Have you got it figured correctly?"

And I would always say, "Yes, I have it figured correctly."

Now to some people it may be a surprise to them why we have $200 billion deficits and $110 billion record deficit last year and probably $300 billion deficits in the future if the program and policy does not change. It should not surprise us and we should not try to shake our responsibility.

A President who was here, who headed the administration in the past with a record-breaking deficit, was an honorable man, a good man and a Republican, Gerald Ford. Gerald Ford had $66 billion deficits and that was the highest deficit until this administration. Yes, Jimmy Carter had a $30 billion deficit, in his last year of $58 billion.

So the question may come to your mind, why have deficits tripled in just 3 years. Why have deficits just tripled in three years?

Under this administration, $110 billion last year, over $200 billion this year, and $200 billion next year, and on and on.

Well, I think it is easy if we stop and recall we were not cautious in 1981, to put it in the words of my Republican banker. We were not cautious. I have talked to business person after business person, good friends from both sides of the aisle, in my district Republicans and Democrats, and I have asked the businessmen, "How many of you would cut your income to your business three times greater than you would cut your budget?"

And I have not had one single businessman tell me that they would do that.

I have asked my banker if I brought in a financial prospectus on where I cut my income 3 times greater than my overhead and my expenses, would they loan me the money. And they said, "No." And most of the bankers said they could not stay in business either.

But that is what we did in 1981.

Let there be no mistake. In many of the domestic programs we have cut back, we have cut back in health care. The Congress and the President have cut back in nutrition programs for the elderly. They cut out the artificial limbs for the handicapped. There have been many programs that have been cut back on the domestic front. However, at the same time, the budget has increased 39 percent in foreign aid, the budget has increased a record-breaking increase in financing the military, a record-breaking budget for the military in all peacetime and nearly equivalent to many times we have had in war.

But, at the same time, we have cut the income coming to operate the business of Government $1.6 trillion over the next 5 years. That is the income, just as your income in operating your household budget, or the budget of your business. There is where we made a mistake. Yes; we should hold the line on a lot of the budget increases. I am not saying that we should not hold the line there.

But let me say if this President in his great ability to communicate to the American people, if he had gone before the American people and said, "Ladies and gentlemen of this great country, I want to give you a tax cut, but ladies and gentlemen, I have got to wait one year. I want to wait one year and apply that income to the deficits." And with the power of communication of this President, the power in his hands at that time, the power of the President over the Congress at that time, he could have got that program across to the American people and we could have balanced the budget in America, we could have balanced the budget in 1981.

But now we are further and have dug ourselves a deeper hole with a $200 billion deficit and we have gotten ourselves further behind the eight ball. We cannot balance the budget by cutting the budget alone. We know that. I do not think anyone—no one from the President's own party would introduce his budget plan when he introduced it this year, no one.

We will not accept cutting the budget that severe to balance the budget. We cannot raise taxes enough to balance the budget now with the $200-odd billion deficit.

But we could have, in the words of my banker, if we had been more cautious and more businesslike in 1981. This should not surprise anyone. Some of my very close friends know on that side, I developed a form of four simple steps of figuring the deficit. And I handed it out in 1981. And every person in my Third Congressional District, using the assumptions that David Stockman used—and he admitted in the Atlantic Monthly that he used erroneous figures—and I was glad, because David Stockman is a friend and David Stockman has a brilliant mind. And I asked my friend from Michigan, David Stockman, that I could not come up with those figures he was using, those economic assumptions, and I asked him, "David, tell me where you got the figures?" And he did not reveal that at that time. And when he revealed it in the Atlantic Monthly, I want to tell you the truth, I was relieved. And I am sincere when I say that. Because I know David Stockman is a smart and brilliant and capable person, but when he had said he had used erroneous figures to cram it through Congress, I was relieved, because I could not come up with those figures literally. I worked on the budget 125 hours and some of my good friends know that I developed a form that I took back to my district and I let a number of my colleagues figure in four simple steps the deficit. And let me say every single person in the Third Congressional District of Oklahoma, who utilized that form in figuring the deficit, came up with well over $100 billion this past year and had over $200 billion this year. The people in the Third District of Oklahoma were right. They were correct. And after I had them fill out, using the economic assumptions that Dave Stockman had used there and using what they thought the economic assumptions would be, every single one of them came up with over $100 billion in deficits and $200 billion this year.

They were correct. And not one, mind you, not one told me to go back up here and vote for that budget. And I did not. And I did not vote for that tax cut, because as a businessman I could not. And as a businessman, not only could I not vote for that, it bothered me. The fairness and equity that we were giving to the upper 5 percent in this country, we were borrowing the money. We did not have the money to give that tax cut. All of us know that. We were running deficits. We did not have the money. We had to borrow that money to give that tax cut to the 5 percent wealthy of this country.

I do not understand that. I have a problem with that particular fact.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have the time and I would be glad to yield as soon as the gentleman has finished.

Does the gentleman from Oklahoma wish to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WATKINS. I will yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the purpose of responding to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RITTER. As I understand it, first of all, the gentleman from the Third District of Oklahoma voted for the tax cut.

Mr. WATKINS. Oh, no, sir. You go back and look at the record.

Mr. RITTER. All right. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the statistics on who is paying what share of Federal income taxes in this country and if he is aware that the top 3 percent of the population, those earning over $50,000, are paying 31 percent. And that tax receipts to this point indicate that the incoming revenues may well be larger, because people have moved their funds out of shelters, out of speculative interests, and have moved them into the taxable investment market.

Now, I am wondering, is the gentleman aware that the tax receipts for that upper 5 percent may well be running ahead of previous years after the tax cut?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes, I realize that. But let me tell you what has happend. We did not just have a tax cut, we had tax reform. All my farmers are paying 5 cents more per gallon for gasoline. They are not making money. All my small truckers have a thousand percent increase in their taxes, and they are going bankrupt; 25,000 businesses went bankrupt.

Mr. RITTER. That was not part of the tax cut bill. That was simply another tax bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS).

Mr. WATKINS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: The little waitresses in my district are paying 8 percent on withholding of taxes. Yes, Peoples Savings got off of that. But the little waitresses in my district, I have two or three of them in McAlester, Okla. going on welfare because they held their taxes back, with withholding.

Mr. RITTER. That was a different tax bill, and that was certainly participated in by the Democratic leadership.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) has the time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS).

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was trying to be polite and courteous, just as I had been in trying to address this situation. But it concerns me, this tax reform. The little waitresses who are trying to make minimum wage in my district, they are going on welfare. I do not think that is right. I cannot complain, any of us in this room cannot complain, because we got a tax cut. I got more back in taxes this year than most of my people make per capita income in my district. And it is kind of hard for me to accept that situation. That is literally the truth. All the people making about $75,000 and above have more back in taxes this year than the median family income of all my people. That is hard to explain.

Let me go ahead and continue. I do not want to be just partisan. I am deeply and sincerely concerned about where we are, and I am concerned, literally, about how we get out of it.

As I mentioned, I know that my friends on the other side of the aisle did not introduce the President budget this year, and I think that was unfortunate. I wanted to have, hopefully, a debate one way or the other. I do not know exactly how I would have come down on it. But I wish we would have had the opportunity to debate that situation.

Yes, we have had a revision in the tax structure of this country. We have had a revision in the budget of this country. Yes, we had to borrow the money to give the wealthy a tax cut. But at the same time, what makes it difficult is that is was wrong to borrow the money to try to get artificial limbs for the handicapped, it was wrong to borrow the money to have nutrition programs for the elderly. But yet we borrowed the money to give a tax cut to the wealthy.

Now, I ask this: If we are sincere—and I am sincere as I stand here and address this matter——

Mr. RITTER. Will the gentleman yield if he is sincere?

Mr. WATKINS. I will not yield any longer.

Mr. RITTER. The gentleman voted for the tax cut.

Mr. WATKINS. Let me say this to the gentleman, because I am sincere about this.

If we are all sincere, I ask the gentleman to address the President of the United States, ask for an economic conference—I plead with the gentleman to address that—an economic conference of the President, the leaders of both sides of the aisle. I am sincere when I ask that. I ask the gentleman to ask the leadership——

Mr. RITTER. Was the gentleman sincere when he said he did not vote for the tax cut?

Mr. WATKINS. That is correct.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time, and I request regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) has the time, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. RITTER) will desist, please.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS), and I request regular order.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Illinois.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3363, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES, 1984

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tomorrow night to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 3363) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I have cleared this with the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, it does defy some tradition around here from time to time to engage in this, but I take full responsibility on my part to interrupt this special order because I know the gentlman's sincerity in making the request and that it is done with the thought in mind of expediting the business of the House, and I applaud the gentleman for making the request.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield further to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS).

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to close my remarks by saying that there is no one any more sincere than I am right tonight in saying we must work together. And I plead with the President of the United States and I plead with the leadership on both sides of the aisle, the leadership of my party, the leadership of the opposing or other party, that we ask the President, we ask the leadership of the Senate, we ask the leadership of the House on both sides of the aisle, we ask the Federal Reserve Board to convene an economic conference on how we can cut the budget, how we might reduce the budget. I am not just saying to increase revenues alone, but whatever combination, whatever formula we have to use, that we look at the budget and we also cut the budget and we work some fairness in tax policy.

So again I make the plea in my closing remarks that this President and the Congress are obligated to the future of this country, our children and our grandchildren, to try to get together to solve this problem.

I appreciate very much the gentleman's convening this special order to discuss this problem that is facing the future of our country.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma and the contribution that the gentleman from Oklahoma is making to this important issue on the deficit.

Mr. WATKINS. If the gentleman will yield further, in addressing the remarks about the vote, if you will look at the previous vote, the first vote on the tax, you will find I vote against it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MOLLOHAN).

Mr. MOLLOHAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to take a moment to put to rest the assertion that budget deficits result from Democratic spending policies. I will not take long, for the facts are acknowledged and the analysis is not difficult. In 1981 and 1982 the President—with the cooperation of a Republican-led Senate and a de facto Republican-led House—presided over the largest deficits this country has ever suffered. This is true however one measures their size: in absolute dollars, as percentages of the GNP, or as percentages of the national debt. The fiscal year 1981 deficit, the last one occurring in a budget written by Democrats, was $58 billion; the fiscal year 1982 deficit, by contrast, was $111 billion; the fiscal year 1983 budget is somewhere in the neighborhood of $200 billion; and the fiscal year 1984 deficit does not promise to be improved.

This administration, unable to dispute the facts, is reduced to arguing that—magically—these deficits—created in fiscal years whose budgets were written by members of the other party in the White House, the Senate, and the House of Repesentatives—are really the fault of those free-spending Democrats. This is absurd. We Democrats did indeed write budgets in the 1960's and the 1970's. They were for the most part good budgets. As a Democrat, I am proud of adequate funding for social security, for education programs, for health maintenance. I am also pleased that Republicans in those years often cooperated with our budget policies. Sure, they had different priorities, but we managed to work together, and the results were some of America's greatest accomplishments.

Unfortunately, we often forget that our country is now led by what used to be a small splinter group of the other party. Before its successful conclusion, the Reagan campaign was ridiculed even by other members of the Republican Party. Supply-side economics—the idea that we can cut taxes, increase defense spending, and balance the budget—was accurately labeled "voodoo economics" by a subsequent convert, GEORGE BUSH. Even with the President firmly ensconced in the White House, Mr. BAKER, the majority leader in the other body, called the program a river boat gamble. And none of us have forgotten David Stockman's Trojan horse.

So, in 1981 this country embarked on a dramatic policy shift based on an economic theory kindly labeled "illogical" by most traditional economists and more explicitly decried as voodoo economics by our current Vice President. The river boat gamble failed, which is bad enough, but the gambler refuses to admit defeat and insists on staying the course.

Mr. Speaker, I noted earlier that, while disagreeing with traditional Republican priorities, I can respect the honesty of their views. The Republican Senate has seen the failure of Reagonomics and has, in an admirable step, risen to the occasion by cooperating with the House on a budget resolution. President's behavior is not understandable. The President of this country, the man who was to have balanced our budget by the next fiscal year, refuses to even sit down and talk about how to get us out of this mess. Many of my colleagues have proposed a bipartisan economic commission devoted to solving the deficit crisis. The President refuses to participate because, rightly enough, he supposes such a commission would certainly endorse some type of tax reform and limitation on defense spending.

Mr. Speaker, I do not particularly enjoy debating deficts. We should avoid partisan bickering, because we cannot afford to waste time. These deficits are truly frightening and I implore my colleagues on the other side of the aisle to join us in seeking a solution. Such a solution will totally please no one, but that should not deter us.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise the gentleman from Arkansas that he has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Arkansas on his efforts to try and get this Congress and this administration to come to grips with this very significant problem of budgetary deficits.

I am sure the record is full of acrimonious charges about who is responsible. The point is, we have to do something about it or we risk aborting the economic recovery that we have waited so very long to see occur. So I would challenge the President and the Republican leadership in the Congress to work with all of us to try and come up with a solution to this problem, because if we do not, then I think interest rates could well go up and the recovery could be aborted. I think it should be our No. 1 priority now that we have taken care of Lebanon and the continuing resolution to see what we can do, through reconciliation, a process that was used devastatingly just a few years ago, in a constructive way to use it to see if we can get these deficits under control.

I think it has to be a high priority. I think we have to look at taxes. I think we have to look at defense spending. Our Subcommittee on Defense will cut defense spending year. And finally, we have got to look at entitlements and it has got to be done in a fair and comprehensive way. It is going to take a lot of courage from both parties to come up with a solution.

But the red ink down there that we are looking at simply cannot be allowed to go, and both parties have got to pull together and come up with a constructive solution.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman from Washington.

Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. FERRARO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Arkansas for taking this special order to discuss the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, keeping track of who is saying what in Washington is a confusing way to spend your time when things are going well. Different individuals have different views, both within and between the major political parties. There are routinely shifting positions and coalitions, and people change their minds.

But the current posture of the Reagan administration on the subject of Federal deficits goes well beyond the normal level of reassessing, reappraising, reconsidering, and reestimating.

Basically, the administration has gone from frantically calling for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget—that was last year—to saying that deficits do not matter. Actually, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan seems to be saying, "Deficits do not matter, you can't prove they matter, and anyway, it's somebody else's fault."

It is easy to understand why Secretary Regan is so anxious. When the Reagan tax and budget programs were passed, the Secretary said, "The monkey is on our back now. The administration will take the blame or the credit for whatever happens to the economy."

Secretary Regan was right. It is on their back. And it is a monkey.

There is not any dispute among respected economists that the huge Federal deficits we now face cause serious problems for the economy.

The $200 billion a year deficits Reaganomics has caused have introduced a new buzzword into our political-economic vocabulary.

It is really two words—crowding out. Crowding out, as we have all come to know too well, is the phenomenon of Federal borrowing absorbing so much of the available credit that private investment is adversely affected, either by higher interest rates or the lack of funds to borrow.

Crowding out means higher interest rates. Higher interest rates mean less private investment, slumping housing and auto sales, and increasing trade deficits as foreign goods become cheaper for U.S. buyers and American goods become more expensive for foreign buyers.

It is a formula for economic stagnation.

There is not any serious question that huge deficits will cause these and other economic ills.

So the question is what can we do about it?

The answer from the Reagan administration? Nothing. Total silence. In fact, the only sound heard from the White House has been the absolute refusal to do any of the things that might help.

The two things the administration specifically refuses to consider are raising taxes and slowing the growth of the defense spending, which has raged out of control in the Reagan years.

The administration says the deficit will take care of itself as the economy rebounds, and that the real problem is domestic spending.

To some extent, they have a point. The Reagan recession contributed to the big deficits in two ways. Unemployed people do not pay taxes, and they cost the Government money in additional benefit payments. It has been estimated that each 1 percent rise in unemployment increases the deficit by $25 to $30 billion.

As for the domestic spending part of their pitch, though, it is a red herring in two ways. First, if you divide domestic spending into entitlements and discretionary spending, you learn that less than a quarter of the Federal budget is something other than defense, entitlements, and interest on the national debt. So the discretionary spending side of domestic spending cannot yield much in the way of savings.

As for the entitlements, there are two kinds—means tested and nonmeans tested. The administration has already made brutal cuts in means-tested programs. Food stamps, child nutrition, AFDC, and subsidized housing have been cut too deeply. It would be unconscionable to consider further cuts. It would be cruel not to adopt some increase.

That leaves the nonmeans-tested entitlements. These are the various retirement programs, including social security, military retirement, and civil service retirement, plus medicare, plus crop price supports, plus various other programs that are equally politically protected.

What is clear is that reducing the deficit will require raising taxes and less defense spending than the administration has planned.

When the administration denies that their tax and defense policies have caused these deficits, you have to wonder whether they understand the situation we are in. Do they think it is some kind of coincidence that the deficit went from $58 billion the year before Reaganomics took effect, to $110 billion the year after, and $200 billion the year after that?

You just cannot get around the fact that even after including the President's 1982 tax increase bill and the gas tax bill, the 1981 Reagan tax cut has produced a net revenue reduction of $750 billion in fiscal years 1984 to 1988. In fact, the net revenue reduction in 1984 has been estimated by CBO to be $94 billion, which is half the projected deficit for next year.

As for defense, the defense budget in 1980 was $145 billion, and in 1984 it will be almost $280 billion. That incredible rate of growth, which is planned to continue for the next 5 years, is a major contributing factor to the deficit crisis.

The deficit problem is a serious one. We cannot solve it by political sleight of hand. There are some things we can tell from the numbers that give us guidance in formulating possible solutions. One thing we can tell from the numbers is what the problem is, and what it is not. Whether the administration will get off the dime and start working in a good faith way in trying to solve the mess caused by its policies is not something we can tell from the numbers. But at least we can understand what is real and what is not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank my good friend, the gentlewoman from New York.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DONNELLY. I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this special order, but when I heard that the leadership of my party and the distinguished members of the minority party would be here tonight to chit-chat about the deficit problem, I could not help but come over and observe and participate maybe for one moment.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that we all come to the same conclusion after this exercise tonight, that the growth in deficit spending will inhibit economic recovery and that as deficits grow as a percentage of our national product, as debt service grows as a percentage of budget outlays, as savings of the average American diminish, that interest rates will rise and the economy will not recover.

I think there is a lot of political rhetoric that surrounds the deficit problem, but the reality is that to deal with the deficit problem we have to deal with it in as antiseptic a political way as possible within this institution. I look forward to hearing from some of the most distinguished leaders in this Nation as tonight they talk about the deficit problem, because to deal with spending we really deal in four areas. We deal with the military, we deal with discretionary domestic spending, we deal with the entitlement problem, and we deal with revenues. It is not one piece over another; it is four pieces together.

To take advantage and to do something about this deficit problem, we will need courage and we will need leadership to solve these problems, and unanimity in this Congress, where there is no unanimity in the administration on this issue.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for his participation.

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the leadership for calling this special order on the deficit. It is absolutely imperative that Congress act to reduce the swollen deficit; failure to act will invite economic ruin.

It is usual and proper to suffer a deficit during an economic slump, although the size of Mr. Reagan's deficit is unprecedented in our history. As employment declines, the Government spends more to compensate the unemployed and collects fewer revenues. But as the economy begins to improve, the deficit, under normal circumstances, should decrease. Yet despite the current "recovery" which the Reagan administration is touting, there are no signs of a shrinking deficit. On the contrary, the administration projects triple-digit deficits for the forseeable future and there are indications that the recovery could very well be strangled by this deficit before it takes hold.

This enormous deficit has been brought on by President Reagan's misdirected economic policies. He decimated the tax base, eliminated vital social programs, instituted a restrictive monetary policy that discouraged investment and poured billions into an already bloated Pentagon. The outcome was the worst recession since World War II, double-digit unemployment, a decimated revenue base and $200 billion deficits as far as the eye can see. Only recently has this country begun to recover from this onslaught, though the so-called economic recovery continues to remain weak by historical standards.

In order to shrink the deficit which is plaguing our economy Mr. Reagan's economic priorities must be redirected. Reducing the deficit requires a full-scale recovery which will produce a stable and thriving economy. We must institute an economic program which promotes high investment, high production, and the creation of jobs in every community for those who need work.

I have been working with a group of Democrats in the House on a maximum production plan: The National Economic Recovery Project. The principles of the project are outlined in a statement "A high production strategy to rebuild America" which has been endorsed by 153 House Democrats. We are currently drafting legislation, based on these principles, which will be introduced by the end of the session.

The central belief behind the project is: high production, High investment and maximum employment is the means by which we can bring about economic recovery, restore the tax base and reduce the deficit. Nancy Barrett, chairman of the department of economics at American University and formerly with the Congressional Budget Office, developed a preliminary series of economic scenarios based on the project's principles. Under a variety of high production policy assumptions, the study indicated that by 1984 deficits could be reduced to as little as $84 billion and by 1987, to $67 billion. The CBO estimates for the same growth path, the deficit will remain at an intolerable $179 billion under current Reagan spending policies.

Let me briefly outline for you the goals of the project which will bring about economic recovery and ultimately reduce the deficit:

The Federal Government will nurture investment, innovation and growth in the private sector. Business, labor, and government will work together to rebuild our aging industries and promote new technologies. Funds will be provided to rebuild the national infrastructure. Meanwhile the Fed will respond to national economic policy by reducing interest rates and insuring there is sufficient capital for investment.

The tax base will be restructured to close unnecessary loopholes, encourage investment, generate new tax revenues and ultimately shrink the persistent deficit.

An inflation-fighting program will be drafted aimed at controlling volatile prices in the necessities which plagued us in the 1970's namely health, food, housing and energy.

The billions of dollars which have been poured into the Pentagon by the Reagan administration will be redirected to creating jobs and rebuilding industry. The defense budget will be cut to 3 percent real growth thereby forcing the Pentagon to eliminate its blatant waste.

These policies will foster strong economic growth in the next 5 years. As our industrial capacity is rebuilt, as workers are rehired, the direct result will be a decrease in the deficit. The tax base will be rebuilt as the economy begins to grow and produce revenue.

President Reagan invited economic collapse, our job is to reverse his inane economic policy. Rather than pouring scarce capital into a bloated Pentagon, we advocate rebuilding the basis of our economy. As factories are retooled and workers rehired, there will once again be the demand for goods which our system requires.

The $200-billion deficit will be brought under control. Through a maximum production economy, new tax revenue will be generated as productivity increase and workers are once again able to contribute to the economy. The new funds will be used to shrink the deficits which threaten to ruin any chance of a full recovery.●

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to join my colleagues today to discuss the growing problem of the deficit. We are told every day of the negative impact its very size is having on the economy—from our constituents to the editors of our local newspapers to business leaders to leading economists. Perhaps in this Chamber more than anywhere else, there are continuing expressions of woe about the problems of the deficit. Yet nothing has happened. We are facing a $200 billion deficit in the face of a strong economic recovery, and have talked and talked about doing something to reduce the size of the deficit. Still nothing has happened.

I believe all of us here, both Republicans and Democrats, agree that the growing deficit is a problem which must be dealt with soon—quickly and effectively. Most of us agree that we must work together, and not separately, in order to succeed. We are all concerned. Our constituents are concerned. If the deficit is not reduced, it will undermine all of the positive things we have worked so hard to achieve over the past few years.

One of the most important steps is to raise public awareness about this issue, both the problem and the solutions available. If we can achieve that today, then we will have made great strides.

It is crucial to understand the budget in order to understand the deficit. When you stop and look at the fiscal year 1984 budget, you have about $850 billion to work with. Right away, 30 percent of that goes to defense; 46 percent goes to entitlement programs, programs that people have paid into. Those people are entitled to those benefits. It is important to note that entitlement programs have grown over 400 percent over the last 10 years, and are expected to be 50 percent of the budget in a very short time. Payment on the national debt consumes about 12 percent of the budget. All of that together is about 85 percent of the total budget. What you have left is discretionary spending, or about 12 to 15 percent of the remaining budget. If you close that down, you still run a deficit of about $160 billion.

What is our strategy? What are our options? I see three options. None of them are particularly appealing and certainly none of them will appeal to everyone in this Chamber. One is to raise revenues to pay the additional bills. Another is to limit the growth in entitlement spending. And the third is to limit the growth of defense spending.

We have to develop a consensus, an agreement with each other on a solution that is fair. The size of the deficit is very real, and will have an adverse impact on the economic recovery if something is not done very soon. I am willing to work with my colleagues toward developing a real solution to reducing the size of the deficit. If we fail to work together, if we fail to address this severe problem conscientiously, we will face even bigger problems in the long run. I believe we can do it, and hope in the days to come we will work out an equitable and realistic solution to reducing the size of the deficit.●

SPENDING AND THE DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT) is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, it has been very interesting to hear the tongue-in-cheek remarks by the gentleman from Arkansas. We could tell by the smile on his face that he obviously could not have been serious, but it is pleasing to me to learn that after all these months and years the Democrats have discovered that there is a deficit, and that they care about deficits at all. But I think the record needs to be corrected just a bit.

We heard, earlier here tonight, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) and the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS) condemning the tax cuts for the American people as if it were a sin to let the American people keep some of their money. Yet, the RECORD shows, and I have it here before me, that on a vote on a motion by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report on the bill to cut individual income tax rates by 25 percent across the board over 33 months, and to require that individual income taxes be adjusted or indexed annually to offset the effects of inflation starting in 1985, et cetera—this was the motion on the law that is on the books that Members of Congress voted on and that the President signed—and the gentleman from Arkansas voted for it. Yet he stands in this well tonight and condemns that legislation. And the gentleman from Oklahoma, the RECORD clearly shows, also voted for it.

In addition, just this year, on 21 major votes in 1983, the gentleman from Arkansas, when given a chance to cut the deficit, voted to increase the deficit, to increase spending by $48,738 million. The gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) who wants to pay as you go, voted for 18 of the 21 increases in spending—not the total amount, just the increases—which add up to $43,591 million.

□ 2000

The gentleman from Oklahoma, from the Third District of Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS) voted for 18 of the 21 increases in spending this year alone, for a total of $46,721 million plus. And, of course, the champ of all, the leader in spending increases in this year alone, which certainly does not cut a deficit, was the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. FERRARO), who voted for 20 of the 21 increases, for a total of $45,778 million.

This is just the beginning, Mr. Speaker. The RECORD is replete with inaccuracies, and there is no way to describe what we heard here tonight, but we are going to set the record straight.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman saying—I had trouble getting my good friend, the gentleman from Arkansas, to yield while he was in the well—is the gentleman saying that the gentleman from the third district of Oklahoma, who went on and on about the inequitous tax cut for the rich, actually voted for that tax cut?

Mr. LOTT. I have the RECORD here before me. That is the bill that went into law, and he voted for it.

Mr. RITTER. He voted for it, and yet he was there denouncing it. Is there not some contradiction in the activities on the floor tonight of the gentleman from the third district of Oklahoma?

Mr. LOTT. Well, I would have to let the RECORD speak for itself. Maybe the gentleman will have something further to say later on.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Mississippi saying that the gentleman from Arkansas, who also denounced this inequitous tax cut, also voted for the final measure that took this tax cut and made it into the law of the land?

Mr. LOTT. Unless there is a mistake in the RECORD. I am looking at it right here. He voted for it.

Mr. RITTER. Well, I think it is interesting for the American people to observe the deficit discussion on the part of the Democrats. I am not sure that they themselves are as familiar with the RECORD as they should be.

Mr. LOTT. Well, I might put my colleagues on notice, too, that if we hear additional speeches later on today or tomorrow, or anytime, from our colleagues, about how they are concerned about the deficit, we have already researched the RECORD. We know which ones and how many of these spending increases they voted for, and the increases they voted for will be placed in the RECORD.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I hope that within the next few minutes I can maintain my balance. I have really become so nauseated by the drivel I have heard from the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER). He leaves out one important component about what contributes to deficits. Blaming the President for deficits is just unconscionable.

No President, Republican or Democrat, whatever, can spend one dime unless this Congress first appropriates, and only then can a President spend, after the Congress has appropriated.

I am serving my 27th year in this Congress, always as a member of the minority party, and I will tell the Members that I have been down in this well supporting amendments to cut funding, and I will stack that record of mine up against that of the gentleman from Arkansas and any other Member who spoke on the Democratic side tonight.

When I first heard that the Democratic leadership was going to initiate a name-calling, finger-pointing campaign on the deficit issue, I was completely dumbfounded. Who in his right mind is going to believe Democrats blaming somebody else for high deficits? If there are any generally adhered to truths in American politics and government, one must be that the Democratic Party has done more to destroy our economic vitality and our hopes for balanced budgets than any other individuals in America.

Look back over the landscape of the last decade. Massive increases in Federal spending, uncontrolled growth of entitlements and off-budget commitments, the disruption of America's productive capacity——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. The proliferation of meddling, costly, and cumbersome Federal regulation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I will accord the gentleman the same courtesy he gave me. I will wait until the end of my remarks.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, the gentleman mentioned my name. I assert a point of personal privilege.

Mr. MICHEL. I know. And the gentleman referred to my name, too, so we will just accord him the same courtesy.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MICHEL. I refuse to yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I assert a point of personal privilege. The gentleman used my name, and I would like to assert a point of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT) controls the time and cannot be taken from the floor by a point of personal privilege.

Mr. LOTT. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker. I yielded to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time is that of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. And I continue to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. The Democratic Presidential contender, ERNEST HOLLINGS, said it best, I think: "Every time a special interest appeared, we responded. Every time a problem arose, we offered a single solution, money."

House Speaker O'NEILL, back in 1981, said the following about the 1970's: "Sure, in the 1970's my party made mistakes. We overregulated. There was too much redtape and probably too much legislation."

The mistakes he refers to threw us into the worst economic mud-slide since the Depression. By the end of the decade we were wrestling with record-high inflation, record-high interest rates, record-high taxes, record-high spending, record-low productivity, and record-low savings and investment. Those conditions pushed us off the economic cliff into the depths of a terrible recession, and that recession is responsible for two-thirds of the deficit problem that we face today.

In 1982, after 1½ years of attempts to thwart every single move to cut Federal spending that we initiated, the Democrats said that high deficits would prevent economic recovery. The Democratic Study Group said in September of last year, "The Reagan GOP deficits are undermining the economy and chances for economic recovery."

Were they right? Of course not. When it comes to the economy, they never are.

The third quarter of this year showed the economy growing at a healthy 7 percent, well above anyone's expectations. Inflation is holding steady at just above 3 percent. The economy is producing 400,000 jobs a month. Housing starts in August were the highest since 1978. Car sales are up. Auto-makers plan to recall 15,000 workers in the next few months. Industrial production went up again last month almost a full percent. Personal income rose $6.5 billion in August. Savings went up to 5.2 percent.

We are not out of the woods by any means, but the recovery is robust and it is here to stay.

Now, this year the Democrats are saying deficits will not hurt the economy until sometime off in the future. But what do the Democrats want to do about the deficit, now that they have finally discovered it? They want to tax the American people to death. The Democrats cut deficits by raising the taxes of lower and middle-income taxpayers.

In March of this year they published their tax increase "wish list," and the suggestion of dozens of ways to mug Americans reads as follows: Repeal the third year of the tax cut, repeal indexing of tax brackets, restrict the homeowners' right to deduct interest on their mortgages, eliminate deductions for State and local taxes paid, limit charitable contributions deductions, and taxing fringe benefits, to name a few.

Mr. Speaker, I say to my friends that I am also reminded of the charge that the Reagan tax bill in 1981 was a bill favoring the rich, but I will say frankly that when the President proposed his tax reduction, it was straight reduction across the board for low income, high income, everybody equally. But do you know who changed that tax bill considerably? I think it was Mr. BRODHEAD of Michigan, a liberal Democrat, who said, "Let us reduce the 70 percent rate down to 50 percent." Not in 3 years. He said, "Let us do it all in 1 year."

And who was it that moved to reduce the capital gains tax in the Ways and Means Committee? Not a Republican. No, it was again Mr. JONES of Oklahoma in that case—from 28 to 20 percent.

Who was it that proposed adding onto the tax bill a reduction in corporate income taxes? Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, the chairman of that committee. Then there were estate taxes, then the marriage penalty and all the other goodies for oil and what not.

And you say Mr. Reagan is responsible for the kind of tax bill we got? Why, of course not. It was promoted right here in this House where all revenue bills have to be initiated under the Constitution. And no one who spoke here tonight prior to my taking the floor can now weasel out of any responsibility for enactment of that tax bill.

The real solution to deficits is not taxes. It is spending. Let us look at the Democratic record. If you go back over the last 2½ years and take the top 20 spending bills before the House, you will find that the Democrats did not put their vote where their deficit rhetoric is today.

□ 2010

In 1981 the most Democratic support we got for spending restraint was 26 percent and the record will show that. The low was 4 percent.

In 1982 it ranged from 39 to 9 percent and this year the top was 20 percent.

Time after time after time in just the last few months Democrats have been spending the taxpayers' money like drunken winners at the Irish Sweepstakes. There was $100 million here, $300 million there. It just happened this last week, $1 billion for this and $4 billion for that.

It has been disgraceful. The Democrats have voted in the last 2 years to add billions of dollars to the deficits they are crying about today. Their record spending sprees are shameful. In too many instances they have deliberately tried to deceive innocent Americans into believing they are doing something good for them, when in fact they knew full well the bills they passed would never see the light of day and the programs they created would never help the people who needed them.

Now, this weekend the Democrats are kicking off their 1984 campaign with shabby half-baked, poorly done advertising fling, designed more to attract free publicity from the press than anything else.

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania also, if he stays for the extensions of remarks, will have a very important insertion in the RECORD having to do again with the gentleman from Arkansas and how he perceives this system and this orchestration of advertising through the medium of flow.

I regret that, but the problem with the campaign that the Democrats are now going to conduct is not how it is done or who is the target. Of and by itself, it is a drop in the ocean. The problem is that it is being done at all. This kind of theatrics will poison the well from which any bipartisan effort to hold down deficits could be drawn.

Politicizing the deficit issue is the worst that could happen. We will never be able to solve the deficit problem in that kind of an atmosphere.

I would like to hear the Speaker say that he has no part in making the deficit a partisan free-for-all, but I doubt that he will. I would like to hear the Speaker say that he wants to meet on neutral ground and seek ways to reduce the deficits.

I would have to remind those on the other side of the aisle when they abrogated their responsibility 2 years ago to formulate a budget, there were those of us in the minority roll on this side who really put the act together, bringing together the dissident factions from right and left and middle and whatever grounds we could. We were calling them boll weavils, gypsy moths, yellow jackets; but that is the way you have to make this House work is bringing everybody together.

I have to say that in this last year with the budget debacle that we have had, the gentleman from Illinois was really never asked to contribute, nor were any significant number of Republicans asked to participate in that process.

I guess I would like to see us all sit down together and do what needs to be done, talk, negotiate, compromise, and ultimately agree on a solution. I would like to think there is still an opportunity to do that, because that is the only way we are going to get any good accomplished out of the kind of debate that will ensue on who causes deficits, how they are caused, who is responsible and all the rest.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi for yielding. I am sure there will be others who will have valuable contributions to make to the debate this evening.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA).

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, when I read that the Democrat strategists were about to launch a campaign to try to con the American people into believing that the Republicans in the Congress and the Reagan administration are the big spenders and the Democrats are the protectors of the public purse and against deficit spending, I just could not believe it. I just could not believe it.

Such a campaign will be an effort to the intelligence of the American people. Do they honestly believe that the people do not possess memories and that such a campaign could possibly succeed?

Do they actually believe that the people do not know what goes on in this Chamber day after day, week after week, and which party's members, with few exceptions, consistently vote for more and more spending without regard to its impact on the deficit, or do the Democrat Members actually believe that their votes for ever increasing spending measures day after day do not impact on the deficit and go unnoticed by the people? I think not.

Certainly the people know and they are not about to be fooled by a last minute media campaign to rewrite history to save my Democrat friends from the rightful blame, and yes, scorn, if you please, for the ever-mounting deficits this country has been accumulating. Shame, shame on them.

I stood in the well of this House many, many times over the years and pointed out how unfair it was to be putting more and more debt on the backs of our grandchildren. Remember? Of course, you remember. But did the big spenders in the Democratic party take heed? Of course, they did not. They thought it was better politics to be for more and more spending and not being recorded as voting against an overfunded measure or against a politically attractive new measure, even though they knew we would have to borrow the money to pay for it.

Oh, I know our time is limited, but let us just look at the record.

Mr. Speaker, look at what has happened around here just since we got back from the summer recess 2 weeks ago.

The Democratic leadership decided to completely ignore the September 23 deadline for reconciliation. Never mind that reconciliation is the only means we seem to have left of forcing this Congress to make even a slight reduction in spending.

In fact, this House has refused during the last 2 weeks to take any action whatsoever to reduce spending.

When Congressman MCDADE offered us an opportunity to cut 4 percent across the board from the fiscal year 1984 Interior appropriations bill and trim $300 million from deficit spending, 84 percent of the Democrats in this House voted against it.

When Congressman BARTLETT offered us an opportunity to cut 10 unrelated programs from the vocational rehabilitation bill and save $1.6 billion in deficit spending, 97 percent of the Democrats voted against it.

When Congressman FRENZEL wanted to send the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act back to committee to save $83 million—the amount the bill was over budget—97 percent of Democrats refused to do it.

Oh, I know the big spenders believe their actions have nothing to do with deficits. The deficits are caused by low taxes. Well, let me tell you that increasing taxes will not reduce deficits. Experience over the past 27 years while the Democrats have been in control of this House proves that any decline in the deficit resulting from higher taxes is likely to evaporate even before the ink is dry. The Democrats do not want to raise taxes to lower the deficit. They want to raise taxes to pay for new or enlarged spending programs.

I am surprised that some liberal Democrats have just learned we have a deficit problem. Where have they been while the Reagan administration has been urging restraint on spending for the past 33 months? They have been voting against restraint and now want to blame the administration for the increased deficits which have occurred.

Well, I do not have to tell this body that the administration does not spend one red cent which is not authorized to be spent by this spend thrift Congress. The budget resolution which is supposed to set limits on spending does not even go to the White House for the President's signature. No, we do not have to look any further than our own front door to see where all this spending comes from.

The truth is that this Congress for the past 30 years has shown no desire to control spending. Except for the 83d Congress, control of this House has been in the hands of the Democrats.

From 1950 through 1954 Federal outlays averaged 17.6 percent of gross national product. Since then they have risen steadily upward: 18.7 percent in the early 1960's, 20.1 percent in the early 1970's, and 23.0 percent of GNP when the Reagan administration took over.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated the fiscal year 1983 deficit at $207 billion although the Treasury Department now says it might be slightly less. The fiscal 1984 deficit under the budget resolution passed in June is estimated at $192 billion. I agree. These deficits are intolerable. The question is, who is responsible?

Despite what the Democratic leadership would like the American people to believe, much of our current deficit problem goes back to the days of President Johnson's Great Society and the birth of the "entitlement" programs as we know them today. The Democratic-controlled Congress gave President Johnson everything he wanted and then some without regard for the economy's ability to provide.

Let me quote from President Johnson himself. These are comments he made at an October 5, 1965 White House meeting. I found them very revealing.

When I came in, in January (1964) I said, "I want a poverty program and I want $800 million. That's more than Roosevelt had on PWA or WPA—all those lumped together. He'd turn over in his grave if he thought we could get that much—but I got $800 million. The next year I got $1 billion $500 million. Next year I asked for $1 billion $750 million, up $250 million.

Johnson ended his talk by saying: "We haven't gone as far as we're going to go in the next two years of my office if the Good Lord is willing and the creeks don't rise."

Well, the Lord was willing, but we now are drowning in the red ink.

I ask my Democratic friends. Do you really want to control the deficit? Then do something about cost-of-living increases and entitlements. The total cumulative cost of automatic COLA's paid by this House since 1970 is $510 billion, according to the Department of Commerce. By the end of fiscal 1968 the total cumulative cost of COLA's will be $2.7 trillion.

Entitlement programs, on which COLA's have a significant impact, have had unbelievable growth. In 1965 entitlement programs cost the Federal Government $23 billion. By 1984 the cost entitlement programs will be $338 billion. That is an increase of more than 1,300 percent.

If anyone in this Chamber has a poor memory, let me remind you. These programs we are talking about were not started under President Reagan. Many were born in the Great Society. Others have been created and nurtured by the Democratic-controlled Congresses since then.

So, if nothing else, I think we can say that the spending habits of the Democratic Party since the days of the Johnson administration have been consistent.

Let us look, for example, at the debate over the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1979. It shows the Democrats in their true colors as deficit spenders.

During that debate, House Republicans offered an amendment that would have cut $13 billion in outlays from the Democratic budget resolution. The amendment represented a fundamental Republic attack on the way budgets are put together. Republicans argued that you should decide the appropriate overall spending total, and then divide it up among the various programs.

The amendment was opposed by a number of Democrats who said it would eliminate needed spending programs. I think our former Republican leader in the House, John Rhodes, put it best during the debate:

"To the Democrats in Congress," John said, "Budgeting requires only an adding machine without a subtract button. Nowhere in the Democrat-engineered budget process does a fiscal policy appear."

In the end, the big spenders prevailed in 1978 with 78 percent of Democrats voting for more deficit spending, while over 99 percent of the Republicans voted for their party's efforts to promote fiscal responsibility.

Two other major efforts were made to curb runaway spending in that resolution. Our late colleague, John Ashbrook of Ohio, offered an amendment to cut HEW programs by $3.15 billion. John said his proposal was prompted by a recent report that HEW misspent between $6 and $7 billion in 1977 due to "waste, fraud, and mismanagement."

John won a surprising 198 to 189 victory on that issue. However, through parliamentary sleight-of-hand and intense overnight arm twisting the Democratic leadership managed to get and win a second vote on the Ashbrook amendment. In the end, 75 percent of Democrats voted to overturn Ashbrook and spend more, while 86 percent of the Republicans voted for fiscal prudence.

In a last ditch effort to restore fiscal responsibility, Democrat Joe Fisher offered an amendment to reduce spending across-the-board by $7 billion. He appeared to have won when the 15-minute voting period expired. However, a strenuous 10-minute effort by the Democrat leadership managed to produce enough vote changes to convert what had appeared to be a 10 or 12 vote victory margin into a 195-203 defeat. Seventy-two percent of his own Democrat party deserted Joe on that vote, while 89 percent of Republicans supported him.

Later on, during the appropriations process, our Republican colleagues CLARENCE MILLER of Ohio and SILVIO CONTE of Massachusetts offered a series of amendments to the fiscal year 1979 appropriations bills which would have provided a 2 to 5 percent across-the-board spending reduction—a modest amount. Only two of these passed, and in each case more than 60 percent of the Democrats voted against the reduction, while more than 75 percent of voting Republicans supported fiscal responsibility.

So, I ask you, Who wants to control defict spending and who does not?

Let us look at the record for 1981—the first year of the Reagan administration. During the debate on the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1982 the lines were soon drawn. The difference between the bipartisan Gramm-Latta resolution and the Democratic leadership's resolution was that ours attempted to control defict spending while they wanted more spending.

Beyond the debate in 1981 on the economic assumptions, beyond the debate on tax cuts, beyond all of that was the fact that our budget resolution mandated spending cuts of $37 billion through reconciliation. The plan of the Democratic leadership called for cuts through reconciliation of only $16 billion—less than half.

If you do not recall, let me read you a very vivid colloquoy between the chairman of the Budget Committee and the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee that took place during debate on the resolutions.

Mr. Perkins, "Now lastly in the gentleman's bill and the Latta substitute, what is the discrepancy insofar as reconciliation is concerned for all of the programs over which the House Committee on Education and Labor has jurisdiction?"

Mr. Jones, "If the gentleman will yield, under the committee resolution, the Committee on Education and Labor would reconcile $1.8 billion. Under the Latta substitute, the reconciliation required of the gentleman's committee would be $11.2 billion."

Every single House Republican saw that issue clearly and voted for the deficit-reducing Gramm-Latta resolution as did 23 percent of the Democrats. But, 74 percent of Democrats ignored the will of the American people who had themselves voted for reduced deficit spending when they elected Ronald Reagan President. Those Democrats voted for business as usual.

How important was that vote? Well let me just repeat the remarks of our Republican leader, Mr. MICHEL, as he closed debate that day:

> Let history record that today we set the pace, a new pace, and we showed them the way, a new way. But most importantly, let history record that we provided the margin of difference that changed the course of American government.

That's what we were trying to do, to change the course of Government.

But old Democratic habits do not die easily.

As the gentleman from California (Mr. LOWERY) put it so well in the debate on the first budget resolution, "Our constituents are paying more for the Government now, and enjoying it less."

Some of us may forget where the economy was back in 1981. Let me just read to you the remarks of the Chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Mr. FORD:

> It seems to me that a prime rate of 19 or 20 percent gives us plenty to worry about. We all know what these historic high interest rates have done to the housing and automobile industries. In Michigan we do not have a recession, we have a depression.

I would just remind my friends that those "historic high interest rates" were about 5 percent in 1977 when the last Democratic administration took over. They more than tripled in 4 years. And as Chairman FORD is well aware, under the Carter administration the prime rose to 21.5 percent and the prime is now back down to 11 percent. They're building and selling cars in Michigan and Ohio again.

When we came to the reconciliation bill that year, 1981, it was the same story. Where the Republican substitute, Gramm-Latta II it was called, came up with some real controls on entitlements, the Democratic version was mostly window dressing.

We all know what the difference in those bills was. The Republican leader BOB MICHEL put it pretty accurately when he said, "Either we come to grips with the question of entitlement programs now, or we will have broken our compact with the American people."

Gramm-Latta II tightened regulations on Government programs and achieved real savings in entitlements and authorizations of $135 billion over 3 years.

Republicans voted 100 percent for reduced spending in Gramm-Latta. Only 23 percent of the Democrats joined us. If it had not passed, where would we be today? I will tell you. If the Democratic version had passed, the Federal deficit would have increased by an additional $74 billion by 1984.

That 1981 vote on Gramm-Latta II was one of the most historic votes in the past 30 years.

The record is very clear on who has voted to reduce Government spending and who has voted to increase it. The astonishing thing is how consistent it has been. I have a table which starkly illustrates what I am saying. It shows the voting patterns on some of the key votes over the past 3 years and documents the fact that the majority of the members of the other party have consistently voted to increase deficit spending while opposing all efforts by Republicans to control spending. I ask permission to include it in the RECORD at this point.

The table follows:

But let us get back to 1981 for a minute. There were other important votes that year. The real work, as you probably remember, started when the spending bills came to the floor.

The Labor-HHS appropriations bill, the largest of our spending bills, came to the floor in 1981 $1 billion over budget. When Republicans attempted to recommit the bill—send it back to committee to come up with the required savings—88 percent of Democrats opposed us and committed themselves to yet more deficit spending.

When the Interior Department appropriations bill came to the floor $1.1 billion over budget in November, 87 percent of Democrats opposed our motion to recommit and it lost on a tie vote. Remember that? Fortunately, after threat of a veto by the President, cooler heads prevailed. We achieved a 4-percent across-the-board cut in that bill.

By the fall of 1981 an even bigger battle developed over the continuing appropriations bill. Because Congress had passed only one regular appropriations bill, and because it was obvious that even further spending reductions would be needed, the President proposed across-the-board cuts in appropriations to come up with $8.5 billion in savings.

Do you remember what happened then? The Democratic leadership decided to give the President one-quarter of the savings he needed. The opportunity to show whether we supported the President or not came on the vote to recommit. While 90 percent of Republicans supported the spending cuts, 86 percent of Democrats voted to increase deficit spending.

As I am sure we all remember, the President vetoed that bill, and most of the savings later were achieved. But when the conference report on the bill came to the floor, the act was replayed. Again we tried to send the matter back to conference. Once again 100 percent of Republicans supported the effort. Once again 96 percent of Democrats voted for higher deficit spending.

All this talk from the Democratic leadership about deficits is nothing more than an attempt to convince the American people that they must support higher taxes—taxes, the Democratic leadership promises them, will be levied against someone else. This must be done, the Democrats say, to solve the deficit problem. The truth is they want new taxes so they can spend more—not less.

Well, they first tried to use that phony argument about taxes and deficits during debate on the fiscal year 1983 budget resolution last year. I am sure you all remember last year. That was when we had no fewer than seven different resolutions on the House floor at one time and failed to pass any of them. We had to come back a month later when we finally adopted a resolution that had the lowest deficit spending of the two resolutions considered.

During the first attempt to pass a budget resolution—in May 1982—the Democrats offered us a budget calling for $19.8 billion more in nondefense spending than the President wanted. Seventy-three percent of the Democrats voted for that resolution, but it was not enough and the measure was defeated. But, despite the support of 90 percent of Republicans, the GOP measure also was defeated.

"This is horrible," complained the Democratic leadership. "We must compromise and come up with a budget resolution." Remember that? Remember the "Gang of 17"? That is what the newspapers called those who tried to negotiate a compromise between the House, the Senate, and the White House. When it failed, I was not surprised because nothing ever changed on the Democratic side.

When they came back to the floor in June, the Democratic proposal actually called for $3 billion more in spending than did their first proposal. This time they proposed cutting the deficit by reducing defense spending by $40 billion over 3 years and by raising taxes by $150 billion over 3 years to feed the spending machine.

Luckily, enough Democrats joined our side in saying, "No" to that proposal and "Yes" to the substitute I offered which cut $52 billion in deficit spending for fiscal year 1983.

As I said, I am sure you remember much of that. But I am afraid there is one thing about last year's budget resolution which many of my Democratic friends have forgotten—or pretend to forget.

During negotiations with the Senate on the conference report—and later on the tax bill—there was a general agreement that for every dollar in taxes raised there would be $3 cut from spending. That was the 3-for-1 agreement. But, what happened to those spending cuts? The tax bill was passed, but most of the promised spending cuts seem to have disappeared. In place of the promised cuts we are getting calls from the Democratic leadership for more spending and even higher taxes.

These are facts I am giving you. Go back and check the voting records.

Let me quickly go through some other key votes which clearly demonstrate the longstanding fascination the Democratic leadership has had with deficit spending.

Remember when President Reagan vetoed the supplemental appropriations bill last year? He did it for a good reason. It would have added $1.3 billion to the fiscal year 1983 deficit. When the vote came to override his veto, Republicans supported the President with a 71-percent vote while 91 percent of Democrats voted for the $1.3 billion in deficit spending.

When it came time for reconciliation, the Democrats had a new twist. Instead of one omnibus reconciliation bill, the Democratic leadership decided each committee with reconciliation instructions could have a separate vote on the House floor. This, the leadership admitted, would make it harder to achieve the mandated savings.

They were right. When the Post Office and Civil Service Committee brought its bill to the floor it called for savings of only $32 million. The budget resolution had mandated $3.2 billion. The committee had flatly rejected the cuts ordered by the resolution.

We lost that vote, but more important, the budget process was damaged in the process. Congressman Derwinski of Illinois offered the motion for the Republicans to recommit the bill; 78 percent of Republicans voted for this reduction in deficit spending while 91 percent of the Democrats supported additional deficit spending.

One way to control deficit spending, of course, is to require a balanced budget each year. Yet, last year, when Congress was given a chance to vote for a balanced budget amendment—not a commitment to a balanced budget but just a commitment to allow the American people to decide whether they wanted the budget balanced—71 percent of the Democrats in this House voted against it. The balanced budget amendment was supported by 89 percent of Republicans.

I think President Reagan stated it correctly when he said following the defeat of the amendment that: "This vote makes clear who supports a balanced budget and who does not. Voters across America should count heads and take names."

This year things are even worse. I am afraid my friends on the other side of the aisle think they can convince the American people that the budget problem is the fault of those tax cuts President Reagan wanted for them. Where would the economy be had those tax reductions not been made? Would people be going back to work? Of course not!

The Democratic leadership bulldozed through this House a budget resolution for fiscal year 1984 that they admit had two purposes: First, to repeal Gramm-Latta and restore the budget cuts in domestic programs; and second, to restore leadership control over rank and file Democrats by mandating that they vote for the Democratic budget.

Well, they succeeded. They succeeded beyond their own expectations. They got a budget that even they did not expect to be enacted, one that mandated changes in the entitlement programs such as food stamps, AFDC, and child nutrition that could add countless billions to deficit spending over the years to come.

How much will it add? Even the sponsors do not know. Can you believe that? They voted changes, and they do not know how much they will cost. Time and time again Budget Committee Democrats were asked how much these changes would cost, and they failed to come up with the answers.

Representative SILVIO CONTE called this budget resolution, "The Jealous Sister." President Reagan raised defense spending in 1981, and Chairman JONES cut defense spending in 1983. President Reagan reined in entitlements in 1981, and Chairman JONES proposed cutting them loose in 1983. President Reagan lowered taxes in 1981, and Chairman JONES proposed raising them in 1983.

The Democratic leadership got its budget resolution this year, but it has failed to live up to it or to accept responsibility for it. The leadership has let the reconciliation deadline slip by twice. It has failed to hold to its own spending ceilings, and it has failed to enact the taxes the leadership insisted upon.

When we were in conference on the budget resolution, even Senate Democrats sent word to the House Democratic leadership not to be greedy and not to persist in its attempts to ram the budget resolution through Congress. A $30 billion tax increase in 1984 would be impossible, warned DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of the House Ways and Means Committee. Added Senator RUSSELL LONG of the Senate Finance Committee:

> To try to pass a tax increase with those kind of numbers without the support of the President is just ridiculous.

But the spending appetite of the Democratic leadership could not be satisfied. They cut $9.5 billion out of defense spending and added $14 billion in domestic spending.

A new twist was the so-called reserve fund. Insisted upon by the House Democrats, it symbolizes the ultimate breakdown of the budget process this year. What message did it send to Wall Street? It said that we planned to spend $850 billion in fiscal year 1984, unless, of course, we decided to spend $858 billion.

The so-called reserve fund could not be more misnamed. There is nothing reserve about it. As soon as it was enshrined in the resolution, the House Democrats fell all over themselves to appropriate funds for these wish list programs.

In a few short weeks the Democrats in the House have just about spent everything in the reserve fund without having any idea where the money will come from. They remind me of nothing so much as a compulsive spender who goes on a credit card binge and ends up having to declare bankruptcy.

But, how is the House today holding the line on that outrageous budget resolution? It is not.

When our Republican colleague from Pennsylvania, Congressman MCDADE, offered an amendment to the Interior appropriations bill to cut funds 4 percent across-the-board, 100 percent of the Republicans supported this $300 million deficit cutting measure, while 83 percent of the Democrats opposed it.

The Democratic leadership made it clear it wanted no part in negotiating its position on the bill. Congressman WYLIE, the ranking Republican on the House Banking Committee, called the bill so excessive as to be ludicrous. The bill repudiated the 1981 Reconciliation Act by reducing the amount of income a tenant must pay toward rent in subsidized housing from 30 to 25 percent.

The average taxpayer today pays 33 percent of his income in rent. This means that he gets hit twice. He pays more for his rent than the tenant of subsidized housing, and he helps that subsidized tenant with his rent through taxes. I do not know about the rest of you, but the people in my district do not understand such arithmetic. Something is basically wrong here.

Do you remember the Vocational Rehabilitation Act? We had that one on the floor just a week ago. I am sure the majority leader remembers it. He offered a whole new title to the bill on the floor to provide for financing to educate illegal alien children. Under his plan each school district in the country would get $500 a year for each alien child. The majority leader claimed that the Supreme Court had mandated that illegal alien children must be educated and that the schools need more money to do this.

The amendment, which passed by voice vote, permits "such sums as may be necessary" to carry out its objective. But, as our colleague Congressman FISH of New York said, "Nobody can estimate the number of children this program will serve but that for every million children, it would cost the Government half a billion dollars."

There was another important amendment offered to that bill by Chairman JONES which would have lowered the authorization for the entitlement portion of the vocational rehabilitation State grant to the level authorized in the budget resolution. This would have provided an assumed 5 percent cost-of-living increase in 1985 and the outyears.

But that did not satisfy the Democratic leadership. The leadership went along with a new precedent whereby the grant program would get the entitlement plus COLA increases, plus "such sums as may be necessary" discretionary appropriation. This was despite the fact the grant program had already received an increase of 9.9 percent between 1983 and 1984 and a 9.4-percent increase between 1982 and 1983.

Clearly the purpose here was to repeal the 1981 Reconciliation Act and to make up for the caps on the grant program placed there by OBPA.

How about the Trade Adjustment Act? That was last week, too. Representative FRENZEL, of Minnesota, offered a motion to recommit—send the bill back to committee—because it was $83 million over the level of the Democrats' own budget resolution. But 80 percent of Democrats voted against the savings. Need I remind anyone that the budget resolution that bill violated is the same resolution the Democratic leadership pushed through this House last June? That was the Democratic plan for economic recovery which seems to translate into the Democratic plan for deficit spending. I might add that 90 percent of Republicans supported Mr. FRENZEL's motion.

Just because the economy is improving is no reason in the eyes of the House Democratic leadership to stop the spending machine. The emergency housing assistance bill was pulled from the House floor several times because the problem of foreclosure on homes was fast becoming a nonissue as the recovery gained strength. Even some Democrats feared it provided relief to the undeserving.

But that did not stop it. Efforts to cut the bill's cost in half were defeated by voice vote, even as Representative WYLIE warned that the program could easily become an entitlement program. "Boy, will your mail burn if your next door neighbor is left out and somebody across the street is paid government money to pay their mortgage," he warned.

In the end, 84 percent of the Democrats voted to add new deficit spending while 96 percent of the Republicans had the courage to vote against the bill.

And, how about health insurance for the unemployed? For all their moaning about the growth of nonmeans tested entitlements, the Democratic leadership could just not keep its authorizing committees from turning the measure into a kind of entitlement—in this case one in the form of a block grant to the States.

Now, had we had some cooperation around here, we could have had a good bill to help those really in need. But no, the Congress had to produce a bill that Congressman CONTE complained would serve "a relatively affluent group of Americans" who lost their well-paying jobs, while leaving the minimum wage worker without help.

Congressman TAUKE of Iowa, a Republican who was sympathetic to the bill, tried to make it subject to an appropriation. He failed with 83 percent of the Democrats voting against him and for more deficit spending.

And so it goes. Last week we were told that the country needs a $3.5 billion jobs bill to create public works employment for the unemployed. This came at a time when the economic recovery is producing an average of 400,000 new jobs in the private sector each month—10 times as many as would be produced under the bill.

But the Democratic leadership said the bill must be passed quickly and House Democrats followed orders with 87 percent of them voting to spend the money.

That brings us up to yesterday when the House passed the continuing appropriations bill. That bill contained a little item that particularly concerns me, and is an excellent example of how a program can get out of hand.

When the Congress established the Legal Services Corporation, the intent was that it would provide individual legal representation for the poor. Instead, the Corporation now spends much of its efforts in class action suits and lobbying efforts in an attempt to thwart the will of Congress. In recent weeks the newspapers have been full of stories about how Legal Services has been engaging in blatant lobbying efforts at the expense of representing the poor.

Under the circumstances, you would think that stricter rules against lobbying would be written into its charter, and that its budget would be cut in order to make these lobbying activities more difficult.

But, no, the Democratic leadership is attempting to weaken the antilobbying provisions in the reauthorizing legislation for the Legal Services Corporation.

The Democratic leadership also is rewarding Legal Services financially for violating the law. Instead of freezing its funds, the continuing resolution passed yesterday provides for a $50 million increase from $241 million in fiscal year 1983 to $290 million in fiscal year 1984. This is a 21-percent increase in 1 year. Few, if any, other items in the budget have been treated so generously.

How about this morning? The House adopted the Federal supplemental compensatin bill which extends Federal unemployment benefits for 45 days at a cost of $1.2 billion and liberalizes the benefits at a cost of $6 billion if extended 18 months. It doubles the number of weeks that are made available in the original September 1982 program.

Congressman CAMPBELL of South Carolina offered a motion to recomit. Need I tell you how it came out? Democrats voted against it—93 percent of them—while 78 percent of Republicans voted to support Congressman CAMPBELL.

As I said, the record is all there in black and white.

I do not believe it is as easy to fool the American people as the Democratic leadership seems to believe. The American people know who is responsible for voting for all of these spending bills which have caused the deficits in force today.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. DAUB).

Mr. DAUB. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman especially for his interest in this special order tonight that is indeed commencing I think clearly to demonstrate that the record can indeed be set straight.

Mr. Speaker, after many years of ignoring the deficit, the partisans of the Democratic Pary have discovered it, and hope to make a political issue out of it. This is truly a remarkable situation. A party that has fought and continues to fight for every domestic spending program that can be devised without regard to the consequences to the economy now claims to be the watchdog of the American purse. I sincerely do not believe that the American people will for a minute accept the notion that Ronald Reagan is spending us into bankruptcy while the House Democrats are counting pennies.

The idea that they could pass themselves off as concerned with budget deficits is mindful of those propagandists who espouse the theory of the "big lie." If you absolutely ignore what stands in front of all and claim instead what is clearly untrue or unreal, there are bound to be people that will be unable to accept the fact that anyone could lie on such a scale and actually begin to believe the untruth.

What is truly unfortunate is that the deficits have not been harmless. In fact, unaffordable Government spending with or without deficits is not harmless. The spending of the last 20 years has accomplished nothing else but secured the reelection of many Members of Congress who have exchanged promises of more social spending for votes. But at the same time they have created the misery, the hunger, and the unemployment today that they now claim cries out for more spending.

The argument is not very complicated. They would have us believe that President Reagan has created the deficit by large increases in military spending and tax policies that have drained the National Treasury. Let us just take a quick look at the fact.

Are we spending too much on the military as opposed to social spending? In fact the percentages of Federal budget devoted to these two areas are just about the reverse of what they were when John Kennedy was President. It was during the administration of Richard Nixon that we first spent more than half of the budget on social needs. The defense budget proposed by President Reagan even if fully enacted would not have brought the Pentagon share of the Federal budget above 30 percent.

Those Democrats who have come out for the most dramatic reductions in military spending have suggested that $50 billion could be reduced but this would result in every procurement program being junked and a dramatic reduction is the size and capability of our Armed Forces. In fact, very few have gone this far and those who have probably do not really believe such a reduction prudent or even sane in the light of world events. But even a reduction of this amount would not solve our budget deficit. We would still be looking at $200 billion in a few years.

Where is the rest of the money going to come from? From taxes of course. We are told that the 1981 Tax Act is the culprit and that the rich have somehow made off with the Treasury of the United States. As painful as it may be for some, let us look at the facts.

The 1981 act would have reduced taxes by $1.138 trillion over 8 years. But since that time we have seen social security payroll taxes increased by $270 billion, bracket creep brings in another $439 billion, the 1982 act took back $281 billion of the 1981 act. The gas tax passed last year will bring in $21 billion. That means that the net tax cut over 8 years is about $77 billion. Compare that with deficits in the area of $200 billion per year and the accusation that Americans are getting away with something falls a little flat. Add to this the fact that both the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee are currently engaged in a process that is certain to yield more taxes and it is not an exaggeration to say that by the end of this year the 1981 Tax Act will have been entirely consumed.

A cornerstone of the Democratic deficit campaign is this notion of low taxes but in fact by any standard Americans are paying more and will continue to pay more than ever before. As a percentage of GNP Federal tax revenues rose from 18.2 percent in 1976 to 20.9 percent in 1981—the highest level since 1944. From 1983 through 1986 the percentage of GNP will average about 19.2 percent. This compares with the sixties when the average was 18.6 percent. The average for the seventies was 18.9 percent. Again these figures do not contemplate any further increases in taxes but increases I am certain will occur.

If the new foes of the deficit were honest they would point out that what they really want to see is higher taxes on working people so that they will have more dollars to fund politically popular spending programs that will insure their reelection. They do not really want to see the defense budget reduced. Even Senator CRANSTON wants the B-1 bomber as long as it is built in California. They do not mind higher taxes on America's working people. With the top 50 percent paying 93 percent of the taxes it is relatively easy to get away with punishing our society's most productive citizens and still get a majority of the votes. But even those who do not pay taxes or who pay a very small amount ought to be indignant over the efforts of those who would seek to increase taxes.

The greatest cause of unemployment today is not because Government does not spend enough money but because it has sought to tax so much. Those American industries that have been on the ropes during the last few years are there because they did not have the capital to modernize and compete. Our Government has pursued tax policies that frustrate exports just as surely as Japan and other countries have pursued policies that encourage exports.

The human misery of our cities can very much be laid at the feet of a government that tried to do too much. The high interest rates of recent years have brought about unemployment in all parts of our country but no doubt have had their greatest impact in urban, manufacturing areas.

I am not really concerned with this new partisan effort to rewrite history. The American people—even those who favor greater social spending—know who spends and who saves. How can a party that has railed against the so-called cuts in social spending of the Reagan administration, and who respond with ever greater budgets, be believed when they don the role of fiscal integrity?

How can a party that has fought tax reductions for the working men and women time and again hope to be believed when they claim their tax policies are in the best interests of those same folks?

The American people will see the effort for what it is. The big lie. And I cannot imagine they will find it a comforting notion to get behind a party that wants to raise their taxes, disarm a military that stands between this country's freedom and a mentality that murders as casually as it did when it shot down a civilian airliner, and expand upon a myriad of social programs that have accomplished little at enormous cost.

In the recent months we have seen more real jobs created in the private sector by virtue of the economic recovery than have been created and could be created by every so-called jobs programs as yet devised. It is true, the jobs the recovery is responsible for are real jobs, jobs with a future, and jobs which can support a family. The jobs contemplated under the various schemes presented before this body in the last year would have been dead-end jobs that would contribute to a lack of self-respect by the people who possessed them. The fact that the recipient of the Government-created job could look to Congress for thanks would have meant little to these people because they would know that these jobs gave them no future and no hope for advancement.

The American people are smarter than some would believe. The sales pitches of the born-again budget balancers will be ignored by a people too busy enjoying the excitement of a recovery fueled by lower interest rates, great increases in purchasing power, and the lowest inflation in 17 years.

If they can figure out a way to convince working people whose average real hourly earnings fell between 1978 and 1981 by 8.5 percent and which rose in 1982 for the first time in 4 years that their lot would be improved by raising taxes and spending, then I say good luck. You will need it.

Unemployment rose from 6 percent to 8 percent during the Carter years—a 33⅓-percent increase from 6 million to 8 million people. Acknowledging the cycle of 21½-percent interest rates—13-percent inflation rates—the legacy of lower but accelerating deficits produced this result. At $25 to $32 billion in revenues for each 1 percent of unemployment, $100 billion, at least, of the deficit would never had occurred.

Mr. LATTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LATTA. I want to thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. DAUB) and commend him for the remarks he is making.

Before we go on to the next subject I would like to ask a question to clarify the matter of taxes. We hear the statement being made from the other side that that tax bill was for the rich. Did not every single taxpayer get the same rate reduction?

Mr. DAUB. The rate of marginal reduction was the same for every single working person in America.

Mr. LATTA. I wonder how they can make this claim when every taxpayer first got that 5 percent, even though the President had requested the 10 percent retroactive until January 1 and the Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee gave them 5 percent effective the 1st of October, which meant for that whole year they got 1¼ percent.

Everybody got that 1¼ percent, did they not?

Mr. DAUB. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LATTA. Whether the richest or the poorest taxpayer, every taxpayer got the same amount.

Mr. DAUB. That is correct.

Mr. LATTA. The second year the President requested a 10-percent tax reduction the first of the year. The Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee said you will have it in July, July 1, so that cut that 10 percent in half for the year and made it 5 percent.

Mr. DAUB. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LATTA. But everybody, rich, poor, alike, who are taxpayers got the same rate reduction; is that correct?

Mr. DAUB. Absolutely fair, and the gentleman is correct.

Mr. LATTA. Then for the third year they amended the President's tax proposal. he wanted an effective 10 percent the first of the year and the Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee made it effective the first of July of this year.

Mr. DAUB. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LATTA. So everybody gets that 5 percent evened out for the whole year, this year, rich and poor taxpayers alike; is that correct?

Mr. DAUB. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. LATTA. I just thought I ought to set the record straight.

I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PASHAYAN. I would say to the gentleman, as a member of the California delegation of this esteemed body that he is not saying that the interests of the State of California are put above the national interests in regard to the B-1 bomber?

Mr. DAUB. I thank the gentleman for his question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will suspend, please, the Chair is advised that Members should not refer to any specific Member of the other body nor the other body other than by the term "the other body."

The gentleman should revise his remarks.

Mr. DAUB. I want to thank the gentleman for his question. The record was doublechecked and it does appear that is true.

I thank the gentleman again for this special order and for the time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentlewoman from Nevada (Mrs. VUCANOVICH).

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise and speak tonight on the problem of Federal budget deficits. The Republican leadership of the House is to be commended for having the wisdom to set aside special time for discussion of this serious national issue. Further, I believe this to be a most appropriate and timely occasion for this discussion, as the Congress is now faced with some difficult budgetary choices with severe economic short-term as well as long-term ramifications.

I was not a Member of this distinguished body during the now famous debates on the Gramm-Latta budget resolutions of the 97th Congress. I do understand, however, that there existed a truly bipartisan concensus on the need for cutting the growth of Federal spending. It is also my understanding that this concensus was successful in making some real and necessary reductions in Federal outlays. These savings were accomplished despite some severe structural problems in the congressional budget process, and in entitlement programs with their built-in spending increases. Furthermore, these reductions were made despite the impassioned cries from protectors of special programs and special interests. This body acted out of concern for the larger economic health of the Nation—and in the process reversed a generation of tax and spend, high-deficit Congresses.

Critics of the legislative branch were temporarily stunned. Perhaps, they said, our elected Representatives have seen the light and are making long-overdue corrections. As we have all seen, record high interest and inflation rates returned to comprehensible levels, real economic growth increased, and progress was made in expanding employment roles.

This is why it is all the more disturbing to find that this consensus has eroded here in the 98th Congress. Is this body going to prove its critics correct by not carrying out the remainder of the battle? Has this body refocused its attention upon pet projects and appeasing special interests? I certainly hope it has not. The House committee-approved appropriations bills have repeatedly been millions and billions of dollars over President Reagan's budget requests. At a time when the economy is gaining strength, the Democratically controlled House is abandoning the President's recovery program. For my part, I have found few major spending bills that I have been able to wholeheartedly support. Despite the direct benefits these measures have to my district, I cannot in good conscience approve overbudget expenditures which are in a larger sense damaging to the Nation's economic health. My constituents understand that reasonable sacrifices will have to be made. They also understand that the Congress needs to exercise further discipline in controlling spending, and in cutting areas of waste, fraud, and abuse. These must be understood to be ongoing concerns, not one-time projects.

I would like to take this opportunity to urge a renewed spirit of responsibility and leadershp in my fellow colleagues on both sides of the aisle. As we continue to carry out our responsibilities in our committees, as well as in the use of our voting cards, I would like to emphasize an awareness of the larger fiscal consequences of these day-to-day activities. Perhaps more importantly, however, I would like to urge my colleagues to focus attention upon constructive approaches to addressing the deficit problem. True leadership by all is extremely important at this time as the Congress is in the midst of a difficult juncture. Individually or collectively, we can continue to improve upon recent successes, or we can take a step backwards for electoral or special interest considerations. I would hope that my colleagues are aware of the choices we are currently faced with. Please, let us respect the intelligence of our constituents, put partisanship and special concerns aside, and make some real progress on Federal deficits. The high road is available for traffic—let us choose as a body to take it.

□ 2040

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank the gentlewoman from Nevada (Mrs. VUCANOVICH) for her very fine remarks. She is certainly a most valued Member of the House of Representatives and is going to make a tremendous contribution in the process as we go forward in the next year and a half.

At this time I would like to yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCANDLESS).

Mr. MCCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, after reading the intent of the Democrats to place the blame for the budget deficit on Republicans, I was amazed. Absolutely amazed. For almost 3 years, the Democratic Party has been deriding the Republican Party for its budgetary austerity, claiming that to keep spending down is cruel and inhuman. Now the Democrats are blaming us for the deficit which is caused by Government spending.

In trying to understand the Democrats' rationale blaming the deficit on Republicans, I went back and examined my own voting record this year.

I found there have been votes on 13 appropriations bills, including a supplemental and the continuing resolution, plus the 1984 budget resolution. Of these 14, I could not agree with 13. The one exception was the energy and water appropriation bill which provided for a general 3 percent reduction in most of the bill's programs.

I voted against the others for the same reason: excessive spending levels.

All were drafted in the Democratic Party mode of thinking: spend, spend, spend, tax, tax, tax.

I also want to point out that all House committees are controlled by Democrats. The most Republican House Members, such as myself, could hope for was compromise legislation. That is hardly any consolation.

After concluding that the decision to blame Republicans for the deficit could not be based on our spending patterns, I set out to examine the revenue side of the issue.

The Republican Party stood united against the repeal of the third year of the tax cut and, in general we do not want to repeal tax indexing.

But, the notion that raising taxes to reduce the defict will also encourage savings to finance capital formation is ridiculous and wrong. History bears out the fact that tax increases inhibit private savings and crowd out capital formation.

For example, the income tax surcharge enacted in 1968 caused savings as a percentage of the GNP to fall during the surcharge years by twice the amount of revenue raised.

Also, most all taxes raise the cost for providing labor or capital services by increasing the cost of production.

How this can possibly promote and maintain economic recovery is unknown to me.

The essence of recovery is to increase production and, hence, output and income.

Raising the cost of production by increasing taxes only burdens an already strained economy, rather than helping it.

In the end, higher taxes will lead to larger deficits by shutting off the economy's means of growth.

In conclusion, after thinking about this, I was no closer to understanding how the Republicans caused the deficit than I was when I began.

Be assured, that if I ever come up with an answer, I will be back on the floor of the House the very next morning to explain this mystery to my colleagues.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAEFER).

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Speaker, I read with surprise and concern the Newsweek article about the impending Democractic campagin to take the Federal budget deficit problem, one of our most pressing national dilemmas, and damage the chances for bipartisan efforts to solve the problem by politicizing the issue.

Why the surprise? Because the Democrats have as much to do with our current deficits as anyone. Newsweek's dubbing them born-again deficit-fighting Democrats is appropriate, because their past activities have certainly helped create the problem and I have seen no indication that they have magical solutions of their own.

That is why I am concerned. The tax-and-spend policies that the Democrats gave us for the best part of the last 50 years brought economic growth to a grinding halt during the Carter administration. Couple that with estimates that their fiscal policy would have left deficits today of around $200 billion, and I think it is obvious that we took the right course: The economy grew at an annual rate of 9.2 percent during the second quarter—the fastest quarterly growth in 5 years.

Inflation during the Democrat administration hit 13.3 percent and was running out of control, severely damaging the economy and threatening our society. The Reagan administration put on the brakes and reduced inflation to its current level below 5 percent. Admittedly, the Carter administration left us with an unemployment rate of 7.4 percent, which has risen to 9.5 percent, but their misery index, inflation plus unemployment, of 19.1 percent has dropped about 5 percentage points since the new administration took office. Apparently, if we followed the advice of our Democrat colleagues, we would be worse off today.

The Reagan administration has set upon a fiscal policy that reduces the Federal Government's role in free markets and has given, through tax reductions, new incentive to productivity in our economy. I think huge tax increases, suggested by many of my Democrat colleagues, would come at a significant cost to our economic recovery. This would be a foolish mistake when, by reducing Federal spending, we can fight the deficit problem, provide additional incentives to free enterprise, and build upon the economic progress we have made.

Today I would like to ask those who Newsweek calls born again deficit fighters to prove their faith not with polarizing rhetoric but with responsible legislative actions and a show of fiscal restraint.

□ 2050

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. NIELSON).

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the discussion by the Democrats regarding their shock and disgust at the large deficits was surely done tongue in cheek. It seems that the Democrats are rapidly running out of issues on which to criticize the President and are now attempting to create a new hysteria over the deficit situation. We were deluged with rhetoric on the deficit levels and how these deficits can all be traced to President Reagan's unwillingness to support major tax increases.

There may exist some sort of humorous irony in noting that the Members who are currently wringing their hands over the deficit are the same politicians who, time after time, continue to vote for billions of dollars of funding increases for spending programs. However, there is little humor in the fact that, although they are in the best position to initiate a bipartisan effort to reduce the deficit, the Democrats instead find it easier simply to continue with their tradition of spending increases. While they point and scream at the so-called Reagan deficits, the only alternative they offer is a return to the spending programs and the failed economic policies of the past 25 years.

I think it is obvious to everyone that a hypocritical attempt to blame the President for the deficits is a thinly disguised cover to draw attention away from the benefits that the economic recovery is now bringing to every segment of society. Lower inflation rates, lower tax rates, lower interest rates, and renewed confidence within the private sector are the undeniable results of President Reagan's economic recovery plan. These are the factors that are leading to real growth, prosperity, and a better standard of living for all Americans.

The hundreds of Government-spending programs, each with its special-interest groups and interested constituency, are great for getting votes and for sustaining the egos of politicians. Admittedly, it is difficult to resist the emotional pleas of those interest groups and it is not enjoyable being labeled as uncompassionate. But, I would suggest that if we are truly concerned about long-lasting benefits for all our constituencies, we will not increase Government spending, we will not politicize serious issues, and we will work together to bring down the existing budget deficits.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. PASHAYAN).

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, since the Federal budget has not been balanced in the last 15 years and the public debt stands at $1.3 trillion, it is something of an understatement to say that it is time to take a serious look at the problem. I am pleased that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle seem to share the opinion that deficit spending is not all that it is cracked up to be, something that many of us here have been concerned about ever since balanced budgets went out of vogue. I trust that this new interest in deficits will allow us to work in a spirit that is necessary if we are to take any constructive action to contain them—a spirit founded in the Republican approach to government.

Deficit spending is the result of Federal spending that is out of control. Federal spending continues to grow as a share of the gross national product. Two-thirds of the budget are spent on open-ended social entitlement programs and interest payments on the national debt. It is the Democrats who have preferred to curtail entitlements. Contrary to what some of my colleagues would have us believe, this condition was not created by this administration but by the majority political party in the Congresses of the past who believed mistakenly that our working taxpayers could always carry the burden of increasing taxes and Federal spending. Unfortunately, growth in Government spending has exceeded growth in the economy. Today, we are faced with a $200 billion deficit for this fiscal year and the prospect of an accumulated deficit of $1.3 trillion over the next 5 years, if no action is taken.

But raising taxes in order to reduce the deficit and balance the budget is not the answer. Despite the fact that tax revenues have increased 193 times over the last 52 years and that Congress has raised the tax burden 30 times in real terms, the budget has been balanced only 8 times. I am aware that, politically, voting to reduce spending is painful to say the least. But unless we are willing to confront the tough choices such as entitlement reform and make a commitment to balanced budgets, talking about the problem is not going to solve it.

One solution is to approve a budget that cuts spending equally across the board so that no program or programs are singled out for cuts while others are increased. If this approach is the fairest way to deal with spending reductions on a comprehensive basis and offers the best possibility of regaining control over the budget for the short- and long-term, then let us do it.

Across-the-board spending cuts, however, shall require across-the-board bipartisan support.

But from what I have heard from the Democratic Members tonight, their one-half of the equation will be missing—again, as always.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, as we wrap up this first hour of discussion on the economy and the deficit, I want to advise our colleagues we will have at least another hour, and even another one after that, if necessary. But for the Democrats to talk about the deficit, to complain that the deficit is being created by any other individual or group is unbelievable hypocrisy and fraud. I think we should give them the Golden Goose Award. And I might suggest that we select some of our Democratic colleagues who have been speaking on the deficit as recipients of this Golden Goose Award.

As a matter of fact, since the beginning of the year, the Democratic majority here in the House has voted consistently to increase deficit spending. In 21 major deficit spending votes this year, a vast majority of the Democrats have voted to increase deficit spending by a total of $49.5 billion.

But let us be positive. I have been around here 15 years, beginning as a staff member, and 11 of those 15 years as a Member of Congress, and I have watched the Democrats year, after year, after year add to the deficit with Federal spending, and more spending, and more spending. And if it got a little bit too high, raise taxes, and raise more taxes. That is always the answer.

Now, some people are saying: "Well, if you cannot control the spending, let us just go out and borrow it." That is not the answer either. Let us not deal with the deficit by raising taxes, the way it is always tried to be done, and not very successfully, or borrowing money either. Let us cut Federal spending. That is the answer. That is where the problem is.

THE DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. LOEFFLER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to continue the debate with respect to the transparent facade that is now being placed before us by the Democratic Party in this Chamber.

It is indeed ironic that those who are now saying the deficit is a problem are the very ones who put it into place. And I guess one could say a positive note, that the liberal Members of this body have finally recognized that a deficit is a problem and that deficit spending does cause the inertia that brings down an economy. So I applaud them. But then I would like to say: "Please learn the solution to the deficit." And the solution is not greater spending and greater taxes. It is restraint of Government here in Washington.

I must recall, just for a moment, what happened during the budget process earlier this year, for fiscal year 1984, and that is that in the Budget Committee, on which I serve, the Democratic majority came up then with what I suspect is a blueprint for their address to reducing the deficit. Over 5 years, as compared to what the President asked for Congress to consider, the Democratic majority in the Budget Committee said: "We will increase domestic spending over and above what the President asked for by $181 billion. We will increase taxes over that 5-year period by $235 billion," and in the end they will drive up the deficit even higher because by doing that we choke down the ability of an economy to provide the assets and characteristics that are necessary to bring about real and lasting jobs, an economy that can allow productivity to increase, an economy that is not confiscated by the choking of high tax policies.

Indeed, this evening then it is those of us who are responsible and who are concerned who say: "Look out, America. Here comes the transparent facade of rhetoric."

Now, if you want to hone it down a little bit more, America, look at the budget resolution that was passed by this body ultimately that gives you an indication of what the majority reflects here, and that is, for a 3-year period of fiscal year 1984, fiscal year 1985, and fiscal year 1986, the liberal element of this body has called for an increase in domestic spending of $77 billion and an increase in taxes of $73 billion. This all points out the fact that while they are now talking about the deficit, they do not know how to deal with it, because they are going to continue to increase Federal spending the they are going to continue to increase taxes if they have their way.

This evening, I stand before each and everyone in this body to say, over my dead body will they have their way.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOEFFLER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. McCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it is incredible and outrageous that the leading Democrats have the unmitigated gall to try to blame President Reagan and the Republicans for our staggering deficits. For all but a couple of the last 40 years, the Democrats have controlled this Congress and dictated a national agenda of bigger government.

Their runaway tax and spend policies put in motion a runaway train, accumulating a trillion dollar public debt by 1981, and this runaway train's momentum is so great that we are headed for the second trillion dollars by 1986, in just 5 years, with the deficits the way they are.

All of this is happening despite the best efforts of President Reagan and the Republican minority in the U.S. House. It is happening because Democrats fail to understand the cause of record deficits and fail to understand the reason why deficits are a problem and why they are bad. We are told that taxes are too low and need to be raised. I think our taxpaying constituents disagree. We are told that defense spending is too high. I think that those who serve our country's defense, using equipment older than they are, would disagree.

Deficits thrive because social spending is uncontrolled and taxes cannot keep pace. We can raise revenues all we want, but we will not lower the deficit 1 cent unless we control social spending.

From 1976 to 1981, revenues increased by $300 billion, or 100 percent, but the Federal debt actually grew $361 billion. It is easy to see how this can happen when we recall the vote in the 1984 concurrent budget resolution just this year. Democrats overwhelmingly supported this bill which raised taxes by $10 billion, cut defense by $12 billion, but increased the deficit by $13 billion.

How could this happen? It is simple. We added another $29 billion to social spending. You cannot have a solution if you are blind to the problem, and until my colleagues from the other side of the aisle open their eyes, all Americans, especially low- and middle-income Americans, will suffer the consequences.

The real interesting problem in all of this is the fact that they do not seem to see why deficits are bad. Deficits are bad or evil in our country today because they are one of three ways that the Federal Government has been taking money out of the American pocket and absorbing it out of our economy so there is not enough credit and not enough money to go around for you and I and businesses in this country to borrow and spend. The absorption, according to Business Week a few months ago, is as great as 70 percent of the entire pie of all money that is available in this country. Now, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank says that may be a little high, but he says it is somewhere a little over 50 percent. It does not make any difference whether it is 50 percent or 70 percent. We were only taking out an average of about 6 percent a year of all the available money and credit in this country, the Federal Government was just taking about 6 percent a year, in the 1960's and now we are taking out somewhere between 50 and 70 percent.

The real crux of this problem is that when we take that amount of money out of the economy, and the laws of supply and demand come into play, and money is a commodity, the price of money is going to go up, and the price of money is interest rates. If they do not go up and if we do not have a tight money supply like the Fed let happen over year after year after year in previous recessions when these tax and spend policies were running rampant, we have inflation because we create more money. More money means inflation.

So we either have high inflation or high interest rates, or we have both, which we had when President Reagan took office in 1981.

The gist of this is very simple: Economists can talk all they want about the complexities of it, but the simple fact is, the problem we face today is the fact that there are three ways: One of the three ways, we are taking all of this money out of the economy. We are borrowing to cover the deficit, yes, but we are equally borrowing almost an exact amount for off-budget items that are not even counted on the budget, and the Democrats on this side of the aisle are quick to add to those as well.

Then there is a third way, besides borrowing to cover the deficits and besides borrowing to cover off-budget items, that we take money out of the economy. The third way is, very simply, by raising taxes.

So we get down to robbing Peter to pay Paul. We raise taxes. That is what the Democrats say they want to do to balance the budget. But when we have a $200 billion deficit, are we going to raise taxes by $200 billion? Are we going to cut spending on the defense side of the ledger by anything close to that? The answer is, of course not.

I do not think most Americans realize on the defense side of the ledger that in this fiscal year that we are now ending tomorrow, in this fiscal year, in real dollars, we will have spent less on defense than we spent in 1969, the last year we had a balanced budget. Over the last 20 years we have doubled social spending in this country as a portion of the budget and we have cut in half defense spending.

So we cannot take it out of defense, and we cannot realistically get it by raising taxes, by robbing Peter to pay Paul.

Then there are those economists who want to say, well, it is better to raise taxes than it is to have these deficits going on and borrow. Maybe that is true for $10 billion. Maybe it is true for $20 billion. But as Everett Dirksen used to say, when you raise a dollar here and a dollar there, a million here and a million there, a billion here, pretty soon you have real money.

I will tell you, folks, when we get to the point we have these trillion dollar debts, $200 billion deficits, we cannot begin to do that. We have to cut spending, and that is what the Democrats do not want to face. That is what they have not been willing to do. It is their tax and spend, tax and spend programs that is going on and on, and this program they are launching off tomorrow is just more of exactly the same. Tax and spend, tax and spend, cloaked in another name, in the name of somehow solving the deficit problem, when the real problem is not just deficits; it is what they cause. There is no solution going to come about until we face the real problem, and that is overspending by this great big Government of ours. That side of the aisle over there has not been willing to face up to it. I do not think the American public is going to be fooled by their campaign now. We need to get some commonsense back into this body and do what is right to balance the budget.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOEFFLER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my illustrious colleague for allowing me some time to discuss this. We have heard some very eloquent remarks from my predecessors up here at the microphone, and I will not take much time, but I would like to just make a few points.

I hope this House is not polarized by this debate. It seems to have been hot and heavy tonight. I know that the Democrat opposition left the Chamber, some of them, in quite a heated state, and I hope that that does not mean that we are going to have real problems in reaching agreement on some very important issues in the future.

Since 1938, the year I was born, and I do not admit that very often, this House has been controlled by the opposition party for all but 4 of those years, and yet they point the finger at the Republican President in the White House and tell us that he is responsible for the huge deficits and the economic problems we are facing today. That could not be further from the truth. The majority party in this House has added between $40 billion and $50 billion to what the administration has requested this year, $40 billion to $50 billion, and yet they have the unmitigated gall to tell this House and the people of this country who are watching tonight that the President of the United States is responsible for the deficits and for the economic problems we are facing.

The President was so concerned about the problems facing this country and because of the overspending policies of this House that he asked Members of this House to sign a letter guaranteeing that he would have the votes necessary to sustain a veto should he veto these budget-busting bills, and I was one of 146 members of the Republican Party who, along with a few responsible Democrats, signed that letter to make sure we would have fiscal responsibility.

I will tell the Members that one of the best organizations in this country to listen to when we talk about big spenders is the National Taxpayers Union. They have done an analysis of the Members who are voting in this body on all the spending bills that have come before us this year, and the 25 percent, the biggest spenders of this House, the 25 percent which are the highest spenders, the biggest spenders in this body, are all members of the Democratic majority. They are all members of the Democratic Party.

So when they tell us they are being fiscally responsible, look at the record. Look at the National Taxpayers Union's records which are available for public consumption, and you will see without any doubt that they are the ones who are taking us down the economic drain.

Why do we have huge deficits in this country? Obviously we have huge deficits in this country because we are seeing big spending policies on the part of the majority in this House.

But in addition to that, we must look to the previous administration to see what happened when it was in power. When Jimmy Carter was President of the United States, we saw inflation go to 13-plus percent. Interest rates went to 21½ percent. When interest rates went to 21½ percent, people quit buying cars, people quit buying houses, and people quit buying refrigerators and big ticket items. And when they quit buying those big ticket items, the people who made those big ticket items—cars, houses, refrigerators, appliances, whatever they happened to be—started laying people off because they could not sell their products, they certainly were not going to make them. And the unemployment rate went up because of the economic policies of the Carter administration, and as a result we saw unemployment go to 11-plus percent.

The normal unemployment rate in this country has been 4 to 6 percent. So we are at least 5 percent above what the normal unemployment rates were, and for each 1 percent of unemployment it costs this country $30 billion. So I submit that at least $150 billion of the economic problem in this deficit we face today is directly attributable to the previous administration, and we must do everything in our power to make sure that this does not occur in the future.

I hope the Democratic Party in the House will join with the Republican Party to make sure that this does not recur, because if we do not get together and cut spending, then the problems we faced in the past will be a cakewalk compared to the problems we will face in the future. I predict that we will see interst rates above 21½ percent, inflation rates above 13 to 14 percent, and unemployment above 11 to 12 percent if we do not get spending under control. All of the economic leaders of this country agree with that.

The No. 1 problem facing America is the huge Federal deficit, and the problem will not be solved until the members of the Democratic Party in this House start accepting their responsibilities.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOEFFLER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the first hour of this debate with some care. I must say frankly that I have seldom heard someone speak the opposite of the truth with such precision.

The Democratic leadership, which has led the fight on this very floor for higher and higher spending, appeared as born-again advocates of reducing the deficits.

Let us not make any mistake about it. I think the vast majority of Republicans and Democrats in this country want a balanced budget. But let us not be deceived. The Democratic leadership has fought for enormous increases in spending and higher deficits.

As the Members know, we have a budget process that limits spending. We are required to vote to waive that budget whenever we exceed it. Those votes are nothing more than a response to the question, "Will you waive the requirements of the Budget Act? Are you willing to spend money on a project that has not been authorized? Are you willing to spend more than the budget calls for?

With the enormous increase cranked into that budget, who would be willing to exceed the budget? The truth is that this body has done that consistently. As I watched the first hour of debate, I checked the record of recent months. Here is what the record shows: There have been eight times in recent months when this body has voted to waive the Budget Act. Six of those votes were record votes.

The Members who spoke earlier tonight have a record on those votes. Each and every one of them has voted on those issues or has had an opportunity to vote on those issues.

On four of those six votes, there was a difference in how the parties voted. In each one of those four instances, the Democratic Party voted by a large majority to waive the Budget Act and the Republican Party members voted by a large majority to stay within the Budget Act. The record is clear. It could not be clearer.

The gentleman who led the presentation tonight, on our six recent votes on whether or not to waive the Budget Act voted five out of six times to waive the budget. And on the sixth time he did not vote.

Do you really believe that that gentleman wants to stay within the budget, that he wants to reduce the deficit? The American people know better.

The first election I voted in was in 1962. I suppose each of us remembers the time when we first had an opportunity to cast a ballot. In 1962, the budget of this country was just over $100 billion.

I have heard so many times in recent years on this very floor that the American people are undertaxed. But in the 21 years since 1962 the taxes on working men and women of America have gone up almost sixfold. That is right, we now pay almost six times the taxes we paid in 1962.

Is there anyone who honestly believes that the American working men and women are undertaxed? The truth is we are overtaxed. The reason we have an enormous deficit is not because we have been unwilling to tax the American people. We have taxed working men and women far more than we should.

Part of our economic problems come from the disincentives for working Americans involved in taxes. The truth is that we have a deficit not because we fail to tax but because we fail to control spending.

Spending now is near eight times as high as it was in 1962. That is only 21 years. The stark truth is that this Congress has been unwilling to say no.

□ 2120

Mr. Speaker, I would hope all of us would join together. We can face this issue and solve it. We can solve it as Democrats and Republicans working together.

The American people are going to demand an accounting. I hope they will choose to change the course this country is on. This Nation needs a new beginning and it cannot be a beginning that starts in deceits or half truths. It must be a new beginning that starts with the truth.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I also would like to thank my colleagues for their understanding and forebearance.

I have to say that Monday morning when I received my Newsweek magazine, I was a little nonplussed when I flipped to the Periscope section of that publication and saw that the Democrats were going to resort to this kind of television coverage as an effort to focus light on the problems of the budget. I have to say, it was difficult for me to contain myself, because I recall very well that having read the Constitution and, in fact, having stood in the well of this House and sworn to uphold this Constitution, I found no place in that, no place in that Constitution at all, an explanation as to where the executive branch played a role in either taxing or spending. In fact, in reading the Constitution, I found that article II, section 7, clearly states that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

Then, of course, it goes on directly to section 8 and section 8 very clearly states that the Congress, not the President of the United States, the Congress shall have the power to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises and, of course, it goes on to point out under section 8 that the Congress shall have the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States. Well, is that not exactly what has happened?

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOEFFLER. I would be more than happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I should just like to reflect a point to underscore the most sound position that the gentleman in the well is establishing, my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), that sections 7 and 8 to which the gentleman refers are part of article I of the Constitution, which describes the legislative branch, the Congress of the United States; is that not correct?

Mr. DREIER of California. Absolutely correct.

Mr. PASHAYAN. And, of course, later in the Constitution, under article II where those two sections do not appear, nor are there any references made to those two sections, that is where in the Constitution under article II the descriptions there of the duties of the President, as the gentleman says, having nothing to do with sections 7 and 8 of article I, which has to do and only to do with the Congress.

Mr. DREIER of California. And as the gentleman knows, there is absolutely no reference whatsoever in that section referring to the executive branch, the President or Vice President, to either spending or taxing.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Absolutely.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution.

I have to say, and I do not often point this out, but for virtually my entire lifetime this body has been controlled by one particular philosophical segment of the Democratic Party which believes, and I think they are very sincere, that for the most part the solution to the ailments of Society are cured by throwing more and more money at those problems.

Now, that is why I said when I picked up the Newsweek magazine and read those who are born again in their efforts to balance the budget, it really was to say, the very least, quite amusing.

Would the gentleman from Texas (Mr. LOEFFLER) again yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. PASHAYAN)?

Mr. LOEFFLER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Just further to underscore the constitutional theme of the comments of the gentleman in the well, would the gentleman agree with me when I say that as well the Constitution is absent any reference to that particular philosophic branch of the particular party the gentleman had reference to?

Mr. DREIER of California. Absolutely. In fact, I believe that that philosophy is anathema to the Consititution itself.

Mr. PASHAYAN. At least, it is an anathema to the history of the Constitution.

Mr. DREIER of California. Well, that is very true. I appreciate the gentleman again making this fine contribution.

I do believe that having been a Member of this body for 2½ years and having had this body controlled by that particular philosophic section which believes in more taxes and more spending, that we have to fight to make a change in the leadship of this body. We are very fortunate that the veto power does, however, lie over at the executive branch.

I think we have a chance to turn things around, but it is going to be a struggle and a real real difficulty.

As my friend, the gentleman from Colorado pointed out, it has to be done due to the leadership in the House in a bipartisan way.

I thank the gentleman from Texas for taking out this special order. I believe that his contribution here has been most helpful. I hope that we are able in our efforts over the next several hours to point out the kinds of advantages to bringing about a balanced budget in the way that we want to do by reducing the kinds of waste, fraud and abuse, which exist in the Federal Government.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished Member from California for his very direct and candid remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. GREGG).

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Texas yielding to me.

As we gather here tonight to hear these speeches, which remind us of the person who went into the courtroom and was accused of shooting his mother and father and declared that because he was an orphan, he should receive some sort of good grace.

It appears to me that reference to the facts should be considered. If we look at the spending side of what has occurred over the last 2 or 2½ years as versus the tax side, because there has been a lot of representation that taxes and the cut in taxes is the reason we have had this great deficit thrown upon us, we will note that taxes have stayed as a percentage of the gross national product at approximately 19.5 percent, while spending has increased from about 22.5 to 24.5 percent.

Further, that spending increase has not been driven primarily by defense, as has also been argued here by some of our more liberal colleagues. Defense spending during that 2½-year period has gone up by about $78 billion, while social spending has gone up by $111.5 billion, or 1½-times faster than defense spending. What has basically driven that social spending? It has been primarily the attitude of the House of Representatives and the leadership of the House of Representatives and the majority of the Members of the House of Representatives, that in order to get reelected they have to spend money on constituencies and those constituencies then become dependent upon those dollars and in order to get reelected, they must continue to spend the dollars, so that those constituencies will continue to vote for them.

This has been a pyramiding effect within the Congress and within the Nation as a whole. We have seen year after year, program after program added to the Federal budget, the purpose of which is to create a constituency which becomes dependent upon those Federal dollars and which as a result of becoming dependent upon those Federal dollars will elect individuals to the House of Representatives.

It becomes almost obscene for the people who have paraded this phenomenon of geometric growth in social spending to then come to the Congress and to the people of the United States and claim that they are against deficits and that it is the Republican Party which is the creator of deficits.

We have heard tonight a whole series of facts which have shown that the voting patterns of this House over the last 2 years, and especially over the last 6 months, have been those where Republican Members have voted for fiscal restraint and liberal Democratic Members have voted for spending. In fact, if you look at just some of the most recent votes, you will see a dramatic increase that has resulted from this sort of attitude.

Specifically, I would point to the rehabilitation amendments bill which we just passed. This was a bill which was your classic add-the-kitchen-sink-on bill for every little group that you can think of type of language. It had a basic underlining bill which was essential, the Rehabilitation Amendment Act; but on top of that bill there was added $11.1 billion of additional spending, which spending was created without any reference to rehabilitation, but primarily as add-ons to programs which were already fully funded. This bill, which passed this House, did not pass as a result of Republican support, but rather of heavy Democratic support.

It was a bill passed for the purposes of political posturing, and for the purposes of developing constituencies which generated votes.

It is just plain fallacious, and it is political puff to claim, for the Democrats to claim especially, the liberal Democrats, to claim that they are concerned about the deficit. This is political hyperbole of pure hypocracy. It creates an atmosphere which I do not believe the American people have any belief in, and certainly the people of this House should not have any belief in.

In fact, if there are 10 people in the House of Representatives today who actually believe this presentation that the Democrats have suddenly become concerned about the deficit and that this deficit is driven primarily by the policies of the conservatives or the Republicans in this House, I strongly suspect this well will disappear out of sight and the walls will fall upon us. Because this is just an action of medicine men. And I do not believe that this medicine is going to sell in Arkansas, it is not going to sell in Texas. The simple fact is that this is a transparent attempt to shift the blame for actions which people have created to those people who have tried to act responsibly. And it seems to me that as we move down this road, where the leadership of the other side is promoting itself as those people who are concerned about the deficits, that those of us on this side have an obligation to the American people to point out, as each one of these Members comes to this well and talks about how they are trying to reduce the deficit, we have an obligation to point out to the American people the specific votes which those individuals have cast over the last 2 or 3 months which have added approximately $45 billion to the Federal deficits and have not been in line with the budget as proposed by the President of the United States.

Thank you very much.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH).

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, we have been having a lot of partisan fun tonight. The Democrats thought they had found a cute gimmick in talking about deficits, which was a new idea for them, and something of great excitement. The press has been asking them to become a party of new ideas and they thought talking about deficits would prove they found a new idea. The Republicans have been having a lot of fun talking about the fact that all the Democrats that have stood up created the deficit they have talked about.

I would like to talk seriously as a former history teacher of some of the mood I got watching earlier.

It is little wonder that the American people have a sense of despising politics and politicians, of contempt for the process as it has degenerated.

The deputy whip for the majority party, a man who in 18 out of 21 major votes voted to increase spending by a total of $48 billion, has the gall to come over and talk about deficits.

Now, the truth is he was talking about raising taxes. He would love to raise taxes. And he has found a new battle cry, much like a man who has found he can no longer seduce girls with candy is now shifting to liquor, and it is an entire new world. So, just as he can no longer seduce the American people by promising services, he has found the latest thing to threaten the small farmer and the small businessman—"Oh, my gosh," he yells, "the Republicans are creating deficits," and he creates fancy charts. He shows us the truth, which is that there is an enormous, unspeakable, incredible, banana-republic-style deficit which would be unthinkable in a Ronald Reagan campaign speech before 1981. And then he acts rather like the bartender who upon discovering his victim the following morning says, "I do not understand how you got that hangover, why do you look so bad, why do you not come around tonight and I will give you some gin and you will feel better immediately."

And that is the great problem for the American Nation. The majority party in this country, a party which has been in power in this House for some 31 years, consistently and deliberately distorts, demagogues and deceives the country that it has governed. It talks about tax loopholes when it has controlled the Ways and Means Committee. It talks about Reagan spending when every single penny spent by this Congress has to pass the House of Representatives and TIP O'NEILL has to approve it first. Not a dime can be spent—and I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for reminding me that in the Constitution it is in fact this House which comes first. The people who have presided over the decay of this country, the people who have presided over the collapse of the steel industry and the auto industry, the people who have presided over the creation of all of the social programs which are creating the deficit they now complain about, those people want to rob your pocketbook; they are against you having take-home pay, they would like to take all of it and then send you a Government check so you could have whatever they think you should have for whatever they want you to spend. And they have not got the guts to tell you that. Not a single one of them has the guts to come on this floor and say, "I want to raise taxes on working Americans, I love taking more money away from them, please give me more power in Washington."

Not a one of them can tell you the truth because if they told you the truth, if they went back to Arkansas or Oklahoma, to pick two examples, they would be defeated decisively, if they honestly stood on a platform and said, "You are not smart enough in Oklahoma to spend your own take-home pay, give me the money, I will take it to TIP O'NEILL and he and I will spend that for you."

So, they have resorted to a technique which has led to the decay of belief in politics in this country. It is little wonder people do not register to vote when they assume people are scoundrels, that they will deceive you, that in fact all politicians lie. And it is sad tonight that the majority party once again came out and proved the people are all too often correct.

Thank you.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH).

Mr. KASICH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think we need to take a look back at where we were in January 1981 and kind of trace things as we went along in this body and as the American people watched the chain of events occur.

When this President entered office in January 1981, as I think many of us have heard before, the interest rates were 21.5 percent, the inflation rate was at 13.5 percent, unemployment was at 7.5 percent, and this President campaigned saying that we needed to have a change, that we needed to reduce the growth in Federal spending in order to get a handle on the kind of problems that stem from spending more than what you take in.

This President went forward and talked about the need for regulatory reform and he has moved forward in this area. But when he was campaigning he said we could not tolerate a 21.5-percent rate of interest and a 13.5-percent rate of inflation. So, he went forward with a program, and he brought many Members to Congress with him at the time, and their program was very simple: First, we were going to have a program that was going to reduce the growth in Federal spending, and second, we were going to reduce the tax rates for all Americans. And everyone who is watching tonight understands if you look back over the period of the last 10 years what has happened to your tax brackets, what has happened to your pocketbook. It seems as though the harder you work the farther you fall behind. The more you try to save, the more your dollar was taken away by the process of inflation. And this President said he had enough.

And what happened in January 1981 is we had a revolution in America. We had conservative Democrats and Republicans working together to reduce the tax rates for Americans, so that again just like my parents used to teach me, the harder you work, the farther you can get ahead. If you are willing to save, you are going to be rewarded. But up until January 1981 it did not seem to work that way.

But then these conservative Democrats and Republicans came together and they reduced the taxes, 25 percent over a 3-year period, and at the same time cut the growth in Federal spending.

Now, let us talk about 21.5-percent rate of interest.

Would anybody, any of my colleagues, like to borrow some money from me and I am going to loan it to you at 21.5-percent rate of interest? Well, of course no one here is going to do it. And what happens when you have a 21.5-percent rate of interest? No one is going to borrow money to do anything; to buy a car, to build a home, no one is going to borrow money to buy their appliances. So, essentially what happened in January 1981 is that the economy of America was beginning to be shut down.

And so, we went forward with a program, again to reduce the taxes and to reduce the growth in spending. And at this point in time it is starting to pay off. As you know, instead of having a 21.5-percent rate of interest, we are now down to about 11 to 11.5, certainly not acceptable, and if we will make additional progress on the spending side those interest rates will come down, and if we follow a stable monetary policy those interest rates will also be reinforced in terms of coming down.

But essentially what happened was from 1982, from the election in November 1982, the American people to some degree lost patience

□ 2140

They did not understand the fact that with a 21.5-percent rate of interest there was going to be economic slowdown, people were not going to buy those products, and because no one was going to buy products we were going to have millions of Americans ultimately thrown out of work.

This President recognized this in January 1981.

What happened was we were making progress and we started to see it happen but the American people lost some patience. January 1, 1983, we lost that vital coalition of conservative Democrats and Republicans who were willing to continue on a program of reducing spending, and I mean reducing spending so that those who really are in need could still continue to receive the benefits and the benefit from the programs that the Federal Government provides.

We lost that coalition and so what happened? When I came here in Congress I watched the construction of this budget. I hear liberal Democrats talk about these giant deficits but let us look at the facts. That is what I want you to do. I want you to look at the facts.

Under the Democrat budget, budget authority was $936.6 billion. The President's budget was $900.1 billion. Let me repeat it again. The liberal budget in the House was $936.6 billion. The Reagan budget was $900.1 billion. That is over $36 billion more in higher spending.

The Democrat liberal budget not only had higher spending but it had higher taxes and it had higher deficits. That is why I find it so inconceivable as to how anyone on the liberal side of the aisle can make an argument that somehow this Democrat Party, this liberal Democrat Party is interested in lowering deficits.

They called for higher spending, higher taxes, and higher deficits.

But let me tell you one interesting story when I was here. There was a debate going on on raising the debt ceiling which I think many of my colleagues will remember. At that point in time our whip of the Republican Party offered an amendment so that the 1983 budget would be cut by $7 billion.

Let us trace the history here of spending in this country. As was pointed out earlier, 1962 was the first year the Federal budget reached $100 billion. Eight years later it was $200 billion. Four years after that it was $300 billion. We are starting to approach $900 billion now.

When the minority whip offered an amendment to cut $7 billion out of the 1983 budget, the chairman of the Budget Committee got on the floor and said, "How can we ever find the money to cut $7 billion," and that was rejected.

We raised the debt ceiling to about $1.4 trillion and those are the same people who are going to get up and talk about these massive deficits.

Now, remember, when we had a 21.5-percent rate of interest we saw this economic slowdown and, as was pointed out earlier, every 1 percent increase in unemployment contributes to about $30 billion in a higher Federal deficit.

We were at 7.5 percent unemployment in January 1981 but we knew it was going to be higher because of the 21.5-percent rate of interest. We went up to almost 11 percent unemployment, a staggering level, as almost a full result of the 21.5-percent rates of interest.

Now we are on our way down and because we are on our way down we are going to see improvements on those budget deficits.

But what is really needed at this point in time, in addition to a stable monetary policy that will guarantee in the long run that the dollar will be good as gold is a Congress that is willing to operate like a family, willing to operate within a budget.

Everyone knows you cannot continue to spend more than what you take in, and as you continue those policies you get yourself in trouble.

Now let me tell you about the appropriations bills that came through this Congress so far, passed, I might remind you, by the liberal Democrats who are complaining about budget deficits.

The Commerce and Justice budget is $946.3 million over the President's request. The HUD budget is $9.5 billion over the President's requests. The Interior budget is $1.4 billion over the President's request. The Labor-HHS and Education budget is $2.5 billion over the President's budget. The military construction is $1.6 billion over the President's budget. And the transportation budget is $389.4 million over the President's budget.

How can this liberal party talk about budget deficits when they propose budgets that have higher spending, higher deficits, higher taxes, and bring appropriation bills through this House that are at this point in time somewhere in the area of $13 billion over the President's request?

Then they have the gall to talk about budget deficits.

But let me remind you of one other thing, and that is, my colleagues, that while the Democrat budget proposal has higher Federal deficits, they were still not calculated properly because, as you tax more and as you deprive Americans of the ability to spend money to get this country moving again, they took money again out of the pockets of hard-working Americans—that is right—hard-working Americans who over the period of the last 10 years has seemingly fallen farther and farther behind until this President and this coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats who saw fit to try to restore initiative in this country, until these folks came forward with tax increases that would, believe me, have blunted the growth in the American economy so not only would their deficit have been higher as they projected it themselves but it would have been additionally higher because the raising of taxes would have shut down the economic recovery.

I ask you to do one thing, to understand that this liberal party spends more, taxes more, and you understand the implications of that.

When your Congressman comes home you ask him or her about the record. You ask him or her about their vote on the HUD bill that was $9.5 billion over the President's request. You ask them about the Labor bill that was $2.5 billion over the President's request. You ask them how they voted on that budget resolution that provided for more taxes on you, higher spending, and higher deficits, and then you will get the true story.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. MARTIN).

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, every number that is quoted is accurate. But somehow if you are an average person the numbers begin to wash in that flood of red ink.

It is said actually that our brains cannot visualize above probably about 2,000 items. So for many of us a million becomes a billion becomes a trillion. It is just all too much.

So while every fact is true and while the fear of that deficit is what moves us this evening, because of our love for this Nation and the people therein, perhaps it would be wise to humanize exactly what that deficit means.

Most often the spending is there for good intention; the intention is to help people. So, if you are an average person, perhaps you wonder if you are not better off with a deficit. After all, a Government program may be something of use to you.

If you are a minority, if you are a woman, you have been told again and again that those programs are for you and that it is indeed my party that would put you on the rack, that would use you as the feed, that would ignore your own humanity, and that indeed the deficit, when it is a problem, is a problem of taxation rather than of spending.

I think it appropriate that I answer that statement, which is both ludicrous and a cruel use of the men and women in America.

Let us assume for a moment that you are black and that you are a woman and you are trying to raise a family. You do depend upon Government money and there is never going to be enough to raise you out of that bare existence.

There is not one mother in Chicago that would not move from Robert Taylor Homes, who longs for a better life for her children, who wants someday to do better and to have those children do better.

□ 2150

What do those Government programs mean? Well, they are a kind of ghettoizing. We, in effect, have set up a new paternalistic society and in effect are saying in the most racist and sexist manner possible, we will give you just enough, we will use you. And that cruelty cannot continue.

Because with that deficit that mother will never be able to leave Robert Taylor homes. The woman who starts later in life, again, left alone with children, the single head of household, the fastest rising group in this Nation, what does the deficit mean?

Well, it surely means she cannot buy a car to get to a job that may make a better life for her children. More importantly, the American dream is a house and what person who was not born with either Kennedy or Rockefeller money can afford interest rates of 20 and 19 and 18 percent, and higher demands for downpayment. And that is that deficit, those are those small crumbs of programs that were fed and continued to be fed to women, to blacks, to Hispanics, but they are not that foolish and I am not that foolish.

I say to you that this party is going to continue to open the doors on these rather dark holes of what Government programs really are and really mean and that new paternalism, not a new America, but the new paternalism that will lock those in the poverty cycle forever, that will mean that women cannot join the entire economic pie of America and that, indeed, because of that deficit, whole sections of America will be told that the American dream must be different for them.

This party does not believe that. This is the party that does believe in not just the right of each individual, but the ability of each individual and the wants of each individual and the heart and the brain of each individual.

So we will continue to speak. We will speak for blacks, we will speak for women, because that deficit just as inflation is the most destructive on those elements in our society who are least able to fight back. And this, although seldom will you hear it, will be the party of those who cannot fight back. It will be the party that believes the American dream belongs to everyone.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER).

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, at times there are many of us around here who would like to escape reality and I am sure there are some members of the staff and people around the floor here tonight who would like to escape the reality of the fact that we are here so late, but if ever you want to escape reality, I would suggest that you indulge the urge and read tomorrow's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where the Democrats try to blame the Republicans for the deficit.

If ever there was a massive escape from reality, it will be printed in those words. It reminds me of a constituent of mine who once told me, after we had passed one of our big budget deficits, that there ought to be a sign out in front of the Capitol Building reading, "Home of the Whopper."

Well, that is absolutely right, because at least that constituent had one basic fact straight and that is that this place produces deficits. It is here that deficits are created. It is here the money is spent. It is not spent in the White House, it is spent here. The Constitution says it.

The gentleman from California earlier this evening talked about the Constitution. It is here. It is right here in this book. It says it very plainly. The Constitution gives the authority to the Congress to appropriate money, to spend money, to put the Government into debt, to collect on debts. That is a power of the Congress, not of the President. And I defy anyone to come and show me one section in this Constitution that says that the President creates deficit. Come on out, come on out. Where are the Democrats? We sat here earlier and listened to them. Come on out guys. Come out of hiding. Where are you? Back in the Cloakroom somewhere? Come out and tell me where in the Constitution does it say that the President creates deficits?

You know, you swore to uphold and defend this Constitution. Come on out here and tell me. I would like to see it. Show me the section that says President Reagan can create a deficit.

When you were out here rattling the garbage cans earlier this evening, we listened to it. Nobody would yield to us. I am perfectly willing to yield right now to anybody who can come out here and show me a section of the Constitution that says that the President can create anything in the form of a deficit. And I see no one coming. Of course not. There are no words in the Constitution that say any such thing. You cannot find that language there.

We do it right here. We are the creators of every dime of deficit. The $1.4 trillion worth of deficit, that is deficit that was created here. The $200 billion of deficit this year, that was deficit that was created here and is continuing to be created here.

The Constitution makes it our responsibility. So what we have got to say is that what took place here earlier this evening is a political charade. It was a comedy of contradictions. What we had were the Democrats coming out here playing politics. You do not have to take my word for it. Listen to what the Congressional Quarterly said in their newsletter, Congressional Insight. They told us exactly what was going to take place. And I quote:

Democrats eye House TV as a new campaign weapon against Reagan.

Special orders and one-minute floor speeches would be the forum.

Sophisticated use of cable TV would channel rhetoric to voters.

It's the brainchild of Rep. Bill Alexander (D. Ark.), who has used the House broadcasting system before to get public attention. He arranged a bipartisan floor debate after Reagan's El Salvador address to a joint session of Congress . . . provided "institutional response" to the president.

Here's how the system would work: members reserve time for debate on certain topics . . . the economy and education are hot right now. Local TV news bureaus are tipped off, could pick up the free video signal from the House TV broadcast. Members get on TV and score political points

Cable TV helps target the message to specific districts because most cable systems provide regional and local coverage, not national. That makes it easier to produce debates that will interest the local outlets.

Early tests encourage Democrats. Freshman Rep. Fred Boucher (Va.) has had good pickup of his one-minute speeches at the beginning of House floor sessions. Alexander is drafting a detailed study of the proposal.

That is what Congressional Quarterly says.

What you saw this evening was political campaigning right here on the House floor.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION ON THE BARTLETT FHA NEGOTIATED RATE AMENDMENT TO HR-1

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTLETT) is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit into the RECORD a letter dated this date from me to the Honorable HENRY B. GONZALEZ responding to his requests made on the House floor on September 12, 1983. I know that this letter will clarify the issues raised by Chairman GONZALEZ in his letter to me and in his statements on the floor.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., September 29, 1983.

Hon. HENRY B. GONZALEZ,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs

DEAR CHAIRMAN GONZALEZ: Please excuse the delay in getting back in touch with you regarding your letter of August 30, and your comments on the floor September 12. I appreciate your sincere concern about the public policy implications of the FHA negotiated rate amendment which was adopted by the House in July. Thank you for the opportunity to respond to your concerns.

The FHA negotiated rate amendment to H.R. 1 is a significant piece of legislation for America's home-owners and would-be homeowners. One of my greatest priorities as a Member of the House of Representatives is to help the largest number of Americans possible to be able to own their own homes. The FHA negotiated rate amendment will help prospective home owners to obtain lower "effective rates" on their mortgage loans, and, most importantly, will give them needed flexibility to find the mortgage loan terms that best suit their individual needs. By having a maximum FHA interest rate ceiling, we limit would-be home buyers' ability to buy homes because mortgage lenders will obtain their targeted profit levels by charging excessive up-front points or by finding more lucrative investment markets elsewhere, limiting available mortgage credit. Our colleagues and I who supported this amendment seriously feel that it will help more Americans to own their own homes.

I noted your feelings that I and other Members who supported the amendment had made untrue statements about the effect of the amendment. I got the impression you felt we had misled the House with regard to the result of the experimental pilot project, the need for points to be charged on loans, and the opportunity for home buyers to benefit from the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I take my responsibility as a participant in debate on the floor of the House of Representatives quite seriously. I recognize the importance of giving a thorough and accurate representation of legislation being offered and it is my solemn commitment to do so.

I appreciate the chance to review the record on this matter.

I will discuss the experimental pilot program matter first. (For your convenience, I will note the page numbers from the Record of July 13, 1983, in parenthesis for reference.)

I believe that I and other supporters of my amendment made it quite clear that analytical statistics from the program were not available at the time of the debate and that the early numbers of loans made under the program were evidence of a strong demand for negotiated FHA loans in the marketplace (H5071, H5076). In answer to questions regarding the demonstration program, I said, "We do not have the statistics back yet. it was well received in the marketplace, but as far as a specific study as to what happened to the rates, we have not been able (to draw any conclusions) it just took effect." (H5076). Throughout the debate, my colleagues and I relied on experiences from past FHA market trends and from conventional market experience with negotiated rates to support our substantive claims along with the fact that the FHA experimental pilot program showed that there was a demand in the marketplace for negotiated rates. (H5071, H5079).

I reviewed the data in the Record of September 12 on the FHA negotiated rate pilot program from the Department of Housing and Urban Development and respectfully submit that the data obtained by your staff is totally inadequate to prove any tangible results from the pilot program or to reach the conclusion as you stated on the floor on September 12, (H6718) that the negotiated loan program would not eliminate or even minimize points on FHA loans. The data you have provided merely shows the total interest spread and the total point spread charged on FHA loans in certain regions with no comparisons showing what points were charged with what interest rates and what effect other loan terms may have had on those transactions. Any conclusive analysis must take into consideration all of these factors and must also compare "effective rates" charged to the borrower.

The current data we obtained shows that the FHA negotiated rate pilot program produced a greater average percentage of FHA mortgages for home buyers with lower "effective rates," a greater percentage of FHA mortgages with fewer up-front points, and a greater percentage of FHA mortgages with shorter terms than did the regular FHA program for FHA mortgages for similar time periods and regions.

According to current information we obtained from HUD the week of September 19, the experimental pilot program for FHA negotiated rate mortgages is an overwhelmingly strong statement in support of the FHA negotiated rate amendment. As I mentioned, any conclusive analysis must take into consideration the effects of points, interest rates, and other loan terms on each loan in a comparative analysis. "Effective rates," which translate the combined effect of both up-front points and interest rates into one comparable "effective rate" charged on each mortgage loan, must be ascertained for any definite conclusions. The interest rate or the number of points charged to the borrower without reference to the other is meaningful in showing the net cost to the borrower.

Although there is not yet a final written analysis on the FHA negotiated rate pilot program, my staff requested and obtained specific analytical data on the program to date which is available upon request from HUD and shows that the FHA negotiated rate pilot program produced a greater percentage of FHA mortgages with a lower effective rate for home buyers. The following statistical data was provided me by a HUD FHA analyst and was developed from a computerized data base containing the first 5,000 mortgage loan records under the FHA negotiated rate mortgage program:

Comparison of "effective rates" FHA negotiated rate loans versus FHA maximum rate loans for 30 year loans—percent distribution

	Homebuyers
Negotiated rate lower (total)	38.2
Negotiated rate equal	26.1
Negotiated rate higher (total)	35.7

(We were advised that about 90 percent of the loans were made to home buyers buying homes other than their first home. The average mortgage loan made under the program was about $53,000.)

The following data was provided with regard to the difference between commitment rates under the FHA negotiated rate pilot program and the FHA maximum rate by type of transaction:

[In percent]

Difference	Purchase
	First-time home buyer	Prior homeowner
More than FHA	31.0	28.8
Same as FHA	31.3	29.3
Less than FHA	37.7	41.9
Total	100.0	100.0

Both the first-time home buyers and prior home owners paid a lower interest rate a greater pecentage of the time under FHA negotiated mortgage pilot program as compared to the FHA maximum rate program.

With regard to average points charged on mortgage loans to borrowers refinancing their home, buying their first home, and buying a home other than their first home, points charged under the FHA negotiated rate pilot program were less than or equal to the FHA maximum rate 64.6% of the time according to statistics given me by a HUD analyst, and greater than the FHA maximum rate program 35.4% of the time. Of the 35.4% of the cases where the points were higher under the FHA negotiated rate pilot program, 64% had terms for less than 30 years and 74% had a rate less than the FHA ceiling rate, which benefits the borrower.

It is important to note that certain factors influenced the FHA negotiated rate pilot program to effectively increase points to a higher degree than they otherwise would have been. A much larger percentage of borrowers under the FHA negotiated rate pilot program received shorter term loans and lower interest rates than those under the FHA maximum rate program. Such benefits to the borrower usually mean increased points to the mortgage lender. Further, the negotiatied rate pilot program was at a disadvantage with regard to the secondary mortgage market. Since the Government National Mortgage Association, GNMA, would only allow mortgage pools consisting of mortgages with common interest rates, the primary mortgage lenders did not have enough volume to be able to sell many of their FHA mortgages in the GNMA market so their marketing costs were increased which they in turn try to make up by charging more points or higher interest rates.

It should be remembered that the biggest advantage of the FHA negotiated rate pilot program is the individual flexibility given to home owners to best tailor financing to their individual needs. "Effective rates" were lower for more home buyers under the FHA negotiated rate pilot program than under the FHA maximum rate program.

With regard to the future need for points to be charged, I feel we clearly did not misrepresent to the House that points would be eliminated for all FHA loans as a result of the negotiated rate amendment.

You did quote one Member as stating that the negotiated interest rate program would eliminate the need for a lender to charge a seller points. In reviewing the entire context of that statement, it was pointed out that the average number of points charged in the FHA market was higher than that in the conventional market, indicating that there would be a similar reflection of points for FHA loans as there are for conventional loans if the FHA negotiated rate amendment were to pass (H5078). I, myself, stated the amendment would allow "lessening the need for those excessive points which are too often charged at the closing . . ." (H5071).

Throughout the debate we stated that points would be determined as they are in the conventional market whereby home buyers can negotiate or search for loan terms that best fit their individual needs. As you know, with negotiation, a home buyer often may negotiate for higher points up front to obtain a lower interest rate, a shorter term, or some other benefit from the mortgage lender. This amendment, however, will lessen the need or requirement that excessive points be charged to compensate for an interest rate that is lower than the market. There will still be a normal demand for points in the marketplace. Points will be negotiable as a function of rates and term. The FHA negotiated rate amendment adds the flexibility needed to allow home buyers to obtain the financing terms that best suit their individual needs.

I noted your concerns about the ability of home buyers to negotiate with the mortgage lenders to the ultimate benefit of the public. The mortgage lending community is one of the most competitive industries in America today. It is possible at any given time to obtain many different quotes as to interest rates and points from contacting many mortgage lenders listed in the yellow pages. In most areas, prospective home buyers may even obtain listings from real estate agents, home builders, and local title companies quoting numerous local mortgage lenders as to interest rates and points being offered. I am attaching a copy of a current mortgage loan quote sheet (Attachment A) which was provided to my office by the San Antonio Board of Realtors as a good example of this service.

I am quite confident about the ability of individual citizens to make appropriate purchase decisions when buying a home.

On another point, the reaction of mortgage lenders to artificially low maximum rates is an important question. There is ample evidence in recent mortgage lending history and current mortgage lending practice showing that where maximum allowable interest rates are set artificially low there is a substantial reduction in mortgage lending if the "effective rate" needed for the mortgage lender to achieve a satisfactory profit cannot be obtained by charging additional up-front points or if additional revenues can be earned from making the loan in some other manner. The bottom line is that either more points will be charged, home prices will be higher, or less mortgage money will be available for home buyers. Throughout the debate on the FHA negotiated rate amendment opponents of the amendment claimed that mortgage lenders were just "out to make a profit." That's true, and it is an excellent argument for the need for the FHA negotiated rate mortgage. We cannot expect mortgage lenders in a free market economy to loan money at interest rates lower than the cost of money to them just because the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development has set an artificially low rate.

As you know, a mortgage's yield is the return paid to investors by borrowers. Yields are determined by supply and demand in the credit markets. The yield to a mortgage is composed of the periodic interest payments paid over the life of the loan and any lump sum payments, or discount points, paid upon origination of the loan. Those discount points effectively reduce the amount loaned so that the periodic interest payment represents a larger percentage return to the investor than it would in the absence of discount points.

The effect of a maximum FHA interest rate set below the mortgage yield needed by the market is to require that discount points be charged to raise the mortgage yield to the market level. Without a sufficient yield, lenders would be losing money in committing funds to the mortage market. The result is clear why either points will increase or funds will not be readily available to home buyers, since mortgage lenders cannot be forced to loan money to home buyers.

I am attaching a copy of a letter (Attachment B) dated September 22, 1983, from Dr. Warren Matthews, Senior Economist for the Mortgage Bankers Association, which I found to be a good explanation of how mortgage bankers determine a mortgage yield from the interaction of mortgage interest rates and points in a potential loan.

I also obtained information on the effect on mortgage lending of the 1980 federal preemption of state usury laws. As you know, state usury laws prior to the federal preemption were analogous to the FHA set rate in that they were often at rates lower than the current types of investments because of usury limits. I am enclosing another letter from Dr. Matthews (Attachment C) with data showing that the state usury limits for many states prior to 1980 distorted the flow of mortgage credit making the capital markets less efficient, and raising required yields and interest rates to borrowers in general in those states.

This example shows the welcome effect on interest rates of increasing competition through the removal of usury restraints. Rates dropped because the supply of mortgage funds increased relative to demand for funds.

It seems apparent that outside funds will not flow into markets where maximum interest rate ceilings are set below the nationally-determined market rate, because those funds are worth more used elsewhere. Moreover, even funds derived locally will be invested elsewhere where an adequate return is assured. Investors who ordinarily place funds in mortgages will turn to other investments, or to mortgages in markets unencumbered by government mortgage interest rate ceilings, until interest rates decline and mortgage lending at permissible local interest rates again becomes the most profitable use of investment funds.

A significant concern to home buyers as pointed out by the newly-appointed Under Secretary for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Honorable Philip A. Abrams, is that the current maximum FHA rate ceiling tends to drive up the price of homes.

Under the current FHA program, sellers (including home builders) attempt to include all or some portion of the points they pay into the sale price of the home. Sellers and home builders typically expect to pay about four to five points when selling their home with FHA financing, and will increase their asking price by about this much. Although the seller's success in doing so may be constrained by the amount of competition in the market area, usually some points are shifted to the buyer. The immediate effect is that home buyers often end up paying more for their homes than they otherwise would because of FHA financing. Over the longer term, this practice only serves to further drive up housing costs and add to inflation.

This practice creates a no-win situation for the home buyer, regardless of whether the prevailing level of points is at seven or three, since the mark-up in the sale price occurs well before the actual payment of the points. I offer an example to illustrate this point. If the buyer agrees to the price, what happens at closing if the lender is forced to charge seven points? More than likely the seller walks away from the deal, and the buyer does not get his home. What happens if the points drop to three? In this case, while the deal will close the seller would not drop the sale price. As a result the home buyer ends up paying more and the seller gets a windfall. Either way the home buyer loses.

Your concern, as I understand it, is that had the Members known the true facts, they might have voted differently on my amendment. I feel that our statements are founded upon and supported by an understanding of experience with the conventional and FHA mortgage markets. The overwhelming evidence bears out our position in support of FHA negotiated rate mortgages including experience with past mortgage markets and recent analytical data concerning the FHA negotiated rate experimental pilot program.

I am quite sure you are sincere in your beliefs against the FHA negotiated rate amendment as I am in support of it, both towards the goal of helping more people to own homes. I respect your views in opposition to my amendment, and I know of your sincerity in arguing against it. Please excuse the length of this reply, but I wanted to demonstrate that I acted in good faith as well. If you have any further questions or comments please do not hesitate to contact me. Thank you for your attention and concern with regard to this important matter.

Sincerely,

STEVE BARTLETT,
Member of Congress.

MORTGAGE BANKERS
ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D.C., September 22, 1983.

Mr. JIM DEPETRIS,
Legislative Assistant/Counsel to Congressman Steve Bartlett, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. DEPETRIS: This letter is in response to your inquiry concerning discount points charged in connection with mortgage loans.

Mortgage yields are the return paid investors by borrowers, and they are determined by supply and demand in the credit markets. The yield of a mortgage is composed of the periodic interest payments paid over the life of the loan and any lump sum payments, or discount points, paid upon origination of the loan.

Discount points, paid to the lender upon loan origination effectively reduce the amount loaned, so that the periodic interest payment represents a larger percentage return to the investor than it would in the absence of discount points.

The effect of a maximum FHA interest rate set below the mortgage yield required by the market is to require that discount points be charged to raise the mortgage yield. Without such points, lenders would not commit funds to the mortgage market.

The following table shows how points and mortgage rates interact to produce a mortgage yield of 13 percent:

	Discount points charged	Yield
Mortgage rate:
13.0	0	13.0
12.88	0.75	13.0
12.75	1.50	13.0
12.63	2.22	13.0
12.25	4.44	13.0
12.0	5.94	13.0

When no discount points are charged, the mortgage rate equals the yield. If the rate is reduced below 13.0 percent, additional points must be charged to raise the yield back to the 13 percent example used here. If, for example, the rate is required to be held down to 12 percent, then almost 6 discount points (6 percent of the mortgage amount or $6,000 on a $100,000 mortgage) must be charged to produce a 13 percent yield.

If the mortgage rate were free to be determined by market forces, as it is in the 80 percent of the market that is the conventional loan market, then points would be lower by the amounts suggested in the above table. There is no historical or theoretical reason to believe that a free or market determined FHA interest rate would raise the overall yield paid by borrowers for credit. Instead, such a reform would remove uncertainty from the mortgage markets, enabling them to operate more efficiently at slightly lower yields.

Sincerely,

WARREN MATTHEWS,
Senior Economist.

Mr. JIM DEPETRIS,
Legislative Assistant/Counsel, to Congressman Steve Bartlett, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. DEPETRIS: This letter is in response to your inquiry concerning the effect on mortgage lending of the 1980 Federal preemption of state usury laws. We have reviewed the usury limits in effect in each state when the Federal preemption became effective in 1980, and have grouped twenty of the states into two groups based on their usury limits. The attached table shows ten states with the most restrictive usury limits, followed by ten states with no effective usury limit.

The table shows the percentage of national residential mortgage lending in each state during the full year before and after the Federal usury preemption of 1980. As expected, the data show that in states with a usury limit, their share of all residential lending increased from 13.5 percent in 1979 to 17.0 percent in 1981, an increase of more than 25 percent in share. On the other hand, states with no usury limit lost share of mortgage dollars lent over these years, from 36.3 percent in 1979 to 30.7 percent in 1981. This change in the distribution of mortgage lending shows that the usury limits had been distorting the flow of mortgage funds prior to the Federal preemption. In order to determine if this redirection of mortgage funds after 1980 might be due to the changes in population or economic growth, we compared real personal income in each state group in 1979 and 1981. We found that in the states without usury limits, this measure held constant at 27 percent of the US total, while in the states with usury limits, real personal income remained at 13.9 percent of the US total.

We believe these data show that the state usury limits prior to 1980 distorted the flow of mortgage credit. Such a distortion makes the capital markets less efficient, raising required yields and interest rates to borrowers in general.

Please call Burton Wood, Legislative Counsel, or me if we can provide more information.

Sincerely,

WARREN MATTHEWS.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS ON THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. PASHAYAN) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER).

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the question here is what kind of politics are we playing. There is no doubt we are playing politics. And what do they propose to do about these deficits that they come to the floor and deplore?

Well, the majority leader let the cat out of the bag the other day on the House floor. He was out here defending the fact that they were going to vote for another big new spending program that did not have enough money in the budget to pay for it, and he told us the way in which we could do something to speak to deficits was to make certain that we taxed the rich and took the money out of defense.

That is the cure. When you ask them what they are going to do to cure deficits, they are going to tax the rich and take the money out of defense.

Well, to show you how phony their so-called facts are, let us take a look at that. We have approximately 90 days' worth of deficit in the Federal Government today. In other words, at the spending levels of Government, you cold spend out about 90 days' worth of deficit. Now, let us say we wanted to tax the rich to get some of that deficit brought down. If you taxed the rich, the people making over $75,000 worth of income in this country, if you took every penny away from them, totally confiscated every dime that they make over $75,000, every penny, somebody wins the lottery in their State, you take away every penny over $75,000, tax away every bit of it, you would be able to run the Government for 14 days. That would leave 76 days' worth of deficit you have to take out of defense. That would be a defense cut of $175 billion.

Is there any Democrat who seriously believes that his party or this Congress is willing to cut the defense budget, which stands at $274 billion, by $175 billion? I doubt it.

But let us change the figures for a minute. Let us say that you really think that is too high a figure. Let us say that $75,000 is a little bit too high a figure, and let us make it every cent over $50,000, take away every penny everybody earns in this country over $50,000, total confiscatory taxation, not one dime over $50,000 would anybody be able to keep. You would get enough money to run the Government for 40 days. That leaves 50 days that you would have to take out of the defense budget. That is a $115 billion cut in defense. Does anybody really believe we are going to cut that much?

Well, some people might say, "Yes, we could find $115 billion. Let us cut the MX missile, the B-1 bomber, the Trident submarine, let us do some things like that."

All right, I will tell you what we do, let us cut the Pershing missile, the Cruise missile, the B-1 bomber, the Trident submarine, the MX missile, let us cut out all Army munitions, give the Army no bullets to fire, totally take away all of the bullets from their guns, let us eliminate the M-1 tank and let us eliminate all of the missiles that go on the Trident submarine, too, let us eliminate every one of those. Do you know what you save? You save $16.5 billion. That means you have got to still find $100 billion more if you believe what the majority leader told us the other day. And that is after taxing every penny over $50,000.

What are you going to do for the extra $100 billion? Are you not going to pay the troops? Are you going to stop paying the retirement? Are you going to take away the money from military construction? Are you not going to house the families? Are you not going to feed the troops? Where are you going to come up with $100 billion more? That fact is, you cannot. The fact is, it is a phony for anybody to suggest that you can solve our deficit problems in this country by taking it away from only defense and taxing the rich.

So what they really mean when they say tax the rich is that they are going to tax everybody from about $10,000 a year up, and they are going to tax them with major new tax increases, and they are going to find ways to raise big new money out of the working people of this country. That would be terribly wrong.

It is also a real phony for them to suggest that somehow it has been Republican Presidents that have produced deficits. As I pointed out before, Presidents do not produce deficits. Congresses do.

A little earlier this evening I heard the talk that Jerry Ford produced a deficit of $66 billion. I hope America's memory is little longer than obviously the institutional memory of this body is, because I remember well Jerry Ford vetoing bill after bill after bill that an overspending Democratic Congress sent down to him, sending those bills back up here only to have his vetoes overridden and that spending put in place. The $66 billion deficit was not Jerry Ford's deficit. It was the deficit of this body who not only passed the deficit, in the first place, but overrode the Presidential vetoes to keep them in place. And now they come along and they call them Jerry Ford's deficits. How phony. How ridiculous.

Well, in summation, Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that if you believe the Democrats have seriously become inflation fighters, then you are also someone who believes that Jabba the Hut needs food stamps.

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, with deficits in the range of $200 billion expected for the next 4 years, this Congress cannot afford to spend time pointing fingers and playing political blamesmanship.

I have been disappointed by attempts to blame the President for the deficit. It seems to me to be an unnecessary scam destined for failure. Our job is to reduce the deficit. Those who waste time trying to fix unwarranted blame will not be considered heroes in the deficit battle. They will be judged by their votes on spending issues.

By 1988, our total public debt outstanding may reach $2.6 trillion unless Congress and the administration act now to bring the yearly deficits down. The deficit issue is the most severe and threatening national issue that most Members of this body have ever faced. Yet while deficits threaten to rot the financial, economic, social, and moral fibers of our Nation, the problem is continually and easily ignored by the Nation's legislators.

As Representatives of the United States we cannot afford to sit back and hope that the current recovery will bring in sufficiently higher revenues to offset and reduce the enormous deficits. We cannot postpone the difficult decisions to implement deficit reduction measures just because the good news about the present recovery has softened the pressure on us to make those needed decisions.

Bringing deficits down and sustaining a strong and steadily growing economy requires our ongoing efforts. Now that there is recovery, we cannot afford to sit back complacently patting our backs. Relaxing after the battle may cost us the war. Moreover, if we fight within our ranks, party against party, we will also lose the economic prosperity war. No time can be spared in addressing the deficit problem. A committed, strongly united, bipartisan offensive against deficits is needed right now.

Whatever method is chosen for breaking down the huge deficits is not nearly as important as is the congressional resolve to take action. Lack of action and the continuation of enormous deficits will create a clash in the credit markets which will drive interest rates back up. The Nation's resource pool is limited. There is simply not room for the Federal Government to be borrowing to accommodate $200 billion per year deficits at the same time that private investment needs are also being accommodated.

Money will still be available for private financial needs after the Government has taken care of its borrowing needs. However, businesses and private individuals will have to compete furiously for those remaining resources. In response to the excess demand situation interest rates will slide back up. Remaining available credit will be extremely expensive.

As interest rates move back upward, some private investments will have to be forgone. Forgone private investment means less productivity improvement, less new technology development, and fewer new jobs. Interest sensitive industries, such as housing, autos, and consumer durables, will be hurt again.

As another manifestation of deficit induced high interest rates, the too-strong dollar will make it harder to sell our overpriced exports abroad, and easier to buy cheap imports at home. Trade deficits have already risen from a record annual rate of $46 billion in the first half of 1983 to a likely $70 billion by the end of this year. Without action against deficits, trade deficits will continue to increase, as will the tide of protectionism and the likelihood of another trade war. If world trade declines as worldwide protectionist sentiments grow, consumers everywhere will lose as prices for goods once again go up.

Should the Fed succumb to the inevitable public outcry to ease up on the interest rate squeeze by monetizing the debt, the increased money supply would boost the already overheated economy, sending inflation spiraling back up into the double digits. Our future outlook is grim. Inflation and high borrowing costs promise to obliterate any economic gains now being made unless structural reductions in the deficits can be implemented now.

We can do something about deficits. The recession has widened the differential between reduced tax revenues and increased transfer payments, thereby increasing projected deficits. However, had there been no recession, deficits would still be too high. The structural deficit, that which would exist if the country were operating at full employment, must be addressed. Structural deficits will account for 54 percent, 62.5 percent, and 60 percent of the respective unified deficits in fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986.

Using CBO figures for fiscal year 1984, 43.9 percent of projected outlays will go toward entitlement and other mandatory spending. Another 11.9 percent will go toward interest payments on the national debt, and 27 percent will be spent on defense. Only 17.8 percent of the budget will be spent on nondefense discretionary programs.

There is not much fat left to be cut out of the nondefense discretionary portion of the Budget. Therefore, we are faced with the extremely difficult task of finding savings in entitlement spending, defense spending, or through increased revenues. The decisions will not be easy, but they are unavoidable.

There is much talk of bringing down the deficits by increasing revenues. However, almost without exception, every economist who testified before the House Budget Committee early this spring told us that taxes should not be raised during the beginning of a recovery. The $73 billion in 3-year revenues included in this year's budget resolution could reduce investments and savings, and since investments and savings are important elements in our effort to sustain and strengthen the recovery they should not be severely reduced. In my judgment, revenues of the magnitude called for in this year's budget resolution should be avoided.

Clearly, despite my contrary inclinations, revenue increases will eventually have to be a part of any comprehensive deficit reduction package. It is important, though, that the new revenues raised are used to reduce the flow of red ink and are matched with larger proportions of spending reductions. They must not be used to finance more profligate and unrestrained spending.

We have at least one tool to streamline and reduce entitlements. Reconciliation is that tool. Reconciliation is our single most effective mechanism to bring existing law into conformity with the current budget decisions. Through reconciliation we can get at uncontrollable spending and at the budget base. Without reconciliation, spending that was authorized in earlier years is locked in.

Supplementary to reconciliation, we have other options for deficit reduction. The best and most simple option is to discipline ourselves. We can force ourselves to stay within the budget assumptions and the Appropriations Committee's 302(b) allocations when passing individual spending bills. We can eliminate unnecessary supplemental appropriations and backdoor spending. We can stick to the Budget Act schedule and avoid the undisciplined continuing resolutions. We can require reconciliation within 60 days of the first budget resolution. In enforcing discipline upon ourselves, there is not room for parochial interests and/or partisan backslashing. Bipartisanship is needed now more than ever.

Another option is the CPI minus 3-percent proposal which would provide a deficit reduction over a 4-year period of $126.8 billion. CPI minus 2 percent, as proposed in the House, would not provide nearly as much deficit relief as CPI minus 3 percent, but with a projected deficit reduction of $77.5 billion, it is nothing to sneeze at.

Earlier this week, a number of my colleagues and I introduced a joint resolution calling on the President to convene a domestic economic summit conference to prepare a plan to reduce the budget deficits. Such a Commission may not be the best answer for determining the proper and fairest strategy for battling the deficits. But at least it is a try. Nothing else has worked.

Without any single Member's head or any one party being placed on the public chopping block, the Commission could develop and introduce a list of alternatives for resolving the deficit crisis.

If it works together, Congress can succeed in bringing deficits down and insuring lasting growth and economic prosperity in the United States for many, many years to come. We can insure increased capital investments, increased new technologies, increased productivity, new jobs, lower interest rates, lower inflation, and overall economic growth.

But first we must get past the hurdle of partisan politics. The record on the deficit question is clear. It will speak for itself. The people do not want buck passing and scapegoating. They want deficit reduction.

With courage and farsightedness we can beat back the raging deficits. Through our bipartisan efforts we can significantly improve the quality of life for all Americans.●

● Mr. FORSYTHE. Mr. Speaker, this fiscal year will soon be gone. Unfortunately, its legacy will not. We face the prospect of the largest budget deficit ever—$210 billion. The citizens of this country justly ask how the deficit became so large and why we do not reduce it. The answer is not very complicated and lies partly in this Chamber. The Congress has consistently overspent the Nation's income. The deficits have succeeded one another, growing larger each year, for the past 15 years and there have been Federal deficits in 45 of the past 53 years.

The reasons why the Congress spent more than the taxpayers could pour into the Treasury vary in detail, but have a common theme. Too often, Members were persuaded to vote for the special interests of their constituents. Sometimes, most of the Members agreed a program was necessary for the well-being of their constituents, which is how we have ended up with so many entitlement programs which are so enormously costly and upon which million of Americans rely for various benefits.

Obviously this is a simplistic explanation and does not take into account differences in political philosphy or the genuine concern which compels elected officials to act to correct inequitable situations. Nevertheless, the fact remains that for more than 40 years, under Democratic control, the Congress readily appropriated more than the taxpayers provided. Then the Congress played catch up. It raised taxes. The problem that then became apparent was that the newly imposed taxes never seemed to provide enough money for the next round of congressional spending. We became deeply mired in the tax and spend cycle.

When President Reagan was elected, he vowed to lead us to economic recovery. He made an excellent start as a result of his skill in forging coalitions within the Congress and because many Members of Congress recognized the peril of the economic path the country had followed for so many years. We passed legislation reducing the rate of Government spending and tax cut legislation to provide the necessary capital to spark the economic recovery. The results are encouraging:

The inflation rate for the past 12 months is 2.4 percent, which is the lowest 12-month rate for more than 17 years;

The prime interest rate is down from its record 21.5 percent during the Carter administration to 11 percent; and

The economy grew at an annual rate of 9.2 percent last quarter, which is the fastest quarterly growth rate in 5 years.

When the President designed his economic program, budget deficits were anticipated and, as the economy continues its growth, additional moneys should be generated which will help reduce the deficit. However, the deficit is so huge and self-perpetuating we need to consider further action. Our choices are not many. The budget deficit can only be eliminated by reduced Government spending or raising taxes. A tax increase could stifle the recovery, as well as unduly penalize hard-working Americans. In the area of reduced Government spending, too many of us in Congress seem to have lost the resolve we had 3 years ago to say no to spending.

That being the case, perhaps we should consider the possibility that the Congress is institutionally incapable of sustained denial of spending to appease constituent interests. It is a secret 42 of our 50 States, including my home State of New Jersey, have already discovered about the legislative branch of Government. These States have reacted by giving the Governor the authority to veto line items in the budget. This authority gives the Governors the power they need to achieve a balanced budget. Perhaps the States have seen the sense of this method because they do not have the option of printing more money when dollars become scarce. The line item veto also keeps the Governors from the dilemma the U.S. President regularly faces concerning appropriations bills in which he must buy all the bill or none of it. I think we, as Federal legislators, should seriously consider following where so many of our State governments have already gone. It would provide the President with a real means of limiting unwise spending, since the Congress does not seem to be able to impose that sort of restraint upon itself.●

● Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, as the British came forward to surrender to Washington's Continental Army at Yorktown, their band played a tune called, "The World Turned Upside Down."

Two hundred years later, the tax-and-spend liberals here in Washington have had their world turned upside down by the Reagan revolution. President Reagan took the helm of an economy from them, an economy plagued by excessive taxes, bloated domestic spending and declining economic growth, and he has steadied America's course to recovery.

Inflation, which hit 12.4 percent under Jimmy Carter, is now 2.6 percent. The prime interest rate is 11 percent, about half Mr. Carter's prime rate. Mortgage rates have also dropped, awakening the housing industry from its sleepy Carter slump. Our index of leading economic indicators has gone up for 11 consecutive months, and this upswing is matched by a upbeat, optimistic mood among the American people.

I sensed that mood among my constituents during the August recess. I sensed it among the elderly who are relieved that inflation no longer ravages their fixed incomes. I sensed it among small businessmen, among supermarket shoppers, among countless people who want this Congress to stay the course that President Reagan has put America on toward economic recovery.

That is what I heard from the people of my district. Yet there are those who say they heard something different. They claim they heard a vast outcry of concern over the Federal budget deficit.

Our political and economic world has indeed been turned upside down if these big spending liberals have suddenly been born again as deficit-fighting fiscal conservatives.

Because let us face it, Mr. Speaker—the one cause for today's Federal deficit is the chronic refusal of this House to curb domestic spending. And the only cure for these deficits is to put to rest once and for all this idle chit-chat about tax increases, and go about the business of making the cuts needed to sustain economic growth.

The first act this Congress performed upon our return from our trips home—trips when we supposedly heard so much about budget deficits—was to add $1.6 billion to our social services budget. This may startle students of logic, but it comes as no surprise to students of the 98th Congress, which has been busting the budget since shortly after most of us took our oath of office.

On March 24, for example, with recovery already launched, this House passed a $4.6 billion Emergency Jobs Act that has not done a thing to create lasting jobs for American workers. Why, it has not even succeeded in making make-work jobs.

The New York Times studied the effects of this act, and concluded in a July 5 article that the early beneficiaries of the act were not the men and women in declining industries, but the lawyers, the accountants and the consultants—otherwise known as the "beltway bandits"—who have gotten a few feathers from the plucked taxpayer by way of Federal contracts for proposals, projects and public hearings.

It is not that we do not have ample historic evidence of the futility of these Government boondoggles. For that little object lesson, we have President Carter's dear CETA program to thank. My colleague from Pennsylvania (BOB WALKER) presented a litany of CETA horror stories a few weeks ago—money tossed away on such meaningful projects as constructing training rocks for rock-climbers, manuals on gay life styles, and modern dance lessons for Montgomery County matrons.

So what does this House do? Why it passes the "son of jobs bill" boondoggle, and another $3.5 billion is added to the deficit.

We have been stoking our little spending engines for 9 months now. We have got a $8.4 billion big bank bailout, a $1.8 billion reincarnation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and appropriations bills that add billions to the executive budget request. We even have a $17 billion housing program as a payoff for the bank bailout program that is a taxpayer rip-off to begin with.

The biggest irony is that we also have some big spending programs that are needed to correct the damage of other big spending programs. I speak of course of the bills to provide $860 million for emergency mortgage assistance, $4 billion for health insurance for the unemployed, and $375 million for the Trade Adjustment Act. These programs would not be necessary if we could just get about the business of slowing the growth of governmental spending and promoting economic growth.

In fact, there are those of us who maintain that the only way to reduce the Federal deficit is through sustained, noninflationary growth. Every 1 percent drop in unemployment swells governmental revenue by about $30 billion. Faster economic growth, in fact, led Treasury Secretary Donald Regan to predict last July that our deficits will be trimmed by a total of $110 billion over the next 5 years.

Tax hikes, as our born-again deficit-fighting liberal friends advocate, would only slow down economic growth. And besides, not 1 cent of these tax hikes would go to close the budget gap. It would go toward increased spending. Everyone knows that what Congress gets, Congress spends.

Last year, President Reagan swallowed hard and signed the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act, lured by a promise that we would cut spending $3 for every $1 in tax hikes. This promise has been roundly broken. Instead, for every dollar in taxes, we have cut spending a scant 25 cents.

That is no way for this Congress to run an economy. We have seen the enemy of balanced budgets, and it is us.●

● Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, article I, section 7 of the Constitution reads:

All bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

I am distressed that there are those who would shirk off our responsibility for the budget deficit. In the words of Harry Truman the buck does stop here. This is not a time to point fingers. Commonsense and good nature will do a lot to insure a bipartisan response to this problem.

I suggest to the members of Congress that this is not a time to play politics. The stakes are too high and the challenge too great. Last week my distinguished colleague from California, LEON PANETTA, and myself cosponsored two special orders on the budget deficit. The response was overwhelming. Members from both sides of the aisle came forward to express their concern.

Nothing is a greater impediment to solving the deficit crisis than if the Members of this body are unable to join together in a bipartisan effort.

No doubt, each of us have our own particular ideas on solving the budget crisis. For the past 2 weeks my colleagues, and I, have attempted to define the problem and offer some possible solutions. The formula is simple. Spending reductions and/or increased revenues equal a reduced deficit. The difficulty is determining the correct blend.

Compromise is the key. Every worthwhile law on the books is the result of this form of human interaction. We have done it so often. Why not now? I dare say that my response is somewhat different from others who participated in the Special Orders on September 14 and 21. But I am willing to compromise and I believe they are too.

Briefly, I would mention a joint resolution introduced by House Chairman JIM JONES, of which I am a cosponsor, that would call on the President to convene a summit conference with congressional leadership to address the budget deficit problem. The uncontrollables must be controlled swiftly and decisively. An economic summit will send a message to the American people that Congress is going to act promptly.

Continued high deficits have manufactured a confidence gap between government and people. Recovering from years of ballooning inflation and high interest rates, business is wary of another one-two punch in the form of a dwindling supply of capital at a reasonable cost. This fear is a threat to a prolonged recovery.●

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the October 3 Newsweek magazine informs us that this distinguished body is in store for quite a show tomorrow.

According to the magazine, in a very political ploy, born-again deficit-fighting Democrats will denounce the budget gap in a series of 1-minute speeches on the floor of the House.

In response one could marvel at the great degree of patient practice this exercise requires for our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to learn how to pronounce terms such as fiscal responsibility and budget deficit smoothly and clearly.

One could also point to the record of the Democrat-controlled House in passing spending bill after spending bill that exceed administration requests. The House's record in pushing through new programs—such as the $3.5 billion jobs bill at a time when our economy is expanding and the unemployment rate is dropping—must also be explained by our colleagues who plan to be so critical of the administration.

In reply, one might discuss how successful the President's economic policy has been these past 3 years. The President's policy has reduced inflation and lowered taxes to a point that a typical family income has about $3,200 more in purchasing power than it would have had without the tax breaks and the reduction in inflation.

The prime interest rate has dropped dramatically since the Carter administration, and the average real hourly earnings in 1983 rose for the first time in 4 years. The economy itself has grown at an annual rate of 9.2 percent which is the fastest quarterly growth rate in 5 years.

However, Mr. Speaker, none of these responses seem appropriate to what is in store for us tomorrow if the Newsweek article is correct.

The budget deficit is truly a serious problem facing our Nation, and it should not be subject to political gamesmanship.

The Congress and this body, which contributed so greatly in creating the deficit problem, must now seek a solution in a bipartisan manner. What, to some, may be good politics, may not necessarily be good policy nor good for the national interest.

It is time to lay politics aside and get down to the real business of reducing the deficit so that our economy can continue to grow and our unemployed can find real, long-term productive jobs.●

● Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, our economy is growing briskly, generating more and more revenues, and the budget deficit could be reduced very substantially if every Member of this House would do what he or she knows to be right.

I have watched the action on the authorization and appropriations bills. I have watched with sadness the playing to special interest groups with add-on running to billions of dollars.

Too many Members of this House are using the appropriations process to collar the votes of special interest constituencies in next year's elections. They are the same Members who are loudly complaining about the deficit and trying to blame it on President Reagan.

They are the same Members who talk about tax increases to reduce the deficit, but experience shows they would spend every dime that might be raised by a tax increase.

A responsible Congress concerned about the economic future of our country could reduce the deficit. If we would simply try to wring out all the waste and unnecessary spending, we would have enough for all our needs. Instead, fiscal policy has become an arena for playing raw politics.

Even though we differ in our priorities, I truly believe that if we would put crass, political motivation behind us we could solve all our economic problems.●

NATIONAL ADULT CONTINUING EDUCATION WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a joint resolution to designate the week of October 17, 1983, through October 24, 1983, as "National Adult Continuing Education Week."

Nothing better describes the importance of continuing education than the motto of National Adult Continuing Education Week, "Education for Tomorrow's Opportunities." Today, perhaps more than at any other time in our Nation's history, education is playing a vital role in meeting the challenges of tomorrow. With the decline of certain industries, the growth of service-oriented businesses, and the increase of new technologies, education is certainly a key to our future.

When we talk of education, far too many people think only of schoolchildren in the elementary grades or of college students earning their bachelor or graduate degrees. What we fail to recognize, however, is that over 21 million adults are currently enrolled in continuing education programs throughout the United States. These more than 21 million participants in adult education, nearly 12 million of which were women and over 9 million were men, took over 37 million courses during the year ending May 1981. This is an average of 1.8 courses per participant, and 60 percent of these courses were taken for job-related reasons. Furthermore, it is noteworthy that approximately 54 percent of the adult education courses were taken in a school setting; the rest were provided by business or industry, community and government agencies, and other nonschool settings. More importantly, the whole adult continuing education effort is growing.

From displaced factory workers learning new skills to physicians studying the most recent advancements in medicine, millions of Americans are furthering their education, increasing their skills, and expanding their knowledge. For some, this is just another step to greater knowledge, but for many it is a new beginning. This is especially true for women, minorities, and some of our older citizens who, for various reasons, have long been unable to further their education.

In my opinion, Congress has a responsibility to foster and strengthen education at all levels. In particular, we must encourage our adult population to take advantage of the many opportunities afforded through continuing education. After all, education is a lifelong process.

I have always been a strong supporter of adult education. It is the purpose of this resolution to recognize the value of continuing education and to commend those individuals involved in adult continuing education who make so many important contributions to our country. I ask my colleagues to join me in this effort by cosponsoring this resolution.●

MEDICARE BENEFIT IMPROVEMENT AND COST CONTAINMENT ACT OF 1983

● The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, in 1962 President John F. Kennedy in a special message to Congress concerning health insurance for the aged said:

> Good health is a prerequisite to the enjoyment of the pursuit of happiness. Whenever the miracles of modern medicine are beyond the reach of any group of Americans, for whatever reason—economic, geographic, occupational or other—we must find a way to meet their needs and fulfill their hopes. For one true measure of a nation is its success in fulfilling the promise of a better life for each of its members. Let this be the measure of our nation.

President Kennedy's statement came near the conclusion of a 30-year debate initiated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Committee on Economic Security concerning the inclusion of health insurance in the social security system. Three years later, following President Lyndon Johnson's landslide victory in an election where health insurance for the aged was a principal issue, Congress adopted the medicare and medicaid programs. Their intended goal was to assure access to quality health care would not be limited by income or age.

In the intervening years, medicare and medicaid have done a great deal to guarantee medical miracles are equally available. Many who would be immobile walk on manmade hips. Hearts that might have stopped, pump with fresh arteries. Kidney patients survive with the aid of machines that clean their blood. Americans are justly proud that their medical system is the best in the world.

But recently, the rising costs of this care have led some to wonder whether the country can sustain its commitment to the poor and elderly. Coronary bypass operations cost from $20,000 to $40,000 each. Hip replacements with associated hospitalization and therapy run from $5,000 to $10,000 per patient; and the costs of renal dialysis now exceeds $2 billion a year.

In the aggregate, health care expenditures have increased by 3,000 percent from 1950 to the present. They will double again in the next 7 years. The Government's share has increased from 24 percent in 1973 to 29.3 percent in 1981. Health expenditures now constitute 12.2 percent of total Federal Government expenditures compared to 4.5 percent in 1965. At this rate, the Congressional Budget Office has estimated the medicare hospital insurance trust fund will be bankrupt within 4 years.

Extending the challenge to our health care commitment is the fact that access to care is denied many who need it; 1 out of every 10 Americans is without health insurance. The poor are three times as likely to lack insurance as people with high incomes and twice as likely as people with middle incomes. In fact, over half those classified as poor under Federal guidelines are not covered by medicaid.

At the same time, the burden on the elderly has grown to premedicare levels. Seniors now pay an average of 20 percent of their income for health care—the same amount as they did in 1965 when medicare and medicaid were enacted.

Clearly, as I said earlier this year in initiating a review of these problems by the Subcommittee on Health and Long-Term Care of the House Aging Committee, health care in this country is at crisis. The magnitude of the problem will not yield to simple solutions and easy answers. It cannot be addressed by cost shifting and program reductions designed to balance the books. Our revisions must be more fundamental and progressive.

Today, I introduce legislation which I believe to be a step in the right direction. This legislation, the Medicare Benefit Improvement and Cost Containment Act of 1983, would extend necessary services to medicare beneficiaries while restraining costs. This will be accomplished by allowing providers more flexibility in dealing with medicare while providing incentives for these providers to operate efficiently.

The Medicare Benefit Improvement and Cost Containment Act of 1983 would encourage the development of preferred provider organizations and allow these organizations to contract with medicare for specified services. These organizations, which at minimum must be prepared to offer existing medicare part A and B services, would be given the flexibility of adding services which they deem appropriate and cost-effective. The organization could add benefits designed to emphasize preventative care, community services or any other desirable service so long as these services are disclosed in the contracting process and the rate negotiated does not exceed current program expenditures (calculated at the AAPCC).

In addition, the legislation provides incentives for physicians to accept assignment and tests "Freedom of Choice" health maintenance organizations (HMO's). Physicians would be encouraged to accept asssignment by provisions which would expedite the payment process for physicians who accept assignment (defined for purposes of this act as preferred providers) and authorizing the payment of interest on valid claims not paid within 30 days of submission by a preferred provider.

The freedom of choice HMO demonstration would test an approach which would simplify enrollment for HMO's and eliminate restrictive lock-in provisions which have hindered the growth of HMO's. Beneficiaries would retain the right to see specific physicians and other providers as they wish, preserving their freedom of choice and encouraging the HMO to maintain internal services of the highest quality. Under this option, beneficiaries would continue to be responsible for coinsurance and deductible amounts.

At the same time, the beneficiaries enrolled in the demonstration would have the option of receiving services from the HMO's panel of providers. In the event beneficiaries exercized this option, they would receive more comprehensive services without the obligation of existing copayment and deductible amounts.

This legislation would not result in increased program costs. Payment for services under the demonstration would be at the 95 percent AAPCC rate and result in a 5-percent saving to the program. Other program costs would be unaffected.

In summary, this legislation represents an affirmative approach to one of our most pressing problems. It provides providers of services under medicare with greater flexibility and independence in their organization, prescription of appropriate therapies and patient management. It provides beneficiaries with additional options and the possibility of receiving more comprehensive services at a reduced cost.●

ON THE LAND REMOTE SENSING SATELLITE AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1983

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BROOKS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Committee on Government Operations Subcommittee on Legislation and National Security held a hearing to examine the international implications of the administration's proposal to commercialize our Government's land remote sensing satellite known as Landsat. During these hearings it was noted repeatedly that Landsat has been a valuable tool of American foreign policy. In addition, it was noted that the effort to sell it at this time could cause irreparable damage to the international stature of the United States.

For 25 years the United States has fought for the open skies policy which allows all of our Nation's satellites to fly without restrictions over every nation in the world. Maintenance of this policy hinges directly on the fact that this country has made the information acquired from civilian remote sensing satellites freely available to all the nations of the world.

To commercialize Landsat, this administration has proposed to renege on our Nation's commitment to nondiscriminatory data distribution policies. This fact is causing considerable alarm among the nations of the world.

Over 40 developing nations now rely on Landsat to provide them with vital information on their natural resources. Over a dozen nations have invested their own resources in building Landsat receiving stations, having recognized the considerable value of this data, and more important, have made these expenditures in direct reliance on the fact that the Landsat program was backed by the U.S. Government.

These nations fear that there will no longer be Landsat data available. Unfortunately, this concern is not without foundation because mechanical difficulties in our present satellite, combined with the decision of this administration to build no further Landsat satellites, will inevitably result in substantial gaps in data.

I am not sure what we can do at this point to minimize these gaps in data transmissions from Landsat, but it is vitally important that the United States assure the other nations of the world that Landsat data will still be available, even after the last Landsat satellite we now have is launched.

Today I am introducing a bill to assure the nations of the world that rely on Landsat data that the United States intends to see that this program continues and to insure them that the data obtained from Landsat will continue to be distributed in a nondiscriminatory fashion.

I urge each of you to join me in this effort to make these assurances to our friends around the world.●

SOME FURTHER THOUGHTS ON THE SOVIET GRAIN DEAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. NEAL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I have thought for some time that President Reagan has been wrong to commit so much of our grain to the Soviet Union. I am bothered, first of all, that we may be putting profits ahead of principles when we supply grain to feed Soviet troops that remain in Afghanistan, Vietnam, and other places, and are ready, on a moment's notice, to march into Poland should the Soviet stranglehold on that nation seem to be slipping.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned for at least two other reasons:

First, we had a very bad experience in selling grain to the Soviet Union in 1972, when President Nixon made an unwise deal with the U.S.S.R. and we were struck, simultaneously, with a bad crop year. The result was a devastating blow to the American family's food budget. Because of this year's severe drought in most parts of the country, we are facing crop shortages again this year and should we have unfavorable weather next year, President Reagan's shortsightedness could cause even greater disaster than that created by President Nixon.

Second, Mr. Speaker, is the havoc that we are wreaking upon our farmland by the continuing demand to overproduce. Through unwise cultivation practices, we are depleting our soil of nutrients, causing it to erode, and in many cases wiping out the small farmer.

This past Sunday, an article by Ward Sinclair in the Washington Post's "Outlook" section focused clearly on the second of these contentions. I would like to call the article to the attention of my colleagues, and at this time to enter it into the RECORD.

BY HAWKING OUR GRAIN WE GAMBLE OUR FUTURE

(By Ward Sinclair)

American farmers are being sold down the river.

You can actually see it happening by standing in a Missouri midnight at Lock 22 on the Mississippi, right in Mark Twain's Hannibal backyard, watching a late August traffic jam of grain-laden barges waiting to be shuttled on toward New Orleans and then to overseas customers.

Sights such as this gladden the hearts of politicians and farm organization leaders who see grain exports as the road to salvation for the faltering farm economy. But on the corn and soybean farms just a stone's throw from the lock, this traffic doesn't bring the elation you might expect. There's restrained pleasure that the Russians are buying more grain again this summer, but no real sense of salvation—most farmers know better.

There is increasing evidence that the policies promoting massive exports of American farm products, down from record highs a couple of years ago but still in the $35 billion range this year, have only worsened the crisis in U.S. farming.

The crisis is social, economic and environmental. The pressure to produce more and more food is rapidly changing the shape of rural America, creating larger and larger farms, undermining community structure and businesses. it is driving farmers to make indefensible investment decisions. And it is forcing them to squander the resource base of soil and water that must be kept whole to feed future generations.

Export agriculture has become so vital to the American farmer that the crops from about two of every five acres he harvests now are sold abroad. An astounding 65 percent of the wheat, 55 percent of the soybeans and 35 percent of the coarse grains—corn, sorghum, barley—produced in this country go to buyers overseas.

This is achieved at high cost. With little regard for the future, farmers are mining the soil and water to grow still more grain to add to the surplus that depresses their price. Some of the nation's best topsoil is eroding at shocking rates because of the pressure farmers feel to produce more. The vast underground reservoir known as the Ogallala aquifer, underlying the Great Plains grain belt, is being depleted rapidly to irrigate fields that were meant only for dryland farming. Rich hardwood forests of the lower Mississippi Valley are being cleared systematically for conversion into land for cultivation of crops that add to the glut. At the same time, urban encroachment is eating away some of the most productive farmland, and shrinking the base for future production.

"We can see evidence of a depleting resource base," Sen. Roger Jepsen (Iowa) said this month, pointing out the soil erosion each year wipes out the productive capability of enough land to feed, clothe and provide lumber for a population the size of San Diego, a city of roughly 1.8 million people. "Preservation of the resource base for present and future . . . production should be paramount. This is basic to national security."

As they deplete the resources, these same farmers go deeper into hock, expanding their debt and their size just to keep pace. They continue to spend billions of dollars annually for unrenewable oil, petrochemical fertilizers and pesticides, seeds and expensive machinery that help them grow grain that sells for less than it costs them to produce. The good times of the mid-1970s, when prices were high and export demand was rising, have become the bad times of the 1980s, with recession and foreign competition leaving farmers high, dry and frightened.

Soil conservationist R. Neil Sampson has put it this way: "Farmers face a constant level of inflation in the cost of the things they purchase, without an offsetting steady rise in the price of the goods they sell . . . The impact on young farmers, or those trying to overcome cash flow deficits, is devastating."

This litany might be understandable, although hardly acceptable, if farmers in general were getting fat and rich from exports. But precisely the opposite is the case. In the dizzying decade of farm export growth that began in 1970, sales went from $7 billion to more than $40 billion. Yet farm income actually has gone down, farmers' debt-interest costs are about equal to their income and the cost of federal support programs has zoomed to record proportions.

The American farmer, in effect, ends up subsidizing foreign countries, which find it more convenient to buy cheap U.S. food than to invest in their own self-sufficiency. American topsoil and water, used up to grow food, is sent off to places like the Soviet Union, China and Japan in the form of grains that those countries cannot produce in adequate amounts to feed their populations. Contrary to popular notions that American farmers are feeding the world's hungry, the bulk of the exports go to the more developed nations that can afford to pay cash.

U.S. taxpayers further subsidize these same clients by providing cheap irrigation water that adds to the agricultural bounty, and by underwriting the cost of the river transportation system and ports so vital to moving the grain.

Something obviously is very wrong with farming, American-style, and it's generating wide concern among policy makers. The $21 billion price tag of federal farm-support programs this year, in league with the political and social stress of agricultural recession, have ignited a full scale debate over the future of U.S. farm policy.

The issue takes on timeliness with a presidential election next year and with Congress scheduled to write a new four-year farm bill, the basic roadmap for agriculture, in 1985. Farm groups are holding policy forums. Secretary John R. Block this summer held a "summit" to get agri-business thinking about policy changes.

But with the exception of a few boat-rockers like Rep. James H. Weaver (Ore.), former Iowa Gov. Robert Ray and Walter W. Goeppinger, a respected Iowa farmer, most of the politicians, farm organization leaders and agribusiness executives who presume to speak for American farmers are talking and marching in lockstep.

As they have done virtually without exception for 25 years, they urge more exports as the most expedient way of unloading American surpluses. This approach became graven into policy after the Soviets made huge, unexpected grain purchases here in 1972. The Nixon administration urged farmers to expand their plantings and count on a continuing upward surge of income and exports.

The talk today points in the same direction: more market development, more credit gimmicks for the developing countries, more federal subsidization of exports, more vending of processed food overseas, more punitive measures against competing nations that are crowding American farmers out of their traditional "safe" markets.

For the sake of argument, let's call this bankrupt thinking, literally and figuratively.

The Carter administration, in its final days, suggested as much in its controversial "Time to Choose" study of the changing structure of U.S. farming. Exports in the 1980s, the report said, "will tend to have high additional costs—both for farmers . . . and in a broader social and economic sense, in raising food prices, intensifying the use of renewable and nonrenewable resources, and putting further stress on the environment." The entire report was so antithetical to market-oriented Reaganites that Block's USDA has allowed it to go out of print.

Farm exports unquestionably are important to the American economy and the foreign buyers who rely on U.S. farmers. Even with imports of roughly $16 billion worth of food this year, we will be left with an agricultural trade balance of $20 billion. That balance is crucial in the country's ability to pay for its oil and other necessities.

But basic questions remain avoided or unasked. For example, at what point do these export proceeds become diminishing returns? At what cost to the American natural resource base of rich soil and abundant water do we produce food for the world? Why should the American farmer be required to subsidize a world over which he has no control and which dictates his prices?

Congress, for one, and the Reagan administration, for another, have shown little inclination to grapple with questions of that sort in their debating of farm policy. Bright ideas get shot down with regularity. In 1981, for example, Weaver was virtually laughed out of the Agriculture Committee when he resurrected an idea he had floated on a number of occasions.

Arguing that export prices ought to reflect the stress on the natural resource base, Weaver wanted to create an export grain bank that would set an official U.S. price for commodities sold abroad. Free-marketeers were aghast at the idea of intruding in markets that way. Never mind that global agriculture is basically protectionist. Never mind that several other major exporting nations handle their agricultural sales through government boards, or through government-mandated price ceilings and subsidy programs.

Weaver's proposal was defeated in the Agriculture Committee, then voted down as a floor amendment after the big private grain-trading firms put out the word against it. He still picked up 135 votes.

Ray, the former Iowa governor, was so frustrated over the sight of his state's eroding topsoil being sluiced down the Mississippi that he raised the idea of a special tax on export crops to help pay for repair of the land. Ray left office early this year before he could follow up and his idea has gone to pasture.

More interesting, perhaps, is the thinking of Walter Goeppinger, an Iowa farmer who feels that the intense pressure put on the land by export farming may be the ruination of American agriculture. He worries about the ability of U.S. farmers to maintain markets if their best soil washes away.

What makes this important is that Goeppinger long has been a champion of expanded agricultural exports. He was a founder and president of the U.S. Feed Grains Council, which promotes overseas sales and new markets.

"Fence-to-fence, free-market-oriented policy has turned into an economic disaster for the farmer and a soil-loss tragedy for the nation," he wrote recently in the Des Moines Register. He proposed a mandatory idling of 20 percent of all soil used to produce field crops, resting the soil for three years by planting it in grass. In 15 years, all U.S. cropland would have been rested and rebuilt.

"A 20 percent cut in our crop acreage would still produce more than enough for the domestic needs of the United States and leave ample quantities of grain for export," he wrote "Foreign cash customers should be given first place at our export-buying window and credit customers could come after them in buying any that is left."

If the policymakers would stop and listen, they would understand that Weaver, Ray, Goeppinger and others like them are saying it is time for the United States to approach its most important industry with the same rationale the OPEC nations have applied to their petroleum. They justify their prices by arguing that their oil is a nonrenewable resource. Mine it, sell it, it's gone.

In agriculture, the rationale has tended to be the opposite: a bushel of wheat is a renewable resource. Grow it, sell it, grow it again, sell it again, but that is arguable. If the soil and water base is depleted, as is increasingly the case, the bushel of wheat becomes a nonrenewable resource.

There will be no cheap solutions, or easy answers, to the problems that American agriculture now faces. In seeking them, it will be necessary to consider the interests of a diverse group: consumers at home and abroad, and, above all, less developed nations for which America remains a granary of last resort. These groups have a common interest in seeing that American farmland remains as fruitful in the future as it is now. That hope will be threatened if unbridled exports continue to sell farmers down the river.●

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. JACOBS (at his own request), for September 30 and October 1, 1983, on account of district business.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DAUB) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. LATTA, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. PASHAYAN, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. WALKER, for 60 minutes, today.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. HAWKINS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 3263. An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 7 minutes p.m.), the House ajourned until tomorrow, Friday, September 30, 1983, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1919. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled the "Pension Equity Act of 1983" (H. Doc. No. 98-114); jointly, to the Committees on Education and Labor and Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

1920. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report on activities relating to the minting of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympic games coins; to the Committee on Banking Finance and Urban Affairs.

1921. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting the ninth annual report of the Department on the status of handicapped children in Head Start programs, pursuant to section 604(d) of Public Law 97-35; to the Committee on Education and labor.

1922. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting the Department's annual report covering fiscal year 1982 on the status and accomplishments of the runaway and homeless youth program, pursuant to section 315 of Public Law 93-415; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

1923. A letter from the Director, Office of Minority Economic Impact, Department of Energy, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 211(f) of the Department of Energy Organization Act to clarify the definition of the term "minority" for purposes of determining who is eligible for participation in the Department's Office of Minority Economic Impact (MI) programs; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1924. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of State, Intergovernmental and Legislative Affairs, transmitting a report of political contributions by Nicholas A. Veliotes, Ambassador-designate to Egypt, and members of his family, pursuant to section 304(b)(2) of Public Law 96-465; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1925. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of June 13, 1956 (70 Stat. 274), to delete the requirement for congressional review of contracts in excess of $200,000; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. DINGELL: Committee on Energy and Commerce. Allocation of budget totals to subcommittees under the first amendment budget resolution for fiscal year 1984. (Rept. No. 98-395). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MATSUI:

H.R. 4027. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to eliminate the mandatory retirement age for Tax Court judges; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUGHES (for himself, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. SHAW, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. RODINO, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. MICA, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. ALBOSTA, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. ROE, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. GLICKMAN, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. FEIGHAN, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. CHAPPIE, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. ORTIZ, Mr. PARRIS, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. AKAKA, and Mr. PRITCHARD):

H.R. 4028. A bill to amend the Drug Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act to revise the authority of the Office of Drug Abuse Policy, to establish a Deputy Director for Drug Abuse Prevention and a Deputy Director for Drug Enforcement in the Office, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on the Judiciary and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. BARNARD:

H.R. 4029. A bill to amend the Internal revenue Code of 1954 to provide that interest on Eurobonds sold outside the United States will not be subject to the 30-percent tax on interest received by foreign persons; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BROOKS (for himself, Mr. HORTON, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. BROWN of California):

H.R. 4030. A bill to authorize the continuation of the land remote sensing satellite program (Landsat), and to insure the U.S. role as the world leader in developing and utilizing land remote sensing space technology through the Landsat program; to the Committee on Science and Technology.

By Mrs. BURTON of California:

H.R. 4031. A bill to facilitate economic adjustment of communities, businesses, and workers; to require business concerns to give advance notice of plant closings and permanent layoffs; to provide assistance, including retraining, to dislocated workers, and for other purposes; jointly to the Committees on Education and Labor and Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. ERLENBORN (for himself, Mrs. ROUKEMA, Mr. CONABLE, Ms. FIEDLER, Mrs. HOLT, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska, Ms. Snowe, and Mrs. Vucanovich):

H.R. 4032 a bill to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to assure equity in the provision of retirement income, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Education and Labor.

By Mr. FASCELL:

H.R. 4033. A bill to amend title 28, United States Code, to provide for three additional district judges for the Southern District of Florida; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GLICKMAN:

H.R. 4034. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to require the Internal Revenue Service to notify State or local governments of sales of property seized from delinquent taxpayers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JACOBS:

H.R. 4035. A bill to suspend temporarily the duty on a certain chemical intermediate; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Ms. MIKULSKI:

H.R. 4036. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the establishment of, and the deduction of contributions to, education savings accounts; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. OBERSTAR:

H.R. 4037. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to require the States to identify areas which have water quality control problems as a result of pollution from nonpoint sources and to establish plans and priorities for controlling those problems, to provide assistance to the States for implementing such plans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. PAUL:

H.R. 4038. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to repeal the provision limiting nonbusiness casualty loss deductions to the amount by which such losses exceed 10 percent of adjusted gross income; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H.R. 4039. A bill to amend the Trade Act of 1974 and the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 to prohibit extensions of credit, credit guarantees, investment guarantees, or grants by any agency of the U.S. Government to any Communist country; jointly, to the Committee on Ways and Means and Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. BIAGGI, Ms. OAKAR, and Mr. BONKER):

H.R. 4040. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to permit negotiated rates with preferred providers under the medicare program and to permit group health care payors to provide for alternative rates with providers of health care, to provide for an intra-HMO competition demonstration project, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce.

By Ms. OAKAR:

H.J. Res. 377. Joint resolution designating the week of October 17, 1983, through October 24, 1983, as "National Adult Continuing Education Week"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. SMITH of New Jersey:

H.J. Res. 378. Joint resolution to designate December 1, 1983, as "National Civil Air Patrol Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. HILLIS:

H. Con. Res. 178. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress with respect to the urgency of extending the Japanese auto export restraints beyond March 31, 1984 at carry-over levels, without any exceptions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SAWYER:

H. Con. Res. 179. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress with regard to the defense responsibilities of the United States and Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SOLOMON:

H. Con. Res. 180. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning human rights in the People's Republic of China; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. EVANS of Illinois, Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. BEDELL, Mr.

SKEEN, Mr. STAGGERS, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, Mr. ERDREICH, and Mr. ENGLISH):

H.R. 2867

By Mr. ECKART:

—Page 58, after line 14, insert:

ADEQUACY OF CERTAIN GUIDELINES AND CRITERIA

SEC. 24A. (a) Subtitle D is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"ADEQUACY OF CERTAIN GUIDELINES AND CRITERIA

"SEC. 4010. (a) STUDY.—The Administrator shall conduct a study of the extent to which the guidelines and criteria under this Act (other than guidelines and criteria for facilities to which subtitle C applies) which are applicable to solid waste management and disposal facilities, including, but not limited to landfills and surface impoundments, are adequate to protect human health and the environment from groundwork contamination. Such study shall include a detailed assessment of the degree to which the criteria under section 1008(a) and the criteria under section 4004 regarding monitoring, prevention of contamination, and remedial action are adequate to protect groundwater and shall also include recommendation with respect to any additional enforcement authorities which the Administrator, in consultation with the Attorney General, deems necessary for such purposes.

"(b) REPORT.—Not later than 36 months after the date of the enactment of the Hazardous Waste Control and Enforcement Act of 1983, the Administrator shall submit a report to the Congress setting forth the results of the study required under this section, together with any recommendations made by the Administrator on the basis of such study.

"(c) REVISIONS OF GUIDELINES AND CRITERIA.—Following submission of the report required under subsection (b), the Administrator shall revise the guidelines and criteria referred to in subsection (a) to the extent necessary to insure that such guidelines and criteria are adequate to protect human health and the environment from ground water contamination.".

(b) The table of contents for such subtitle D is amended by adding the following new item at the end thereof:

"Sec. 4010. Adequacy of Certain Guidelines and Criteria".

And make the necessary conforming changes in the table of contents.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTE ON FEDERAL LANDS

SEC. 23A. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(1) USE OF FEDERAL LANDS FOR LAND DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTE.—(1) No Federal lands may be used for the treatment, storage or disposal of hazardous waste other than hazardous waste which is—

"(A) generated by a department or agency of the United States, or by a person or entity generating such waste in the course of carrying out a contract or other arrangement pursuant to a Federal project or program, or

"(B) obtained by the Administrator (or by any other person or entity acting pursuant to a contract or other arrangement with the Administrator)—

"(i) in the course of carrying out removal action under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980; or

"(ii) for the purpose of carrying out research relating to hazardous waste treatment.

Clause (i) of subparagraph (B) shall permit treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste on Federal lands only if the Administrator determines that there is no other reasonably available facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of such hazardous waste.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'Federal lands' means lands owned or leased by the United States other than—

"(A) lands on the Outer Continental Shelf, and

"(B) lands which are held in trust by the United States for an Indian or Indian tribe.".

And make the necessary conforming changes in the table of contents.

By Mr. MOLINARI:

DOMESTIC SEWAGE

SEC. 26. (a) DOMESTIC SEWAGE.—Subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"DOMESTIC SEWAGE

"SEC. 3014. (a) REPORT.—The Administrator shall, not later than 15 months after the enactment of the Hazardous Waste Control and Enforcement Act of 1983, submit a report to the Congress concerning those substances identified or listed under section 3001 which are not regulated under this subtitle by reason of the exclusion for mixtures of domestic sewage and other wastes that pass through a sewer system to a publicly owned treatment works. Such report shall include the types, size and number of generators which dispose of such substances in this manner, the types and quantities disposed of in this manner, and the identification of significant generators, wastes, and waste constituents not regulated under existing Federal law or regulations in a manner sufficient to protect human health and the environment.

"(b) REVISIONS OF REGULATIONS.—Within 18 months after submitting the report specified in subsection (a), the Administrator shall revise existing regulations and promulgate such additional regulations pursuant to this subtitle (or any other available authority) as are necessary to ensure that substances identified or listed under section 3001 which pass through a sewer system to a publicly owned treatment works are adequately controlled to protect human health and the environment.

"(c) REPORT ON WASTEWATER LAGOONS.—The Administrator shall, within 36 months after enactment of the Hazardous Waste Control and Enforcement Act of 1983, submit a report to Congress concerning wastewater lagoons at publicly owned treatment works and their effect on groundwater quality. Such report shall include:

"(1) the number and size of such lagoons;

"(2) the types and quantities of waste contained in such lagoons;

"(3) the extent to which such waste has been or may be released from such lagoons and contaminated groundwater; and

"(4) available alternatives for preventing or controlling such releases.

The Administrator may utilize the authority of sections 3007 and 3013 for the purpose of completing such report.

"(d) APPLICATION OF SECTION 3010(a) AND SECTION 3007.—The provisions of section 3007 and 3010 shall apply to solid or dissolved materials in domestic sewage to the same extent and in the same manner as such provisions apply to hazardous waste.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO SECTIONS 3007 AND 3010.—(1) Section 3007 is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(e) APPLICATION TO SOLID OR DISSOLVED MATERIALS IN DOMESTIC SEWAGE.—The provision of this section shall apply to solid or dissolved materials in domestic sewage to the same extent and in the same manner as such provisions apply to hazardous waste.".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

DEFICITS BLOCK ECONOMIC RECOVERY

HON. LES AuCOIN
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 28, 1983

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, as I travel through the First Congressional District in Oregon, the question most often asked by millworkers in Toledo, by fishermen in Astoria, and by small businessmen in Beaverton is this, Is the recovery going to be a strong one, is it going to be sustainable, and is it one that can bring us out of one of the deepest economic holes we have been in for decades?

When we look at the statistics of what we have been through in terms of bank failures, financial institutions which have been merged, jobs which have been lost, some of which, frankly, will never come back, I think we have paid a very dear price to reach this point at which we might just be able to see economic recovery.

Those who have survived the recession have every right to expect a recovery that rewards them for one of the sharpest sacrifices the economy has been put through in decades. And I believe the recovery can be sustained. I believe the policymakers in Congress and in the executive branch owe those who have survived by being as skillful as they have during this recession a recovery which rewards their enterprise and nurtures those who are picking up the pieces now and are trying to put it all back together again.

But to be quite frank, Mr. Speaker, there is one thing standing in the way of a prolonged and sustained economic recovery—deficits. Structural deficits, deficits which are estimated, conservatively, at $200 billion. Not only this year, but next year, the year after that, and, in David Stockman's words, as far forward into the future as the eye can see. These Federal budget deficits have driven up interest rates, which have in turn devasted the automobile industry, the housing industry, the wood products industry, and other credit sensitive businesses.

This is a problem which knows no political bounds. It does not matter whether you are a Republican or a Democrat. It does not matter whether your world revolves around capital formation or whether it revolves around providing social services to help the needy. Neither of those things will happen if budget deficits of $200 billion are allowed to occur. If, in 5 years' time, we amass an additional $1 trillion to the national debt, on top of the current accumulated $1 trillion debt, neither of those things will occur. Neither of those things will occur if Government borrowing absorbs 78 percent of the total savings pool of this country, which is where we will be if our deficits grow unabated.

You cannot help your fellow man and you cannot form capital to get the business machinery of this country going if debt service alone becomes one of the major items in the Federal budget. And neither of those things will happen if interest rates destroy the principal source of wealth needed to make this country the kind of society I think we all want it to be. This is why I feel it is so important for responsible Members of both parties to join in an effort to bring our fiscal policy under control. If we fail in this effort, or even worse if we continue on our present course as if there were no problem, we will be courting a financial and economic crisis which will shred the social fabric of this country, making the riots of the 1960's and 1970's look like small potatoes.

And what stands in the way of decisive action which can reduce the size of the deficits which loom on the horizon? There has certainly been no lack of ideas as to how the deficit can best be reduced.

My conservative friends suggest that we only need to cut nondefense discretionary spending further in order to bring the budget into balance, although with the magnitude of the deficits which we face you could shut down every function of the Federal Government with the exception of the Department of Defense and the Social Security Administration and still face a $20 to $30 billion deficit. Some would even advocate amending the Constitution to require balanced budgets as if by magic that would provide the votes to pass legislation which will cut these deficits.

My liberal friends, on the other hand, similarly refuse to consider changes in entitlement programs which will be necessary to provide the substantial savings needed to reduce the deficit. There are still too many sacred cows, despite substantial budget cuts, in the area of domestic spending.

What we have on our hands is a state of paralysis, legislative gridlock, in which the political muscle of various factions within both political parties has been applied skillfully enough to bring both sides to this state of paralysis.

It is imperative that something be done to break through. There are dogmas on both sides of the aisle which must be broken. Something has to give.

But if we can form a Presidential commission to deal with the impossible task of social security, and we did, and if we can form a Presidential commission to deal with the intractable and vexing problems of Central America, and we have, and if we can form a Presidential commission to deal with strategic forces—the Scowcroft Commission—which we have done, then it seems to me there is an argument for using this secret weapon on the most critical problem facing not only the domestic structure of this Nation's economy and strength, but also, ultimately, its foreign strength as well.

We should be able to bring the leadership together from both parties, in the executive branch and on Capitol Hill, and have a national commission composed in a way that represents balance to come forward with a deficit reduction package which will be balanced and, most importantly, will command the support necessary to pass both the House and the Senate.

Some would say that this approach circumvents the committee system and the budget process established to deal with this matter.

I would answer, first of all, that this simply would not be the case. Any set of legislative recommendations proposed by such a commission would come before the Congress and be referred to the appropriate committees. While significant alterations could upset the balance struck by such a commission, the Congress would still have the opportunity to work its will.

Second, I would say that the problem we face is extraordinary in nature. Its solution requires extraordinary steps be taken.

I feel a solution to this is critical and I am alarmed by the prospect that the inertia which has set in will continue. This is why, today, I am introducing a joint resolution setting up such a commission. Patterned after the National Commission on Social Security Reform, the National Commission for a Responsible Budget calls upon the President, the Senate majority leader, and the Speaker of the House to nominate a 15-member commission charged with reviewing all elements of fiscal and monetary policy with particular emphasis on the causes of the cyclical and structural budget deficits and come forward with a set of options for the President and the Congress.

This is the most difficult task facing Congress, and the most important. I urge my colleagues who may be interested in breaking this gridlock and setting up such a commission to contact me and cosponsor this resolution. It is crucial that we act now.●

THE DENVER POST: "JAMES WATT SHOULD RESIGN"

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 28, 1983

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the Denver Post has been one of James Watt's most consistent supporters during his tour of duty as Interior Secretary.

Today, the Denver Post had enough and called for Mr. Watt to step down.

The editorial, "The Record Is Clear: James Watt Should Resign," September 28, 1983, follows:

[From the Denver Post, Sept. 28, 1983]

THE RECORD IS CLEAR: JAMES WATT SHOULD RESIGN

James Watt's big moment has arrived.

He can now step to front and center, with the klieg lights focused on his familiar profile, and, after a long and laborious explanation that places primary blame with the media, announce that he has resigned.

Somehow, in the season of the Emmy's, it's all appropriate.

It became clear several months ago that Watt must be jettisoned from the Reagan cockpit if the 1984 mission were to be completed.

However, Watt refused to bow out without applause. He needed the recognition of center stage. That, essentially, was Watt's problem. The stage meant more to him than the job.

For months, he has declared that he would resign as interior secretary "when I become a burden to President Reagan."

It is interesting to note that the secretary's loyalties were with the political office, not with the public interest and not with his employees in the Deparment of Interior.

Accordingly, what Watt had to say as a public official—whether he prefers John Phillip Sousa to the Beach Boys or whether he feels freed or persecuted as a born-again Christian—all were more important to him than the task assigned him by President Reagan. His primary job was to serve as the chief trustee of our lands, and he crassly manipulated that job into a personal political soapbox for unrelated causes.

After four years of pro-environmentalism by his predecessor, Cecil D. Andrus, Watt assumed a mandate from President Reagan's smashing election victories in the public-land states. He unwisely translated Reagan's general-election promises into a policy sympathetic to commercial developers of the public domain, and into a forum of personal political views.

But there were many reasons Westerners favored Ronald Reagan over Jimmy Carter, and few of those reasons had anything to do with advancing commercial development of the public lands, which Secretary Watt has adopted as a mandate.

Most Western resource experts and Interior officials agree that he has been a good administrator—he "runs a tight ship" and he deserves credit for launching an ambitious program to develop offshore oil and gas resources. With a third of this nation's oil supply coming from abroad, it is clear that domestic energy development is in the public interest.

But Watt has not been effective in his overall administration of the public lands.

While he launched an ambitious restoration of facilities in the national parks, he did so at the cost of a sharp reduction in the purchase of additional tracts. And in one case, his aides are advocating that those facilities be made available—for the first time—to wild-game hunters licensed to kill in the national parks of Alaska.

Watt boasts that he has "not leased any wilderness" for mineral development, but the fact is that House Democrats blocked him from doing so.

Meanwhile, he has increasingly used his Interior post as a pulpit to attack his critics, to orchestrate fundamentalist statements on such highly-charged issues as abortion and to overstate his policies on Indian tribes.

The secretary also found time to precipitate a selfish feud with Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., one of the most powerful men in Congress.

Although his responsibility was to administer the public resources, he approached the job as the regulator of a mythical corporation, intent on dismantling a "monopoly" that unfairly held title to vast resources. Such rash conduct equates to a misuse of the high trust delivered into his hands by President Reagan and the U.S. Senate in early 1981.

If Watt possessed some irreplaceable genius in the governance of public deeds, our judgment might be different. But he has posted no such record. His record as administrator of our resources is, at best, mediocre. Additionally, there are his repeated, tasteless forays into misguided humor.

If all this were incidental, it might be different. But it is intentional. In his many public appearances, Watt plainly has enjoyed his self-perceived role as Reagan's court jester. While he clearly delighted in creating statements to taunt the press over the past few months, he will now blame the press for his demise.

Watt knew where he was going on his carefully mapped journey to resignation. Unfortunately, he had little regard for the Interior Department in the process. While he was conducting his sideshow comedy act, there were legions of dedicated bureaucrats, forest managers and park rangers who were out in the field dutifully doing their jobs. They were managing the public resources according to the laws of the land.

James Watt lost sight of that duty.

He was busy on the lecture circuit, creating the controversy that newspaper cartoonists survive on. He was in the headlines. He was playing to the radical right. He was the last remanant of the Reagan campaign. He was loving every minute of it.

Unfortunately, he also was the director of Interior, our ambassador—our representive—in Washington.

And he didn't represent us very effectively.

James Watt was entrusted with the custody of America's coal reserves, its timberlands and its grazing pastures, its scenic vistas, its grand canyons and its majestic mountains. But he chose, instead, to worry about whether he was becoming a political liability to his president, and he measured his performance by that yardstick.

Watt not only has burdened his president, but he has burdened the nation and the West as well.

He should now do his president a favor—and, coincidentally, as he sees it, he should do us all a favor—and resign immediately. Let's get on with the serious business of protecting our public resources.●

A BILL TO EXEMPT EUROBOND INTEREST FROM TAXATION

HON. DOUG BARNARD, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation that would amend the Internal Revenue Code by permitting U.S. corporations to sell so-called Eurobonds, on a tax-free basis, to foreign persons directly from the United States. Present tax law requires that Eurobonds be sold only through Netherlands Antilles finance subsidiaries if the interest is to be exempt from the 30-percent withholding tax normally imposed on U.S. source income sent abroad. The ability to sell Eurobonds on a tax-free basis is vitally important to hundreds of U.S. corporations as a relatively low-cost method of raising capital in foreign markets. Total Eurobond debt currently stands at approximately $40 billion.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that use of the Netherlands Antilles for issuing Eurobonds creates enormous tax compliance problems for the Internal Revenue Service and results in a huge loss each year to the U.S. Treasury. This is because the Netherlands Antilles is the world's principal tax haven/tax secrecy jurisdiction and is being utilized by U.S. residents and third country "treaty shoppers" to evade payment of billions of dollars of U.S. taxes on income earned in the United States. The Antilles tax haven status derives from its tax treaty with the United States—a treaty that our Treasury Department has been trying, unsuccessfully, to renegotiate for the past 3 years. The Antilles has been able to resist efforts to tighten the treaty against tax abusers precisely because it is the only jurisdiction from which Eurobonds can currently be sold on a tax-free basis to foreign purchasers. If the United States terminates the treaty, interest paid on Eurobonds will be taxable and U.S. corporations will be forced to pay unacceptably high and inflationary interest rates to foreign purchasers of their debt.

The legislation I am introducing today—which draws on extensive hearings held into the tax haven issue by the House Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee, which I chair—eliminates the need for Antillean finance subsidiaries by permitting the direct sale of Eurobonds on a tax-free basis. It would therefore permit the U.S. Government to cancel our tax treaty with the Antilles if secrecy abuses—which shield the identities of U.S. investors—are not ended and it would result in the recapture of an estimated billion dollars a year in tax revenues.

My legislation is distinguishable from a similar bill introduced by our colleagues SAM GIBBONS and BARBER CONABLE in that mine exempts from taxation only interest on Eurobonds. Their legislation would create new categories of tax-exempt U.S. source interest income, at an annual loss of approximately $100 million. By contrast, my legislation creates no new tax exemptions. Their bill would produce a net tax gain of approximately $35 million. My bill would produce a net tax gain of $120 million.

So that Members can fully understand the need for this amendment to the Internal Revenue Code, I am attaching a brief memo describing the problems the bill seeks to resolve and explaining the differences between this bill and the Gibbons/Conable bill.

I. THE TAX COMPLIANCE PROBLEM

The Treasury Department has been trying for the past 3 years to revise the United States-Netherlands Antilles income tax treaty so as to prevent tax evasion on U.S. source income by Americans and by third country treaty shoppers who invest here through "bearer share" Antillean corporations and financial accounts. The negotiations have been stalemated for one overriding reason: Under the treaty, the Antilles is the only country in the world through which the finance subsidiaries of hundreds of major U.S. corporations can sell Eurobonds to foreign persons on a tax-free basis. If Treasury were to cancel the treaty, the Internal Revenue Code would require the immediate imposition of a 30-percent withholding tax on the interest income from future sales of Eurobonds and from the $40 billion currently outstanding. This would shrink the Eurobond market—a major source of capital for U.S. corporations—increase interest costs to American Eurobond issuers and otherwise cause a dislocation in U.S. capital markets.

However, my bill amending the Internal Revenue Code—exempting from taxation interest paid on Eurobonds issued directly by U.S. corporations to foreign bonds holders—would remove the leverage now enjoyed by the Antilles over the treaty negotiations and allow Treasury to cancel the treaty if nonabuse provisions are not significantly strengthened. Approval is desirable for several related reasons:

First. The U.S. Treasury could begin to collect $1 billion or more a year in revenue now lost because Antillean secrecy laws shield from the IRS the beneficial owners of taxable U.S. source income. Moreover, the U.S. Treasury should gain an additional $120 million annually in tax revenues—the dollar value of tax credits American corporations currently receive for taxes paid the Antillean Government by their Antillean finance subsidiaries, according to a leading U.S. investment banking firm;

Second. Because the United States-Netherlands Antilles treaty already exempts from taxation Eurobond interest paid to foreigners, the amendment would not cause any new tax loss to the U.S. Treasury; and Third. Direct issuance of Eurobond by American corporations would eliminate the need for and significant costs of Antillean finance subsidiaries and result in substantial savings to U.S. firms issuing such bonds.

The Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer, and Monetary Affairs, which I chair, has extensively investigated and on April 12 and 13, 1983, held hearings into the use of the Netherlands Antilles for tax evasion purposes by U.S. taxpayers and foreign persons subject to U.S. taxation. The hearing record, including internal IRS and Florida Department of Law Enforcement documents, demonstrates the following:

First, $1 billion or more per year in taxes go uncollected because thousands of U.S. and foreign persons not resident in the Antilles use that offshore country to escape taxes on U.S. source income;

Second, as a result of three factors—the United States-Antilles tax treaty provisions eliminating or reducing withholding on U.S. source income; the strict Antilles secrecy laws which shield the indentities and financial transactions of beneficial owners of U.S. source income; and, the low or zero rate of Antillean taxes on financial transactions emanating from or passing through the country—the Netherlands Antilles has become the world's largest tax haven jurisdiction for U.S. residents and treaty shoppers seeking to evade payment of U.S. taxes. In 1981, $1.4 billion in U.S. source income reported to IRS was sent to the Antilles. The effective tax rate on this U.S. source income was only 1.85 percent—$26 million out of $1.4 billion. Had the regular 30-percent withholding been applied to this income, it would have produced more than $400 million in tax revenues to the United States. Even these figures greatly understate U.S. source income sent to the Antilles and the potential tax loss to the Treasury, because income reports sent to IRS exclude all interest paid by financial institutions, real estate capital gains, and, of course, all income earned in the $300 billion underground economy; and Third, the Antilles has systematically failed to cooperate in a meaningful way with IRS and State law enforcement authorities on tax fraud and tax evasion cases.

II. COMPARISON WITH THE GIBBONS-CONABLE BILL, H.R. 3025

The essential difference is that my bill would exempt only interest on Eurobonds. Gibbons-Conable would exempt from taxation almost all types of interest payments. I believe my bill is preferable for the following reasons:

First. The Gibbons-Conable bill would create a new tax loss to the U.S. Treasury of $91.5 million per year, based on 1980 data. The 1983 annual tax loss would likely be in excess of $100 million. Future tax losses could be substantially greater. By contrast, my bill would result in no additional tax loss because Eurobond interest paid through Antillean finance subsidiaries is already tax-exempt.

The overall effect of Gibbons-Conable would be a net tax gain to the Treasury of approximately $35 million. By contrast, my bill would produce a new tax gain of approximately $120 million.

Second. By creating additional tax loopholes—for no valid public policy purposes—during a period of looming budget deficits, Gibbons-Conable will attract substantial political and public opposition. By contrast, my bill does not carry such political liabilities.

Third. The administration's support for a tax exemption for Eurobond interest seems to be predicated primarily on its desire to remove from the Netherlands Antilles, leverage over the treaty negotiations. Gibbons-Conable does this but with the serious liability of creating new tax exemptions and losses.

These points are enumerated below in more detail.

TAX REVENUE LOSS UNDER GIBBONS-CONABLE BILL

IRS data for 1980 show that $96.1 million of tax revenue was collected by IRS from U.S. paying agents on interest income paid to foreign persons. Of this amount, $78.5 million would have been lost—not collected—if Gibbons-Conable, as presently written, were enacted. This is because the Gibbons-Conable bill exempts from taxation the following categories of interest income paid to foreign persons:

[Tax loss in millions, 1980]

1. Interest on U.S. real property mortgages	$11.5
2. Interest on corporate bonds, U.S. Treasury securities and other general interest payments	65.0
3. Miscellaneous interest such as that paid by a U.S.-based branch of a foreign corporation	2.0
Total tax loss	78.5

In addition to the tax revenue IRS collects from U.S. paying agents on interest income paid to foreign persons, certain tax treaty countries such as Switzerland collect and remit to IRS additional tax revenue on income received by persons in the treaty country at treaty reduced tax rates who are ineligible to receive the reduced rates. The amount of tax remitted to IRS by U.S. tax treaty countries applicable to interest income during 1980 that would be exempt from taxation under the Gibbons-Conable bill was about $13 million.

As a result, the total tax revenue loss for 1980 that would have occurred under the Gibbons-Conable bill is $91.5 million.

NO TAX LOSS UNDER THE BARNARD BILL

My bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code would not result in any tax revenue loss because Eurobond interest income paid to foreign persons is now exempt under the United States-Netherlands Antilles tax treaty. Furthermore, there are very good tax compliance reasons for including the Eurobond interest exemption in the Internal Revenue Code, while no similar justification exists for exempting from taxation the other types of interest under the Gibbons-Conable bill as noted below:

First. The cost-benefit justification for including in the Internal Revenue Code a tax exemption for Eurobond interest paid to foreign persons instead of through the Antilles Tax Treaty as is now done—is that U.S. companies could issue Eurobonds without having to incur the cost of establishing and maintaining finance subsidiaries in The Netherlands Antilles. No similar costs are incurred by corporations for the other types of interest that would be tax-exempt under Gibbons-Conable.

Second. From a tax compliance point of view, allowing direct issuance of Eurobonds would remove the major hurdle that now prevents the Treasury Department from terminating the Antilles Tax Treaty. Treaty termination would enable IRS to track down tax cheats who now use the Antilles to evade U.S. income taxes. No comparable advantage is obtained by exempting other types of interest from taxation, as proposed in Gibbons-Conable.

Third. One final point—since both the Gibbons-Conable bill and my bill would eliminate the need for U.S. companies to maintain Antilles finance subsidiaries, Morgan-Stanley of New York estimates there would be a tax saving of $120-million annually since U.S. companies would no longer be able to offset against their U.S. tax liability the foreign tax credits attributed to their Antilles finance subsidiaries. As a result, Morgan-Stanley, and the Treasury Department estimate that passage of the Gibbons-Conable bill will result in a net revenue gain to the Treasury of $35 to $50 million—$120-million foreign tax credit savings minus the $78.5-million tax loss on interest income exempted under the bill. This revenue gain estimate does not include the loss under Gibbons-Conable of $13 million in taxes collected by and remitted to the United States by our tax treaty partners. However, my bill would result in a tax revenue gain of the entire $120 million because no interest income presently taxed would be made exempt.●

THE PENSION EQUITY ACT OF 1983

HON. JOHN N. ERLENBORN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation on behalf of the administration entitled the "Pension Equity Act of 1983." I am pleased that Representatives ROUKEMA, CONABLE, FIEDLER, HOLT, JOHNSON, MARTIN of Illinois, SCHNEIDER, SMITH of Nebraska, SNOWE, and VUCANOVICH are joining as original sponsors of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to state at the outset of my remarks that the legislation I am introducing today contains provisions comparable in scope to those in S. 19, the Retirement Equity Act, which was introduced by Senator DOLE. It is also similar in many respects to H.R. 2100, the Private Pension Reform Act of 1983.

As you and my colleagues already know, women, as a group, have traditionally received a lower level of retirement income than men for a number of reasons. Further, married women are often dependent on their husband's pensions for retirement income. In many cases, however, the wife never receives any of the husband's retirement pension. This may be due to divorce or because the husband elected not to provide survivor coverage for his wife. The legislation that is being introduced today is designed to correct some of these inequities.

Specifically, the Pension Equity Act of 1983 does the following:

First, lowers the minimum age of participation under ERISA from 25 to 21;

Second, lowers the minimum age for vesting under ERISA from 22 to 21;

Third, insures that individuals on maternity or paternity leave would not incur a 1 year break in service for participation and vesting;

Fourth, requires that joint and survivor benefits be the normal form of benefits even if an individual continues working past the plan's early retirement age;

Fifth, requires that the election out of joint and survivor converage must have the consent of the spouse;

Sixth, requires that in the case of a divorce after a joint and survivor annuity starts, the ex-spouse be eligible to receive survivor benefits;

Seventh, repeals the ERISA requirement allowing a plan to void an election of joint and survivor benefits if the participant dies within 2 years of the election;

Eighth, requires that a joint and survivor annuity be the normal form of benefit payout for any plan which offers an annuity as an optional form of benefit payment;

Ninth, provides that a spouse can directly attach the employee's pension in child support, alimony, and marital property cases and requires that the plan, to the extent the court orders, split the participant spouse's pension account between the divorced husband and wife, and provide the nonparticipant ex-spouse with the option for an annuity based on her own life expectancy—at the plan's early retirement date for the participant;

Tenth, requires that individual benefit statements include a notice to participants that vested benefits may be forfeited upon death; and

Eleventh, increases the level at which plans may cash out benefits from $1,750 to $3,500.

Mr. Speaker, while I fully support the thrust of the administration's proposal, I am, however, concerned about two specific provisions. First, I am greatly concerned that lowering the participation age from 25 to 21 will substantially and unnecessarily increase the administrative costs for certain plans, particularly those in industries such as retail sales. As you know, industries such as these experience a high turnover of employees at young ages, and most of these employees will not stay long enough to become vested and receive benefits.

Rather than forcing plans to unnecessarily increase their paperwork burden and PBGC premiums, I would like my colleagues to consider a provision which would provide plans of the defined benefit type with an option to age 21 participation but which would also provide the same benefit and vesting as age 21 participation. This alternative which a defined benefit plan would have to elect, would require pension benefit accruals to be credited for service from age 21, but such accruals would not have to be granted until age 25—the current law minimum age of participation. This would allow plans to avoid burdensome paperwork for employees who may only work a short period of time and leave before vesting, but would still provide employees who stay with benefit credit for those years. This proposal would accomplish the same goal as the administration's bill but at what I believe to be a lower adminstrative cost. This is important if we are to continue to encourage the improvement and expansion of defined benefit plans.

The other provision that I am concerned about is one which changes the court ruling in BBS Associates; that is, requiring that the joint and survivor annuity requirement be the normal form of benefit payment. Here, Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned that reversing this decision might result in plans abandoning any annuity options in order to avoid the joint and survivor annuity requirement. This could create far greater harm to participants and their beneficiaries than the help this provision is intended to provide. I fear that defined contribution plans may become just glorified savings accounts paying lump sums, rather than provide the monthly retirement income such plans now pay or should be paying.

While the bill is improved technically over similar legislation introduced to date, I invite comments from all parties concerned in order to make the legislation as beneficial to participants and as workable to plans as possible.

Mr. Speaker, while I have concerns about the two aforementioned provisions, I believe that the time has come to eliminate those provisions in pension law which could be considered to treat women workers and beneficiaries unfairly. The Pension Equity Act of 1983 represents a reasonable and responsible approach to achieving the goal of enhanced pension equity for the growing number of women workers and beneficiaries dependent on private pensions for their retirement income security.●

PENSION EQUITY ACT OF 1983

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join as an original cosponsor of the Pension Equity Act of 1983, sponsored by my distinguished colleague JOHN ERLENBORN on behalf of the administration. While there may be some room for improvement, which I will discuss later, I consider this bill a significant step toward removing the existing inequities in the pension laws.

Several months ago, I and other Republican Congresswomen began meeting with the White House to address issues of economic equity for women. One of the key issues was the need to address pension equity issues. Shortly thereafter, the administration agreed to a comprehensive review and this measure is the product of that policy analysis. The President is to be commended for this, as I believe this legislative proposal will be a crucial factor in expediting needed reforms.

The problem this bill addresses is one that principally affects one particular segment of our population: women of retirement age. It is disturbing to note that 81 percent of all women over the age of 65 who live alone are living in poverty. While there is no single reason for this, the fact that less than 10 percent of all surviving spouses receive pension benefits is certainly a major contributing factor. The importance of a pension is underscored by the fact that, while 32 percent of those who receive only social security benfits are at or below the poverty level, only 98 percent of those receiving social security and pension benefits are above that level. This is one measurement of the so-called feminization of poverty.

Nevertheless, we cannot ignore the progress that has been made overall in pension coverage for both men and women. Since 1958, the percent of private sector employees covered by pension plans has grown from 32.4 percent to 50 percent. In addition, with enactment of ERISA in 1974, some progress was made for women with the inclusion of provisions such as that which requires credit to be given for service before a "maternity leave" (under certain conditions). In addition, any pension plan which offers benefits in the form of an annuity must also offer a "joint and survivor annuity" option, which provides continuation of benefits for the employee's spouse after the worker has died and must provide that option to a married employee unless he or she specifically indicates otherwise.

This bill contains several major equity reforms in the area of joint and survivor annuities:

For an employee to opt not to receive a joint and survivor benefit, that employee's spouse would have to provide witnessed or notarized consent;

The minimum age of participation and vesting in a pension plan would be lowered from 25 (participation) and 22 (vesting) to 21 in both cases;

An employee on maternity or paternity leave would, under certain conditions, continue to receive vesting credit in the pension plan; and Survivor benefits would be required to be paid to a divorced ex-spouse as long as the divorce did not take place until after the annuity starting date. These and other provisions of the bill would correct many of the inequities in the existing law.

However, the bill does not adequately address another situation which I believe calls for additional action. That is the situation of the spouse of the vested employee who has died prior to the beginning of the annuity payments. The surviving spouse receives nothing unless the employee took a qualified joint and survivor benefit option, which is normally only available when the employee reaches the age of 55.

In other words, an employee could begin working for an employer at the age of 25, vest at the age of 35, and die at the age of 55 and the surviving spouse would receive absolutely no portion of those vested benefits. Meanwhile, she may have been doing her own work in the home, which leaves her without a husband, pension, or any other form of income support. True, she may receive an insurance payment which may tide her over for a couple of years but, by the time she reaches the age where the annuity would have begun, that insurance money is gone.

I believe that reform in this aspect of pension inequity must be addressed and resolved by this committee prior to congressional action.●

THE PENSION EQUITY ACT OF 1983

HON. BARBER B. CONABLE, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with a number of my colleagues today in introducing the Pension Equity Act of 1983, the administration proposal to provide greater equity in retirement income for women.

As an original sponsor of the Women's Equity Act earlier this year, I welcome this indication of the willingness of the administration to become involved with this important issue. In sponsoring the administration's proposal, I do not necessarily endorse all its provisions and recognize there are differences with the earlier measure. But the important first step is to address these issues actively and the administration bill contributes to that progress.

I am pleased that the administration is offering the Pension Equity Act of 1983 and am confident it will add to the necessary dialog among the interested parties that can result in substantive pension reform legislation.●

SYNTHETIC FUELS WITHOUT THE CORPORATION

HON. TOM CORCORAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, next week the Fossil and Synthetic Fuels

Subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee will hold hearings on the issue of the role of the Federal Government in the synthetic fuels industry. Discussion of the U.S. Synthetic Fules Corporation will undoubtedly be part of these hearings. A recent Wall Street Journal editorial draws attention to the fact that private industry can and will build sensible synfuels projects without assistance from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation or any other Federal agency:

The editorial follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 22, 1983]

SINFUL SUBSIDIES

The nation's first coal-gasification synthetic-fuels plant is now coming on stream in Kingsport, Tenn. The project is on time and on budget. But the really amazing part is that it has been done without a dime of government money.

Tennessee Eastman, a unit of Eastman Kodak, will use the plant to convert about 900 tons of coal a day into chemicals for Kodak film and other plastic products. The project, built by Bechtel, is estimated by industry observers to cost about $300 million and was planned in 1978-1979 on the basis of $12-a-barrel oil; at the current oil price of $29 a barrel, the Kodak project may be highly profitable.

If Kodak can build a profitable, privately financed synfuels project, why does anyone else need government funding? Is there any genuine need for the grossly over-funded federal U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp., to provide tax dollars for energy projects?

For instance, SFC already has provided $120 million in guarantees for the Cool Water Coal Gasification Project in Daggett, Calif. That project, being built by a consortium led by Texaco, will use a similar coal-gasification technique as the Tennessee Eastman, although it will produce electricity instead of chemicals. Another project getting government help is an oil-shale plant being built by Union Oil near Parachute, Colo. Under a 10-year price-guarantee contract now administered by SFC, the project will supply diesel and aviation fuel for the Defense Department at a floor price of $42.50 a barrel, indexed for inflation.

SFC is eagerly trying to dole out what remains of its $14.9 billion in Phase I appropriations, due to end next June 30, before it can ask Congress for the rest of its $88 billion authorization. It recently signed letters of intent for four projects amounting to about $2.75 billion in loan and price guarantees.

Kodak has found that it can build a synfuels plant without government funds and still turn a profit. Other companies are turning to the federal dole to build their plant, while many major oil companies have simply abandoned synfuels as viable projects despite the availability of SFC monies.

All of this confirms what we thought all along—that there is no need for a federal synfuels program. If these energy projects are economical, industry will finance them. If not, taxpayers will be out a lot of money. If Congress really wants to make a dent in the deficit, here's a good place to start.●

WINDS OF WAR

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the following oped piece to the attention of my colleagues. The piece, from the Wall Street Journal, Monday, September 26, 1983, is entitled "Winds of War," and deserves special attention, particularly its comments concerning the recent speech given by Under Secretary of Defense Fred Ikle, which calls for a victory for the forces of democracy in Latin America.

WINDS OF WAR

We suspect Americans were shocked by the Soviet murder of the 269 people on KAL Flight 007 for reasons going beyond horror. There is a subdued awareness that our conflicts with the Soviets in two arenas, Lebanon and Central America, are becoming more dangerous. And doubts, reminiscent of the Vietnam era, exist over whether the U.S. is capable of sufficient national resolve to cope with the latest Soviet manifestations of aggressiveness.

There is fear of new embarrassment, an ignominious Marine withdrawal from Beirut, for example, or a Bay of Pigs debacle for the anti-communists we are supporting in Nicaragua. American democracy's traditional distaste for war and the American left's award of moral standing to communist "wars of national liberation" also have helped thwart "consensus." The uncertainties have been manifested in Congress, which before the KAL shootdown was flagrantly hostile towards Nicaraguan anti-communists. Even now, it has just severely restricted the ability of the Marines in Lebanon to influence the outcome of the fighting there.

The fight in Lebanon has the most potential for embarrassment, but thanks to the strong presence of the Israelis, less potential for serious harm to U.S. interests. A U.S. failure in Central America, however, will be far more damaging, forcing national leaders south of the Rio Grande to seek accommodation with the Soviet-Cuban axis, thus diminishing U.S. security. It also need not happen.

The debate over whether to employ military power in this region often has been presented as pro-war vs. anti-war. So-called hawks are seldom credited with their basic premise, that a strong posture reduces rather than increases the chances for a broadened conflict. Lately, however, the debate has been getting clearer definition.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, Jimmy Carter's hawk, spoke recently in Ottawa about the centuries-old expansionist impulses of the Great Russian people, who today number about 135 million but are the dominant nationality in a Eurasian empire of 385 million. (Surrogate regimes guided by Russian commissars control other millions in Cuba, Africa, the Middle East and Southeast Asia.)

As an economic and political cripple, Russia has little to offer the world. But its growing ability—and perhaps willingness—to project military power, a result of weapons modernization and airlift expansion, threatens major disruption of other political and economic systems. Mr. Brzezinski believes Soviet disruption will become more serious, and particularly so in the Middle East and Central America, unless the U.S. learns to cope with it effectively.

Eileen Scully, a Heritage Foundation analyst, sees the Soviet-Cuban conquest of Nicaragua as having greatly emboldened Fidel Castro and the Russians. Their hopes of greater influence in the Caribbean Basin and South America had often been thwarted—by the utter failure of Allende's economic policies in Chile, by a similar disaster for the military left in Peru, by government strength in Venezuela and Colombia, and by the power of the people at the ballot box in Jamaica, to cite a few examples. Holding the Nicaraguan beachhead and expanding it to El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras thus have become major Soviet-Cuban goals.

Congress after the KAL shootdown seems less receptive to the Boland-Dodd efforts to undermine Nicaraguan anti-communists and that is progress of a sort, American liberals—at least those who can see some connection between the murder of airline passengers and the murder of Nicaraguan Indians—may finally be losing, albeit slowly, their romantic vision of war in Central America as a peasants' war. It has never been. The assaults are being conducted by well-armed professionals trained in Cuba and the Soviet Union, using deception and intimidation to recruit young fighters on the scene. These cadres, often multinational in makeup, are part of a world-wide war-making conglomerate encompassing the PLO, the M-19 in Colombia, the Tupamaros of Uruguay, the Montoneros in Argentina and dozens of others. They are not trying to win the hearts and minds of people, they are trying to subjugate people, using time-honored methods employed successfully against Czechs, Poles, Afghans, Vietnamese, Laotians, Estonians—make your own list. And because of the weak U.S. response in Central America, at least up until President Reagan began military maneuvers in the region, they are boldly pushing ahead for victory.

The clearest U.S. statement of the problem, and most shocking to liberal diehards, has just been presented by Fred C. Ikle, under secretary of defense for policy. He told the Baltimore Council on Foreign Affairs that this administration seeks a victory for the forces of democracy in Latin America. "And that victory has two components: defeating militarily those organized forces of violence that refuse to accept the democratic will of the people; and establishing an adeqaute internal system of justice and personal security."

He believes that the U.S. is at least united in its desire to see open and genuine democracy and social betterment for the people of Central America. "Equally important is what we want to prevent . . . the expansion of totalitarian regimes, particularly Leninist ones, since they will import Stalinist police systems, bring in Soviet arms and even invite Soviet military bases."

Mr. Ikle's assertion that military victory is vital will jolt Americans who have been hoping that the problem will go away or that we can brush it off by saying that Salvadorans and Nicaraguans and Hondurans are not worthy of their concern. We must then ask whether any democratic aspirations, including our own, are worth defending. That task today will cost relatively little in money and lives compared with what it could cost eventually if postponed. The appropriate response to the latest demonstration of Soviet ruthlessness is not dumb shock but action in defense of this nation's values.●

THE IMPORTANCE OF TRAINING

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the recent debates on the floor of the House of Representatives during consideration of H.R. 1036, the Community Renewal Employment Act, and H.R. 3520, the Rehabilitation Act reauthorization, have again brought into focus the rivalry between Federal funding of training versus public service jobs.

While I do not intend to again raise this now age-old question, I submit that training and retraining of our labor force must be our first priority. The simple fact of our Nation's employment situation is that the face of American labor is changing.

Only 1 year ago, the benefits of high technology and its accompanied employment boom were being sung across the Nation. While this expanding industry is still expected to provide a significant number of new jobs, it is not seen as the panacea it once was.

Regardless of the number of new jobs that it may provide, the high technology industry provides the sharpest example of how our labor force is changing, and will continue to change. We continue to make constant reference to the influence of high technology and the trend toward service industries but the impact of these changes fail to sink in. More importantly, this is a problem which will only grow. The simple fact is that American business and industry are changing—so must its labor force.

We are constantly confronted with statistics that indicate the magnitude of this change, yet we fail to grasp its effects and consequences. In 1981, a year when between 10 and 11 million Americans were unemployed, the Bureau of Labor Statistics estimated that 1 million skilled jobs went unfilled because employers could not find qualified workers. John Naisbitt, in his book, "Megatrends," has presented a detailed account of the changes we face, while Lane Kirkland of the AFL-CIO, has forecasted that 25 percent of the people who are presently unemployed will never get their old jobs back because they no longer exist, having been replaced by technology. Finally, still others have argued that the average American in the coming decades will change careers four times during their lifetime.

What do all these studies and statistics indicate? Unquestionably, they demonstrate that a wide-ranging and forward-looking retraining and training effort is required in this country. The construction or factory worker who refuses to change with the times could well be left behind. We must stick with programs such as the Job Training Partnership Act and the Vocational Education Act to aid these individuals.

The AFL-CIO, in its August 1983 report, "The Future of Work," stated that

> The service-producing sector will continue to be the major source of new jobs. From 1940 to 1980, business and personnel service industries such as health care, education, wholesale and retail trade, repair and maintenance, government, transportation, banking and insurance increased their share of total employment from about 45 percent to about 70 percent.

This trend is expected to continue.

Both the new Job Training Partnership Act—taking full effect on October 1—and the Federal Vocational Education Act provide the vital training which is now necessary. In addition, they place emphasis on private sector participation. These are the very people who will hire our future workers and know best where our training effort should be focused.

The final goal of this training, of course, is the placement of these workers in long-term, private sector jobs. But it is a process which will require a commitment from the Federal Government. While we must continue to be aware of our spending limits, funding for these programs is an investment which will return funds to the Treasury by reducing our unemployment rolls and returning workers to real jobs. As such—on the eve of the full implementation of the Job Training Partnership Act—this strategy to higher employment requires our support.●

SOVIET WATCH

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I insert Mr. Roberts' thoughtful article for the consideration of our colleagues.

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 29, 1983]

SOVIETS RESTORE THE RULE OF POWER TO POLITICS

(By Paul Craig Roberts)

When Western indignation over the Soviet's downing of the civilian airliner dies away, so will the illusion that the Soviet government has been harmed by its callous disregard of life. As incredible as it may seem, by murdering 269 people in midair the Soviets have established the preeminence of their power. Like the Roman tribune in the movies who crushes innocents beneath the wheels of his chariot, the Soviets have demonstrated that "the strong do what they will and the weak suffer what they must."

This unpleasant maxim was banished by the supremacy of the United States. Its return is a clear indication that the Soviets have restored the rule of power to international politics.

By degrees the crumbling West has been conditioned to accept whatever actions the Soviets deem appropriate, whether the invasion of a country, use of outlawed bacteriological weapons or shooting down a jumbo jet. In the past the United States applied (short-lived) sanctions. But this time before the White House could react, our European allies expressed hopes that "the incident" would not jeopardize East-West relations.

The occasion calls for a review of the nature of these relations. To hear businessmen, bankers and farmers speak, it is all profits and jobs for the United States and Europe. The Soviets have to sell valuable commodities like gold and oil to pay for things nobody else wants like surplus grain crops and otherwise unmarketable products from an excess industrial capacity. In fact, East-West trade did not begin for economic reasons, but for political ones. It was part of détente and an attempt to enmesh the Soviets in dependency on the West. However, it is the West that has become enmeshed—and in more ways than one.

The conservative American farm community has been turned into a Soviet lobby group, to the extent that President Reagan's only options for dealing with the Soviets is to scold them. Western businessmen, neglected by their own governments, are astutely cultivated by the Soviets who bestow on them flattering nicknames and take them drinking with the political brass.

The results are predictable, and I recently witnessed them at a Stanford conference on East-West trade. The U.S. businessmen present took strong exception to a speaker's implication that the Soviets are an adversary and hotly maintained that all problems would be solved if the U.S. government would just sit down and talk with the Soviets. When told that this was not an unusual activity, the businessmen challenged the academics and government officials present "to name just one person in this government who is talking to the Soviets."

To get the trade going a large amount of credits and loans were extended—more than there are foreign exchange earnings to repay. In the Polish case it amounts to a wealth transfer from the West of approximately $25 billion.

East-West trade might be expected to decline now that it is obvious that the East is short of hard currency. More likely, however, exporters will pressure their governments to extend more credit with the argument that jobs are dependent. Once exports are protected as a domestic jobs program, the potential for subsidies is enormous.

A country that feels secure enough to shoot down an airliner and then stonewall the world while warning protesters against conducting "a rabid anti-Soviet campaign," is likely to view trade credits and subsidies as tribute and to succeed in extracting more.

To the extent that trade fills the agricultural and technological gaps in the Soviet system, we help to make them a greater threat to ourselves. If as a result we have to upgrade our own defenses, East-West trade can result in a net loss for Western countries. The taxable profits of individual firms might sum to half a billion dollars, for example, but higher defense outlays might run to tens of billions.

The standard economic case for free trade does not hold if it imposes net costs on society in general. It would be cheaper for taxpayers to pay exporters not to export.

A decade of détente not only made the defense of the West politically problematical; it also may have made it economically unfeasible. Détente allowed the rapid expansion of social welfare spending at the expense of both the defense budgets and economic growth potential of Western economies. An adequate defense of Europe by Europe is precluded by what appears to be an irreversible commitment to the welfare state. The United States so far has made up the difference but is beginning to run out of resources itself as a result of an explosion in entitlements and transfer payments.

The American commitment to the defense of Europe will struggle along even though it has been made more costly due to the Soviet's successful campaign against deployment of the neutron bomb. But an adequate defense of liberty requires more than a rethinking of the costs and benefits of East-West trade.

Throughout the post-war period the United States has assumed that war with the Soviet Union would break out as a result of a Soviet attack on Europe, and we have focused on containing a Soviet invasion in order to avoid going nuclear.

In the context of Soviet war doctrine this strategy makes little sense, because Soviet doctrine precludes the outbreak of war in Europe unless the Europeans start it—an unlikely event. A cardinal principle of Soviet war doctrine is never to alert a stronger adversary by attacking a weaker one. If war becomes necessary to the attainment of political ends, it can only begin with a pre-emptive strike against the principal adversary. In the context of this doctrine NATO is not relevant unless our allies are prepared to respond to a Soviet attack on the United States by attacking the Soviet Union. As long as we expect any war to begin in Europe, we remain completely vulnerable to Soviet doctrine.

This doctrine itself has an intimidating effect and, given the disillusionment of the West with its own principles, is likely to produce an expansion of tribute in the guise of East-West trade.●

ZIMBABWE OPPOSES UNITED STATES IN THE UNITED NATIONS

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, recently Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe visited the United States and an article of commentary appeared in the September 24 issue of Human Events.

I believe the information in this article ought to be brought to the attention of the Members and so I share it herewith:

[From Human Events, Sept. 24, 1983]

MUGABE IS AMERICA'S MORTAL FOE

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, the Marxist-Leninist leader of Zimbabwe, was in the United States last week, trying to rustle up some more economic assistance, apparently believing the $225 million or so that we've given him since independence hasn't been enough.

Mugabe was given a royal welcome. President Reagan hailed him as a "wise" leader, whom we can look to for "leadership in southern Africa." Both of our nations, the President contended, have "much in common," including a "revolutionary" heritage and the fact that both "our constitutions offer protection to all our citizens, black and white, ensuring their political freedoms as well as their individual rights."

What was extraordinary about this glowing tribute is that the U.S. and Zimbabwe are on totally different political wave lengths. While America is democratic, Zimbabwe is becoming a murderous, one-party state that brooks virtually no significant dissent. While the U.S. pursues an anti-Communist foreign policy, Zimbabwe has become one of our most determined foreign policy foes.

Zimbabwe's constitution may pay lip service to human rights, but those rights are not respected in practice. Mugabe's North Korean-trained Fifth Brigade, as many may recall, went on a murder spree in Matabeleland last February, apparently in an effort to suppress rebellious followers of Joshua Nkomo. In seeking the guilty, however, the Fifth Brigade slaughtered the innocent, causing the country's Catholic bishops to stress in a pastoral letter that Zimbabwe is becoming a place "where violent reaction against dissident activity has, to our certain knowledge, brought about the maiming and deaths of hundreds and hundreds of innocent people who are neither dissidents nor collaborators. We are convinced that many wanton atrocities and brutalities have been and are still being perpetrated." The facts, the bishops added, "point to a reign of terror caused by wanton killings, beatings, burnings and rapings. . . ."

Sen. Jesse Helms (R.-N.C.) delivered several written questions about alleged human rights violations in Zimbabwe to Assistant Secretary of State Chester Crocker earlier this year. Crocker's written responses showed the violations were massive.

Helms wrote Crocker: "Wallace Stuttaford, a member of the Zimbabwe Parliament . . . met with eight leaders of black parties to discuss in private this trend toward a one-party state. He was subsequently arrested, his home searched without warrant, he was put in jail for a year, tortured, according to affidavits, deprived of medicines necessary for his physical condition—all without charges being brought against him.

"The government witnesses who had signed sworn statements against him recanted in court, saying that they had been forced to swear falsely. Mugabe's own judge was forced to acquit him and award him damages, which were subsequently taken away by ex post facto law." Was this, asked Helms, in accord with the Declaration of Rights that Mugabe had pledged to adhere to before he took office?

Crocker responded: "The overall handling of the Stuttaford case was not in accord with the Declaration of Rights and the charges of torture during his interrogation appear to be true. . . ."

How many persons, asked Helms, "are in detention without trial. . . ?" Crocker replied: "Several opposition members of Parliament have asked the Minister of Home Affairs to provide figures for the numbers of persons being detained in Zimbabwe. He has repeatedly refused to do so and our embassy is unable to provide a figure."

Zimbabwe, in short, is hardly the type of country we should be extolling as a respecter of political freedoms and individual rights. Well, some liberals might argue, Zimbabwe is no less authoritarian than South Africa, and the U.S. is still friendly with that country. But South Africa, for all its faults, is allied with the West. Zimbabwe is one of our most tenacious foreign policy foes.

Zimbabwe had a chance to prove its friendship for the U.S. in the Korean airliner incident where 269 passengers were shot from the sky by a Soviet jet fighter. But Mugabe flunked this test just one day before he came passing his tin cup for more American funding.

At the U.N. Security Council on September 12, nine nations—the bare minimum needed to adopt a resolution—voted to deplore the Soviet destruction of Korean Air Lines flight 007 on August 31. The Soviets then vetoed it.

Facing possible political humiliation, the U.S. had to scramble to get nine nations to approve, with only eight in favor on the morning of the vote. The resolution was adopted 9 to 2, with Poland and the Soviet Union opposed. Four countries—China, Nicaragua, Guyana and Zimbabwe—abstained, "thus," in the words of the New York Times, "weakening the United States' attempt to demonstrate that most of the world condemned the Soviet deed."

In order to win support, furthermore, the U.S. agreed to a "soft" resolution which only once referred to the Soviet Union and avoided condemning it directly. Even so, Mugabe couldn't see fit to support us. As United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick lamented: "I very much regret that Zimbabwe decided, as it so often has in the Security Council, to tilt its vote toward the Soviet Union. I regret that very much."

In his talks with President Reagan, Mugabe not only defended that vote, but tried to persuade the President to take harsher measures against South Africa, charging in his departing statement that only that country "continues to destabilize our region." He refused to criticize Communist Cuba's role in Africa, however, and, in fact, condemned the Reagan Administration for insisting that the Namibian issue could not be settled until the Cubans agreed to withdraw from Angola.

Indeed, Mugabe's Zimbabwe has one of the most anti-American voting records in the United Nations. In Senate Report No. 98-146, put out by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, there is a table (pages 111-113) comparing the support each country in the U.N. gave to the U.S. position during the 1982 General Assembly session. (See HUMAN EVENTS, Sept. 10, page 14.)

Zimbabwe, on all U.S. votes, supported us just 12.8 percent of the time, less than just a handful of nations. The Soviet Union supported us 20.6 percent of the time, or nearly 40 percent more than Zimbabwe. The entire Soviet bloc in Eastern Europe—including Poland, East Germany, Romania, Hungary and Czechoslovakia—backed us more than Zimbabwe did.

Nevertheless—and despite Mugabe's continued insistence that he's going to use our aid to socialize his country—the Reagan Administration has decided to lionize a man who is a major foe of America. The only time he smiles is when he's asking us for another couple of million.●

THE FEAR OF WINNING

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the following editorial by political columnist William Safire to the attention of my colleagues. Mr. Safire discusses the seemingly prevalent attitude in the liberal movement today in America. They seek, Safire explains, defeat for the forces of freedom and democracy. The article raises some interesting questions as to the nature of these politicians. The editorial appeared in the September 26 edition of the Los Angeles Herald Examiner.

THE FEAR OF WINNING: ISN'T IT ALWAYS A LOSING PROPOSITION?

(By William Safire)

WASHINGTON.—The fear that I fear is the fear of winning.

A new confidence can be found in the legion of self-doubt. Isolationist legislators and dovish pundits sense that their brand of defeatism is gaining the upper hand in the formation of public opinion. In debates and polls on our involvement in Lebanon and El Salvador, we have been witnessing the triumph of Losers Inc.

Defeat is its flight plan, dialogue its panacea, the quagmire its symbol.

In Central America, Losers Inc. assured us, the dispatch of 55 military advisers to El Salvador would be the beginning of a new Vietnam; the socially progressive guerrillas were certain to win the hearts and minds of the peasants; and resistance by our thuggish allies, with their right-wing death squads (there are never any left-wing death squads), was futile. Therefore, our goal must be negotiations for peace, not (ugh!) military victory by the elected government.

However, even the limited military supplies sent to El Salvador seem to be helping to stop the communists from overthrowing the government. Military pressure on Nicaragua through overt-covert aid to insurgents in that country has discouraged Sandinista assistance to El Salvador's communists. In the face of this, Losers Inc. has been trying to cut off the overt-covert CIA help and has been holding down military and economic aid to the Salvadoran government to a level that prevents clear-cut success.

Spokesmen for Losers were furious at the ploy adopted by the Reagan administration to conceal its support for the thugs chosen by the people in elections replete with Western observers. Our roaming ambassador, Richard Stone, invited the communists to a "dialogue," which Losers think of as the ultimate goal. Most reluctantly, the guerrillas came, only to make it clear that a free election was not their cup of coffee. They wanted "power-sharing," imposed by the United States over their people's heads, which was an embarrassment to negotiation-niks.

However, Losers' strategists were delighted at the speech made by Undersecretary of Defense Fred Ikle, who actually said "we seek victory for the forces of democracy," which included "defeating militarily those organized forces of violence that refuse to accept the democratic will of the people."

That gladdened dovish hearts because it proved that the administration goal was to win. Not to negotiate endlessly, not to have a dialogue as an end in itself, not to not lose and to bug out after a decent interval, but to (ugh!) win. To the growing army led by Losers Inc., "victory" is not only a quaintly Goldwateresque word, but is (a) impossible, (b) immoral for us to seek, and thus (c) must be ripped out root and cause. To Losers Inc., winning is losing.

Apply that same approach to our involvement in Lebanon. A year ago, when Israel struck out at the decadelong Syrian-PLO takeover of Lebanon, Losers Inc. suddenly discovered the "territorial integrity" of that Syrian-occupied land. In its war with the PLO, Israel was out to win: To Losers, that was unacceptable.

Accordingly, a firestorm of protest was loosed against the Israelis, who did not understand that in a world dominated by Losers, victory is villainy. Reagan and his national security adviser were swept away in that tide; in a blunder comparable only to Eisenhower's Suez mistake in 1956, the U.S. president ordered the Israelis to stop winning. In a colossal misjudgment, he accepted Losers Inc.'s assumption—abetted by the State Department's Philip Habib—that the problem would be to get the Israelis, not the Syrians, out of Lebanon.

Today, some of the same anti-victorians who urged Reagan to intervene in Lebanon when the Israelis had the Syrians and PLO reeling are now demanding that he pull out our Marine contingent because we are in a no-win situation.

Their litany is familiar: It's none of our business; the locals are all corrupt; the Syrians, with Soviet backing, cannot be beaten; as in Central America, the U.S. public won't stand for an escalation of our involvement. And now some defeatists are adding a new, ironic twist: Why can't the Israelis take care of this and let our Marines come home?

The answer to all the predictions of failure, and the sure cure for the prevailing defeatism in American public opinion, is one success. To achieve that success, the administration and its supporters in Congress must go against the tide of public opinion led by Losers Inc., today. Some evidence is needed to show that perseverance pays, that winning—yes, even local military victory if necessary—is possible.

We do not have to win everywhere. Nor do we have to take the military route everywhere. But we do need to win somewhere for the possibility of our victory to change the nature of negotiations everywhere.●

REPORT OF THE HOUSE ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE DELEGATION TO LEBANON

HON. SAMUEL S. STRATTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

REPORT OF THE HOUSE ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE DELEGATION TO LEBANON

A delegation of 10 members of the House Armed Services Committee visited Lebanon this past weekend to assess the American participation in the peacekeeping role as part of the Multinational Force (MNF) there and to question the U.S. political and military officers who deal with the complex situation presented in Lebanon on a day-to-day basis. A list of the senior officials the delegation met with is attached to the end of the report.

Initially, the diplomatic officials on the scene did all they could to discourage the delegation from visiting the area, principally by suggesting that we would be endangered by traveling there. We insisted that if it were unsafe for a group of Members of Congress to visit Lebanon for a matter of hours, then it was clearly not reasonable to order more than a thousand Marines to stay there for months on end. The American officials relented and were exceedingly helpful during the two days that we spent on ships of the Sixth Fleet off the Lebanese coast and the afternoon that we spent with the troops in their sandbagged positions at the Beirut International Airport (BIA).

In this report, we present the views of the members of the delegation in three parts: first, the positive findings of the delegation; second, the issues that concerned us and, third, some specific conclusions that we reached.

FINDINGS

The delegation has a number of positive observations that deserve attention and ought not to be submerged beneath more critical remarks that will appear later.

(1) U.S. military personnel in and around Lebanon have been acquitting themselves superbly. U.S. forces are playing a lead role in support of establishing peace and stability in Lebanon under extremely difficult conditions.

The Marines in the MNF are filling a necessary role in the steps to stability in Lebanon, but under hazardous conditions.

Army personnel are assisting the Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) training its own forces and in doing so providing an invaluable service to the Lebanese government. The delegation heard nothing but the highest praise for the professionalism and the insight of U.S. Army personnel.

Sailors aboard the naval flotilla operating off Lebanon are providing the support necessary for the maintenance and safety of the Marines ashore.

One could not help but be extremely impressed and proud of the performance of U.S. military personnel under such difficult and complex circumstances.

(2) The bulk of Marine Corps and Navy personnel assigned to the area appear to be decidely in favor of our remaining in Lebanon. We could not take a scientific survey, but members of the delegation broke up and spoke individually—in many cases out of the presence of officers—with literally hundreds of men, including more than 100 of the 1,600 Marines onshore. A minority was opposed to our continued presence in Lebanon—some because they saw no reason for our being in Lebanon and believed our presence there served no American interest; others because they did not wish to be there if they were kept on a leash and forbidden to attack non-government positions that threaten their Beirut Airport encampment. The overwhelming majority of those questioned, however, supported our presence there. Marine Corps and Naval officers, as well as American diplomats, emphasized that the MNF presence helped to hold down the level of fighting and reduce the death toll. They were convinced that withdrawal would increase turmoil and perhaps damage America's credibility and effectiveness worldwide. Morale was high among both officers and men. Although there has been criticism in the United States that our Marines have been left in exposed positions, the Marines questioned complained mostly of not being able to respond more aggressively when fired upon. They praised the naval gunfire support they have received.

(3) The LAF have shown considerable improvement, partly as a result of an intense American training program run by U.S. Army personnel, and partly as a result of the leadership of their commander. In the movement into West Beirut and the fighting around Suq el-Gharb in recent weeks, the LAF has shown far more professional ability and stamina than had been expected by many Lebanese and American analysts. The Lebanese 8th Brigade, which is engaged at Suq el-Gharb, a strategically located mountain village overlooking the Beirut Airport, had not even completed all its training before it was committed to battle. The 8th Brigade, however, had advanced further through the training program than any of the other six brigades of the planned total of seven. Despite the common criticism of the Lebanese Armed Forces as a Christian force used against non-Christians, the LAF is actually 60 percent Moslem and Druse and only 40 percent Christian, reasonably close to the ethnic composition of Lebanese society. Certainly, the Lebanese military is representative of Lebanese ethnicity at the enlisted, junior officer and general officer levels. Only at field grade level is the LAF predominately Christian.

(4) There is no question that "hostilities" are underway and that serious risks are involved. Some may quibble over the interpretation but it is clear to the Marines at the Beirut Airport that they have been "introduced into hostilities."

In military terms, our position on flat land, immobilized at the base of a high mountain range, is clearly unsatisfactory. The position was not chosen for military utility, however, but was originally selected as the most appropriate place to interpose Americans between the Israelis and the Lebanese at a time when mere "presence" was the chief concern. Another key consideration was that possession of the airport could expedite the evacuation of American and allied personnel if required.

The Marines are exposed. It is important to note, however, that the officers in the field judged that only a relatively small portion of the fire that struck Marine positions was specifically aimed at the Marines. Intelligence indicated that many rounds hitting the area were strays while others were aimed at Lebanese forces located in close proximity to the Marines. For example, until just a few days before the delegation visit, a large portion of the Lebanese Air Force was located at the Beirut Airport. Opposition forces fired a few hundred yards over the Marine Headquarters to reach the Lebanese aircraft. Sometimes those rounds fell short. In other instances, reports suggest that the Marines were fired at by "freelance" artillerymen of various militia groups violating specific directions from their headquarters.

(5) U.S. forces involved in the Lebanese operation are substantial. In addition to the 1,600 Marines and 100 Army personnel ashore, there is another battalion landing team offshore (2,000 Marines) and 15 Navy ships ranging from LST's to a guided missile cruiser just offshore and the carrier USS Eisenhower and its battle group, less than 100 miles offshore. Of particular note was the arrival of the battleship USS New Jersey. Its naval gunfire capabilities provide a major improvement in our ability to protect the Marines ashore. Its presence alone, with its capability to fire 2,000 lb. shells up to a range of 23 miles, must give pause to those with aggressive intentions ashore.

All told, the United States has in excess of 15,000 military personnel poised in the area.

(6) The principal problem facing Lebanon is its division into hostile factions based primarily on religious (confessional) affiliations. The MNF clearly cannot resolve the frictions developed throughout a millennium by the imposition of military authority. The solution to Lebanon's ills is not military, but primarily political. The delegation was pleased to discover that every military officer questioned recognized this and none—not one—suggested that the U.S. military be unleashed to set things right.

On the diplomatic front, it is possible that the good offices of the United States may help effectuate a compromise that would bring real peace to troubled Lebanon. We are making that effort. The U.S. military forces see their goal as acting in support of the diplomatic effort. They recognize the diplomatic effort as primary. It is undisputed that our military presence provides a necessary framework for the diplomatic efforts that would collapse if these military forces were withdrawn.

(7) The Multinational Force (MNF)—comprised of more than 2,200 French, more than 2,000 Italians, about 1,600 Americans and 100 British on the ground in Lebanon—is working extremely well together and has been effective in its peacekeeping role. Other MNF contingents have taken as much or more fire than the U.S. contingent and are contributing a great deal. The French support their force with five ships and the Italians with three ships. In addition, the British have moved fighter aircraft to Cyprus, approximately 80 miles away. The American public does not realize how much the other Multinational Force nations are doing because American news coverage understandably concentrates on the American role. What is more, it is not generally known, but the French have taken more casualties than the U.S. Marines. It is by no means true that the United States is bearing most of the burden and our allies are sitting on the sidelines.

CONCERNS

While we found many positive points to record, we also found a number of things that disturbed us and that should be legitimate cause of concern for the U.S. Congress and the American public.

1. The diplomatic and political process has placed the Marines stationed in Beirut in a highly-exposed position.

2. In such a situation there is always a danger of slow, incremental escalation that could lead us more or less rapidly from peacekeeping role to an intractable military involvement. A year ago, we were told our forces were there for but a brief period. Now we are debating an extension of their presence for another year and a half. The numbers of our onshore forces have increased, albeit only modestly from 1,200 to 1,600.

Of greatest concern to the delegation was its discovery that responses to threatening situations have escalated significantly in accordance with the use of force under the Rules of Engagement (ROE). The ROE are classified and cannot be discussed in the open. (The delegation will discuss them in more detail for the committee during closed session.) The delegation was concerned, however, that alterations in the ROE could result in incremental growth in our involvement.

3. There has been a major increase in the quantity of artillery largely provided by and sometimes operated by the Syrians within firing range of U.S. Marine forces at the Beirut International Airport. Just before the arrival of the delegation, U.S. intelligence found that a number of artillery positions increased from 72 to more than 100 in a three-day period. By no means does this indicate necessarily that there are plans for a major artillery assault on Marine positions. But the fact that they would effect such a major augmentation raises legitimate concerns.

4. The Lebanese Armed Forces, while performing exceptionally well to date, lack much depth. If their operations are expanded any in the future beyond their employment in the recent fighting, their ability to commit reserves will be critically affected and could lead to an unacceptably high proportion of losses to key members of their forces. Furthermore, training efforts of the LAF have been suspended during the recent fighting. These conditions obviously threaten to delay the planned July 1985 date by which all seven brigades are in a sufficient state of readiness to ensure security and stability throughout Lebanon.

A competent, ethnically balanced military able to maintain internal security is a key ingredient for the future of Lebanon.

A ceasefire, if it holds, could provide the opportunity to resume training of the LAF. A fully-trained LAF would largely remove the requirement for the MNF.

A ceasefire could also provide an opportunity for the U.S. Marines to strengthen their defensive position.

5. The success of the negotiations is not entirely in the hands of the government and its Lebanese opposition. Syria is a player in the negotiations. The delegation uncovered suggestions that the Syrians had been intentionally sabotaging peace talks. On more than one occasion when the Lebanese participants appeared to be nearing an agreement that would bring about a ceasefire in the Suq el-Gharb/Aley area and lead to talks on a long-range political solution, the Syrians suddenly interjected demands that were patently unacceptable to the Lebanese government.

6. The Lebanese government of President Amin Gemayel, while interested in starting talks on a long-range solution, at least in part to demonstrate its good faith to its foreign supporters, may not be sufficiently committed to completing the talks. Successful negotiations would require significant concessions by Gemayel's Christian backers. Christian power in the Lebanese government, including the exclusive right to occupy the presidency and the 53 percent built-in majority in the Parliament, is based on the 1932 census that showed Christians comprising 53 percent of the population. No one doubts that the Lebanese Christian population is far less than 53 percent today, in part because of the higher Moslem birth rate and in part because of the greater Christian propensity to emigrate. Thus, the Christians must concede more authority to the Moslems if Lebanon is ever to be reconstituted as a stable and united state. Virtually everyone with whom we conferred agreed on this point. Yet President Gemayel's Christian political faction appears at this time to prefer to dig in its heels. An open-ended commitment by the United States to the Lebanese central government could relax the pressure on the Gemayel government that appears necessary to obtain the concessions by the various factions needed to achieve a stable government.

An authorization for 18 months may be a signal to the Syrians that we will stay the course, but it may also tell Gemayel that he can mark time and not pursue the political solution which everyone agrees is the only way out of the civil war.

7. An uncertain number of troops from the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), ranging up to a few thousand, have joined the fighting in the Suq el-Gharb/Aley area in recent weeks or infiltrated into Beirut. The Israeli attack of one year ago that was supposed to have eliminated the PLO threat did so only for a brief period. The potential for the PLO once again to become an influence for the worst on the Lebanese scene is growing. Intelligence reports show an increasing number of PLO attempting to reenter the Beirut area each evening. There was evidence, however, that the PLO were principally if not exclusively from the rebel group opposed to the leadership of Yasser Arafat.

8. Our Marines can be endangered by discussion of pulling out. That is not meant to suggest that democratic debate of our involvement in Lebanon should be silenced. But it is still incumbent upon us to recognize that if the forces opposed to a political settlement in Lebanon feel that the American commitment is tenuous, those forces could be encouraged to attack the U.S. Marines in hopes that casualties will result in our withdrawal.

9. This is not just a civil war into which the United States and other Western powers have interposed themselves. Lebanon is a small nation whose more powerful neighbors have decided to take advantage of its troubles. Syria and Israel have both put their forces in Lebanon. Syria is directly involved in the recent fighting. Syrian-accented voices have been heard on military radios giving commands. Lebanon is a nation that was the most democratic in the Arab world before its governmental system collapsed. It provided greater individual freedom and opportunities for personal development than even many western nations. As a powerful nation that claims to speak for a higher morality in world affairs, the United States cannot simply ignore what is happening in Lebanon.

10. Our goals and reasons for being in Lebanon are not clear to the American public. That is understandable since there is not a direct and immediate threat to obvious American interests such as a military attack on a neighbor or the closure of access to key resources such as Persian Gulf oil. The fact that American interests are not direct or dramatic does not mean that those interests do not exist, however. There is a potential threat to our long-term interest if unfriendly foreign forces seize control of the country. We think that Secretary Shultz made a reasonable assessment of American interests in Lebanon in his testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee on September 21, 1983:

"At stake also are some concerns that affect our national interest and the security of our friends and allies. If American efforts for peaceful solutions are overwhelmed by brute force, our role is that much weakened everywhere. Friends who rely on us will be disheartened, and will be that much less secure. Moderates in the Arab world whom we are encouraging to take risks for peace will feel it far less safe to do so. The Soviet Union's efforts to disrupt our diplomacy will have scored a victory; radical and rejectionist elements will be strengthened. The cause of peace and justice will have suffered a setback. Israel's security on its northern border will be weakened."

The delegation agrees that our present level of activity will serve the long-term interest of peace.

11. It was the assessment of most diplomatic officials and military officers in contact with our Italian and French allies that, if we pulled out, one and probably both of those contingents would soon be removed as well. The delegation did not meet with any allied official and so cannot make its own assessment, but was impressed with the strength of the views held by American military and diplomatic officers. The delegation recognizes that there is more than one militia organization that would try to fill the void left by such an evacuation. The ensuing fighting would likely make what has occurred in recent weeks appear but a skirmish by comparison. The long-term political effects are impossible to detail but it is difficult to imagine that they would be in any way favorable to American interests.

CONCLUSIONS

(A) An immediate pullout from Lebanon could very likely lead to the collapse of the present government, most of those interviewed agreed. This in turn could bring about a bloodbath as various factions fight for control and could possible end in the partition of Lebanon into a rump Christian state, an annex to Syria and an annex to Israel. This is obviously not an appropriate course.

(B) A long-term or open-ended commitment would not be in the United States' interest nor in that of Lebanon since it might simply tempt the Gemayl government to avoid making the hard but necessary political compromises while in effect, hiding behind the MNF shield. The Lebanese Christian community must realize that it cannot have business as usual; and all sides must realize that an acceptable compromise means no one gets everything that it wants.

(C) The United Nations peacekeeping force in Lebanon lost its credibility by allowing itself to be pushed aside. Past lessons must not be ignored. One lesson is that other forces—any forces—must be made to realize they cannot attack U.S. forces with impunity. It must also be very clear that no one firing on U.S. Marines will enjoy the protection of an untouchable sanctuary. In bald terms, that means this country must never, by statement or action, lead Syria to think that it might be able to fire artillery at our troops without generating a response at least in kind, or a much stronger one.

(D) The U.K., France, and Italy are making major contributions to the Multi-National Force in Lebanon, and have earned the respect of the Lebanese people. But other allies are capable of aiding Lebanon in other ways. It is not acceptable that the U.S. is the only country supplying the Lebanese Armed Forces with equipment and munitions.

(E) Israel's unilateral withdrawal from the Suq-el-Gharb/Aley area to a line south of the Awali River—a move which the U.S. had earlier urged on the Israelis in line with an agreement with Lebanon, but had subsequently asked Israel to delay, created a vacuum which led to problems that had not been fully foreseen.

(F) An overriding goal of American policy in Lebanon must be to get all foreign forces out. When Syrian, PLO, Israeli, Iranian and Libyan forces cease meddling in Lebanon, the Lebanese people will have a much better chance of solving their own problems.

(G) Lebanon is an international problem. We have not made it our problem alone to date and we must not do so in the future. We can provide assistance to the Lebanese in solving their problem, but we cannot solve it for them.

(H) We are concerned that the size of the job is staggering. Along with others, we are trying to help keep the peace by sitting on a piece of Lebanese territory. We are seeking to assist in the training of an Army of 65,000 by July 1985 that was largely a nonexistent force one year ago that had not functioned out of its barracks since 1975. We are trying to bring together warring parties who have fought with one another many times over the last millenium—but who have often worked together quite well for long periods also—while outside powers have fanned the flames of sectarian animosity for their own ends. At the same time, we debate in the halls of Congress and in the editorial pages committing ourselves to wrap all this up in a specified period of time. If we have correctly understood our national goals, then we wonder if it is not overzealous to think we can see these goals reach fruition in any specific period. Rather it seems to us that the time required cannot be clearly determined now and setting a deadline too short or too long might be detrimental. We believe continued monitoring of the U.S. commitment and Lebanese progress is mandatory for the U.S Congress and that such monitoring will be advisable even after the U.S. contingent is withdrawn.

(I) To extend the U.S. commitment to the MNF for another year and a half without at the same time requiring verifiable progress in such goals as the training of the LAF and an agreement on broadening the "confessional" base in the Lebanese government would run the risk of involving U.S. forces more deeply than the circumstances would justify. After all, other major U.S. interests may be threatened and may merit a higher priority than Lebanon in terms of direct U.S. national security.

To prevent this, the Delegation recommends that regular reports be made to the Congress on such matters as:

(1) the expansion and training of the LAF and improvement in its capacity to carry out its mission;

(2) broadening the political base of the Lebanese government; and

(3) any indication of Syrian willingness to reduce the level of tension.

(J) In view of the importance of these reports, the delegation further believes that they should be made at least every 60 days, and more frequently if events warrant special comment.

The achievement of a ceasefire in Lebanon is most encouraging to the delegation. Such a ceasefire, if it continues to hold, will not only increase the opportunity for further training of the LAF, but would also make it easier to pursue negotiations for a broadened Lebanese government.

Since a ceasefire makes the issue of "hostilities" involving U.S. Marines moot, it would appear to be appropriate to defer consideration of the Zablocki resolution until it can be determined if the ceasefire holds.

In addition to the hundreds of service personnel that individual delegation members spoke with, the delegation as a whole met with the following persons:

Vice Admiral Ed Martin, Commander, Sixth Fleet.

Rear Admiral Jerry Tuttle, Commander, Task Force 60.

Captain Morgan France, Commander, Task Force 61.

Ambassador Richard Fairbanks, Special Ambassador.

Ambassador Robert Dillon, Ambasssador to Lebanon.

Colonel Tom Fintel, Office of Military Coordination (U.S. Embassy, Beirut).

Colonel Tim Geraghty, Commander, 24th Marine Amphibious Unit.

Respectfully submitted,

SAMUEL S. STRATTON,
Delegation Chairman.

SEPARATE OBSERVATIONS OF CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM DICKINSON

While concurring with what has been said above as a committee report, the undersigned feels constrained to voice some personal reservations and areas of concern.

The facts are that when American troops were first sent ashore we sent 800 Marines with the public announcement and assurances that if they came under fire or attack they would be withdrawn. This was a commitment to the American people to allay their concerns about another "involvement."

They were in fact withdrawn for a short period but later, under agreement with the Government of Lebanon on September 25, 1983, 1200 Marines were reinserted ashore to participate in a peace keeping mission with the Multinational Forces of France, Italy and, later, the U.K.

Slowly, but steadily, our involvement has increased, the rules of engagement have been apparently broadened to cover new circumstances and our announced reaction if coming under hostile fire has changed. The official line is that the ROE have not changed but only "interpreted." But the fact is our involvement has increased with new interpretations.

There are no longer 1200 Marines ashore, it is nearer 1600, with more than 2000 aboard ship as back-up.

We no longer withdraw if fired upon but we respond in kind—at least.

We have fired from Naval ships at least once in support of the LAF—not just in self defense. (While deemed necessary in the long run for our defense, it was in fact a preemptive strike.)

We no longer have a small force in the area, we have, about 1600 Marines ashore, another 2000 Marines back-up aboard ship, and another 100 U.S. Army ashore; we have 15 Naval ships involved in the area, including a battleship, a nuclear carrier, a nuclear missile destroyer and others consisting of a total of 15 Naval ships and over 10,000 men—and perhaps still growing. Standing on the ship's bridge and looking at all the Naval ships in sight, it looks like we are getting ready for World War III.

We are also supplying tons of ammunitions and other supplies to the LAF (while our allies in the MNF apparently contribute nothing.)

The bottom line is that our involvement is continuing to grow, the fighting is escalating between all parties ashore (at least until the last cease fire) and all hopes are pinned on the ability of a few men to bring order to the country of Lebanon. All our eggs seem to be in one fragile basket.

The undersigned believes we should reduce both our physical presence and involvement at the present time in terms of ships—to the minimum force necessary to support the troops ashore. We should not increase the troops ashore.

We should maintain our flexibility to support the efforts for peace so long as the probability of success exists without a commitment for a fixed period of time. Any announcement of withdrawal in the near term would be counter-productive.●

POLL CLOSING TIMES NOT THE ANSWER

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that T.V. Guide has recently run two articles and an editorial on a variety of issues that relate to the conduct of Federal elections, and especially to the involvement of television in our political process. Among the subjects addressed in this series are declining voter turnout, early projections of election returns, convention coverage, candidate debates and campaign funding.

As chairman of the Task Force on Elections of the House Administration Committee, and as a member of the Telecommunications Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, I have been deeply involved in many of these same issues, and I want to heartily applaud the editors of T.V. Guide for drawing attention to these important subjects in their September 24 and October 1 issues.

My one concern, Mr. Speaker, is that T.V. Guide suggests that 24-hour voting with uniform poll closing times would solve the problem of early projections of election returns by the television networks. Unfortunately, it is quite clear from extensive congressional hearings on this subject that that is not the case, because the use of exit polls by the networks has made poll closing times irrelevant to their ability to project election results.

In order to dispel any misconceptions that might arise with respect to 24-hour voting and uniform poll closing times, I would like to include in the RECORD at this point, both the T.V. Guide editorial and a copy of the letter I have sent in response to the editorial.

Again, I commend T.V. Guide for their leadership in highlighting these issues.

AS WE SEE IT

The time has come for drastic change in the way we elect our Presidents. Among the needed reforms, two should be enacted at the earliest possible moment, preferably before the 1984 election year heats up.

Election Day should be shifted from Tuesday to Sunday.

Polls should remain open for 24 hours and close at the same moment everywhere in the country irrespective of time zone.

Those changes would go most of the way toward solving two of the most troublesome problems besetting the Republic, namely: the appallingly low number of eligible voters who actually go to the polls to cast ballots for President of the United States; and, the distortion of our electoral process that results from the networks' compulsion to project election winners before the polls are closed everywhere.

These solutions are not new. TV GUIDE did not invent them. Theorists inside and outside the television industry have been advocating their adoption for two decades. No reasonable argument has ever been advanced to refute their desirability. And still, nothing is done. Why? Inertia and apathy. During election campaigns, everybody is too busy to deal with it, and in the long periods between Presidential contests, nobody is sufficiently concerned. It's rather like the farmer whose barn had a leaky roof that never got fixed: "When it's raining, I can't go up there to fix it," he explained. "And when it ain't raining, it don't need fixin'."

Our two-part lead article beginning this week, by TV GUIDE's New York bureau chief Neil Hickey, lays out the whole shameful story and points to the urgent need for reform of all our electoral procedures, many of which derive from an age of gas lamps, paper ballots, chalkboard reporting of election returns and other flotsam of the pre-electronic era.

If asked who is responsible for the ills of our society, many Americans would be quick to blame the "politicians"—or the "media," that catchall for the organizations that bring them everything they see on TV, hear on radio, or read in newspapers and magazines. But there is another, much larger group that deserves at least as much criticism—the more than 70 million Americans who could vote if they wanted to, but don't.

Sunday voting—combined with permanent, electronically stored voter registration—is the surest and most enlightened way to raise our current, pathetically small voter turnout (little more than half in 1980) to a level approaching that of other democratic nations, some of which have turnouts of more than 90 per cent.

Similarly, closing the polls at the same instant nation-wide rather than one time zone at a time would end forever the fear that early TV projections of winners are causing voters to stay away from the polls and thus altering the outcomes of some West Coast contests. Voters in the West—including Hawaii and Alaska—deserve to have the sense that their votes matter. No American should have to suffer that symbolic disenfranchisement that comes with the news that it's "all over," and his or her vote is not needed.

Congress should act—and act soon—to make Sunday voting and uniform poll closings the law of the land. These are two simple and much needed measures that would make our electoral process more lucid and effective. As former CBS president Frank Stanton says, "We need to recast this decrepit, self-defeating system all along the line."

And the time to do that is now. We urge our readers to let Congress know that they favor Sunday voting and uniform poll closings by writing to: Hon. Al Swift, H326 Capitol, Washington, D.C. 20515.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., September 26, 1983.

Mr. DAVID SENDLER,
National Section, TV Guide,
Radnor, Pa.

DEAR MR. SENDLER: I would like to applaud the attention T.V. Guide is giving to the relationship between television and federal elections. There is no question that television affects the outcome of our elections, and thus our democratic government, in many ways. And it is entirely appropriate that the relationship between the two should be examined often and carefully. It is particularly encouraging to see a magazine with your broad readership giving the subject a good airing.

Furthermore, I would agree with many of the points that are made in the article or the editorial, with respect to the need for changing the way presidential debates are televised, with the effect of early projections of election returns, and with the need to examine carefully any measures that we might take to reverse the trend of declining voter turnout.

At the same time, however, as chairman of the elections Task Force of the House Administration Committee, and as a member of the Telecommunications Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, which have jointly held a series of hearings on the subject of early projections of election returns, I must take issue with your proposal of uniform poll closing times as a solution to the problem of early projections. I wish it were that simple.

The concern of many of us in Congress is that the use of exit polls to project elections is a relatively new news phenomenon, which raises electoral problems that defy simple legislative solutions, including 24-hour voting and uniform poll closing times.

Exit polling has been used by the networks for some time to describe voting patterns—to analyze which kinds of people voted for which kinds of candidates and why. Used in that way, exit polls have contributed greatly to our understanding of the American electorate.

What was new in 1980 was the use of exit polls by one network to actually project the results of the Presidential election. By 1982, all three networks were projecting election results based on exit polls. The problem that raises for the voting public and for the Congress is that poll closing times are no longer relevant. With partial returns, sample precincts or any of the other traditional ways to project election results, the networks could not get the information they needed until at least some polls were closed. With exit polls, however, networks interview voters all day long as they leave the polls and, as a result, they can project elections within a matter of hours after the polls have opened—and well before any polls have closed anywhere.

The stated policy of the networks is that, although they have the capacity to do so, they will not project elections within a given state until the polls have closed in that state—except. Except in states like those with two time zones (which is about one state in four). Except if there are just a few minutes until the polls close (which was the case when the 1982 Senate races were called in several states, including my own State of washington).

Now, on the one hand, the Congress is being urged to make radical changes in the election process, like 24-hour voting and uniform poll closing times. (In our Congressional hearings last year, state and local election officials outlined the enormous difficulty, disruption and expense of shifting to that kind of system.) And on the other hand, the networks cannot guarantee either that they will follow their present policy more rigidly, or that they—or some competitor—will not in the future follow a different policy, and simply project election results regardless of the poll closing time.

In short, we could easily find ourselves in the situation of having caused great dislocation and expense by changing traditional polling hours, only to find competitive factors causing the media to use exit polls to project results ever earlier—before polls are closed—and thereby to short-circuit that legislative solution completely. Uniform poll closing times, to be successful would be totally dependent on voluntary restraint by the news media. Yet if the media were serious about a voluntary solution to the problem, they could implement one now.

At the same time, many in Congress recognize that Cable News Network (which projected the 1982 gubernatorial race in California before the polls had closed), Direct Broadcast Satellite and other technologies will expand news sources, and that competition to be first will continue to increase the pressure to use exit polls to project elections prior to any poll closings.

It is difficult to believe this would not have a profound effect on citizens' attitudes toward their votes and toward our entire electoral process, which is fundamental to our system of government. Congress has begun considering the problem of early projections, and exploring workable solutions—but, unfortunately, they do not include 24-hour voting, or uniform poll closing hours, or any of the other ideas the networks have so far indicated they might support.

Sincerely,

AL SWIFT,
Member of Congress.●

A SALUTE TO ED KELLY OF THE BUFFALO NEWS

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, last week Ed Kelly, the distinguished columnist for the Buffalo News, retired after 42 years of prominent public service in western New York. His thoughtful, balanced, and indepth coverage of labor and economic issues, in a region that has witnessed tremendous economic change over the last several decades, has been a major contribution to public understanding and official reflection of tough issues in a time of great trial.

I commend to my colleagues two tributes to Mr. Kelly. The first, by Murray Light, the distinguished editor of the Buffalo News, clearly sums up Ed Kelly's philosophy, skills and hard work in the newspaper business. The second is by Erie County Executive Edward Rutkowski, who praises Mr. Kelly's "honesty and fair play," the central attributes of a great reporter, which Ed Kelly has always been.

We in western New York, Mr. Speaker, are the beneficiaries of Ed Kelly's legacy of integrity and excellence.

The tributes follow:

[From the Buffalo (N.Y.) News, Sept. 13, 1983]

ED KELLY: A LABOR OF LOVE

(By Murray B. Light)

Ed Kelly tomorrow ends a 42-year love affair with his job of reporting and with The Buffalo News. He's wrapping up a distinguished career that has brought him many accolades but more importantly has brought him fulfillment.

Perhaps he best summed it up in a January 1956 memo to the editor of The News in which he noted that he had passed up an opportunity to leave the newspaper business for a job with a higher salary. He wrote: "I believe writing is the most creative job on a newspaper, that the reporter is the most important man on a newspaper. I am far more interested in reportorial work than in any type of desk work."

Typical of Kelly's dedication to his work and the newspaper on which he spent his entire professional career is the fact that he held off his retirement date so that he could supervise compilation of the primary election tabular matter The News will publish tomorrow. He's been overseeing this complex primary and election night job for many years.

This facet of Kelly's work was not known to many. He is well known throughout the United States for his work as a labor reporter, one of the finest in the newspaper business. He has spent almost all of his working time in that field for the past 34 years and for seven years prior to that covered labor as well as doing other reporting.

Ed Kelly's departure from the newsroom is a major loss. You can't readily replace a man with his expertise in a most difficult field. Labor reporting is an extremely sensitive field, and Kelly moved through dangerous minefields for decades without ever losing the respect and admiration of labor and management.

Fortunately, The News has on staff Joe Ritz, who covered the labor beat for the Courier-Express.

He has been working with Kelly for the past few weeks and now is prepared to take over. We are confident Ritz, an experienced, careful reporter, will carry on in the Kelly tradition.

In addition to his regular reporting in the area of labor relations, Kelly has written a weekly Labor Comment column since 1958, providing him an outlet for commentary in his field. The column will continue to run until October, Kelly's formal retirement date.

On the 20th anniversary of that column, Kelly wrote, ". . . the local labor-management community never runs out of substantial problems. And . . . it never runs out of those with enough vigor and courage to overcome them."

This respect for the men on both sides of the bargaining table typified Kelly's approach to his job and indicates why he was so good at it.

Through the years, Kelly has received awards from groups representing management and labor. Recently the AFL-CIO Council honored him with its community service award for union coverage, and the Buffalo chapter of the International Association of Personnel did the same. He's been cited by the Industrial Relations Research Association, the state Labor Department and the Diocesan Labor School, among many others. He's been the recipient of numerous Buffalo Newspaper Guild awards for excellence in his craft and has addressed many prestigious groups involved in labor and industrial relations throughout the country.

The News, its readers, union leaders and management personnel all will miss the high quality work of a top quality man, Ed Kelly.

COUNTY OF ERIE

On behalf of all the citizens of the County of Erie, I hereby extend congratulations and best wishes to Ed Kelly on the occasion of his retirement from the Buffalo News.

Throughout his career, Ed Kelly has been totally dedicated to responsible, in-depth news reporting and has been devoted to truth and knowledge in an effort to help us understand the events and changes occurring in our community. During his 42 years of service with the Buffalo News, he consistently selected and presented news on the basis of significance and genuine benefit to the public. He has been respected in the field of labor-management for honesty and fair play, which has in fact brought him national acclaim. His retirement will now enable him to serve the community in other ways. It is a pleasure to have this opportunity to join Ed Kelly's family and friends in wishing his many more years of good health, happiness and prosperity.

EDWARD J. RUTKOWSKI,
County Executive.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. TOM CORCORAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, due to previous commitments, I was not present and voting when the House considered various legislation on the following days:

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1983

Had I been present, I would have voted against an amendment to add $300 million to the Labor-Health and Human Services-Education appropriations bill for fiscal year 1984 (H.R. 3913) for job training and education programs. I was paired against this amendment. Also, I would have voted against final passage on this appropriations bill, which was over the President's budget request.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1983

Had I been present, I would have voted for passage under suspension of the rules of H.R. 3962, Export Administration Act temporary extension until October 14, 1983.

I would have voted against an amendment to H.R. 1010, Coal Pipeline Act of 1983, which sought to clarify downstream States' water rights and mandate creation of a compact among affected States in determining sale or diversion of water for coal pipelines. I was paired against final passage of this ill-conceived bill.●

NEW JERSEY EXPERIENCE SHOWS NEED FOR MINIMUM DRINKING AGE OF 21

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced H.R. 3870, a bill to end the carnage on our highways by establishing a national drinking age of 21.

I am proud of the fact that my own State of New Jersey has taken the lead in demonstrating the importance of the 21-year-old drinking age and in educating our youth on the fatal dangers of mixing drinking and driving. I am here inserting in the RECORD two articles on recent New Jersey efforts and experience.

I commend Essex County, the National Council on Alcoholism, and the many others working on the October 7 educational program described in one of the articles. Also, I note for the information of my colleagues the positive impact of the 21-year-old drinking age described in the other article. This provides further support for the importance of our extending the 21 year age limit nationwide as my bill, H.R. 3870 would do.

[From The Star-Ledger, Newark, N.J., Sept. 20, 1983]

POLICE SEE "IMPACT" OF 21 LAW

(By Mike Piserchia)

Fatal drunk driving accidents involving motorists ages 18 to 20 have shown a dramatic decrease in the six months since the state raised the legal drinking age to 21.

In addition, the number of drivers under 21 who were drunk at the time of fatal accidents also decreased, according to State Police statistics obtained yesterday.

For the first six months after the drinking age was increased from 19 to 21 on Jan. 1, there were 52 fatal drunk driving accidents involving motorists between the ages of 18 and 20. This compared with 79 fatal accidents involving the same age group during a similar period the year before.

Meanwhile, the number of 18-to-20-year-old drivers who were drunk at the time of fatal accidents also decreased, according to the figures. During the first six months of this year, 13 drivers were found to be drunk at the time of the crash compared with 34 during the same period last year.

"During the first six months since the 21-year-old drinking law went into effect, the number of fatalities involving 18-to-20-year-olds has substantially decreased," said Sgt. Robert Aldrich, supervisor of the State Police Fatal Accidents Investigation Unit. "Raising the drinking age to 21 seems to be having an impact."

Figures on the number of drunk driving deaths in the 18-20 age group were not available. However, it was the first time that State Police officials had been willing to assert publicly that the new law is having an effect on the number of fatalities involving youthful and less experienced drivers.

Aldrich said that State Police are continuing to closely monitor the situation and that nine-month fatality figures will be released in October.

Last Month, State Police released four-month figures that showed a decrease in the number of fatalities involving youthful drivers.

The figures showed there were nine intoxicated drivers under age 21 killed in car crashes, compared with 21 drivers killed during the same period last year.

In addition, State Police officials said that the number of drunk driving arrests involving youthful motorists has also decreased in recent months.

So far this year, State Police have been arresting an average of 482 youthful motorists each month for drunk driving, compared with 600 each month the year before.

State Police Superintendent Col. Clinton Pagano said that State Police have targeted areas where young drivers congregate, such as the Shore and other recreational areas, in their effort to crack down on drunk drivers and, particularly, those who sell alcoholic beverages.

But New Jersey's war on drunk drivers is not limited to the young. State Police officials have beefed up overall enforcement in recent months.

So far, the effort seems to be paying off with a lower number of fatalities than the year before.

According to the New Jersey Office of Highway Safety, there were 563 people killed on New Jersey's highway during the first eight months of this year, compared with 659 traffic fatalities during the same period last year.

Pagano attributes the lower figures to increased enforcement. He said police expect to arrest more than 40,000 motorists this year for drunk driving, many more than they arrested in previous years.

The New Jersey Office of Highway Safety, however, estimates that during the course of a year as many as 100,000 drivers operate motor vehicles while drunk.

FESTIVAL TO ENLIST TEEN SUPPORT FOR SOBER DRIVING

ESSEX RALLY ORGANIZERS HOPE YOUTHS GAIN "UPBEAT REASON" TO SHUN BOTTLE

(By Donna Leusner)

"Don't do what I did."

That's the message an 18-year-old former athlete—now confined to a wheelchair after driving while drunk—will bring to thousands of fellow teenagers next month during an anti-drunk driving rally.

Hector Del Valle, a senior at Dover High School last fall when he was paralyzed from the waist down after an accident, will be among the speakers during the National Council on Alcoholism's SOBER festival Oct. 7 at South Mountain Arena in West Orange.

But rather than focus on the tragic results of drunk driving, the SOBER (Stay Off the Bottle, Enjoy the Road) festival will attempt to give young people positive and upbeat reasons not to mix drinking and driving.

The teenage audience will also hear from 18-year-old Richard Potter of Branchburg, who was seriously injured when a van driven by a drunken friend collided with another vehicle. A poem Potter wrote before the accident about his desire to resist peer pressure has been set to music and will be played during the festival.

Giants quarterback Scott Brunner, U.S. Senator Bill Bradley, Gov. Thomas H. Kean, Essex County Executive Peter Shapiro and County Freeholder President Jerome D. Greco will also address the youngsters in an effort to encourage them not to drive after drinking.

Robert Bell of South Orange, the leader of the popular rock group Kool and the Gang, will perform with other members of his group to a videotape of their hit, "Celebration." Bell will also urge the teenagers not to mix drinking and driving.

"The SOBER fest will give young people a solid rationale for not drinking, but will do so in a festive format," explained Nancy Brach, executive director of the National Council on Alcoholism for the North Jersey area.

"We believe that by making young people feel good about themselves and their lives, they'll have the motivation they need to resist societal pressure to drive after consuming alcohol," Brach said.

"The message to the 4,000 students who will attend the SOBER festival is that alcohol is not their friend, that it's dangerous and irresponsible to drive while drunk or drive with someone who has been drinking, and that the tragedy of a drunk driving accident can happen to them just as it did to Hector Del Valle and Richard Potter."

The National Council on Alcoholism is producing the festival along with numerous public and private organizations and the Essex County government, which is donating the use of the South Mountain arena.

"Essex County is pleased to donate the use of the South Mountain Arena and to work with the National Council on Alcoholism for a program which we believe will persuade a lot of young people to think twice before driving after drinking," County Executive Peter Shapiro said.

The rally will be taped for replay in public and private high schools and edited for use on commercial and cable television stations throughout the state. Brach also urged Newark high school officials, who have not yet responded to invitations to the rally, to plan to bring their students to the Oct. 7 festival.

Brach also pointed out that while the rally has received the enthusiastic backing of dozens of groups and individuals, the cost of the event has still not been covered and the council needs donations to ensure that the show will, in fact, go on.

"We're asking corporations, organizations and individuals who are concerned about the carnage on our roadways due to drunken driving to support an event which aims to give young people positive and upbeat reasons not to mix driving with alcohol," Brach said.

"We believe the slaughter of young people on our highways can be curbed by motivating young people not to drink through forums such as the SOBER fest, and we're asking those who share our view to lend us their support," the executive director added.

Donations may be made to the National Council on Alcoholism, North Jersey Area, Inc., 60 South Fullerton Ave., Montclair, 07042.●

THE MASSACRE AT BABI YAR

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 42d anniversary of the massacre at Babi Yar, in the Ukraine. This tragic event took place on September 29 and 30, 1941. On those 2 days alone, the Nazis murdered over 33,000 Jewish men, women, and children.

Beginning a few weeks earlier, German troops began to arrive in Kiev. Overpowered by the Germans, the Soviet troops were forced to withdraw. But before their departure, they were able to commit one last retaliatory act against the Germans by laying mines and delayed action bombs in downtown Kiev. Naturally, the Jews were blamed.

Needing little provocation, the Germans ordered the Jews to gather at the Russian and Jewish cemeteries with all of their possessions and documents, thus leaving the clear impression that they would be resettled elsewhere. The sad truth is that there were no plans at all to resettle the Jews; the only plan was to murder these defenseless people.

But this story has significance that goes beyond the unbelieveable number of Jews killed, and the complicity of their neighbors, an occurrence not uncommon at the time in Europe. The long-range importance of the event lies in the Soviet Union's unrelenting attempts to remove this tragedy from the annals of history—to prevent the remembrance of Babi Yar by the sons and daughters of those who died at the hands of the Germans and their accomplices in 1941.

To the credit of many brave Soviet Jews, there have been repeated efforts to commemorate this tragic event. In typical Soviet fashion, however, the attempts to say Kaddish—the traditional prayer for the dead—have been stymied by the Soviets at every turn, resulting in the brutal harassment of Jews who refuse to forget.

In 1972, 27 Jews were arrested for placing flowers in the area where the murders took place. These arrests were not a deterrent, but instead inspired an attempt by 1,000 Jews to gather at the site in 1973. The police stopped this religious service and prevented the lighting of Yizkor candles, the religious symbol of mourning for the dead. Faced with the determination of Soviet Jews to mark the deaths of their relatives, the Soviets ultimately erected a monument in 1976. This monument, of course, makes absolutely no mention of the 75,000 Jews who eventually died at Babi Yar. As recently as 1981, the 40th anniversary of Babi Yar, the Soviets arrested five people on charges of hooliganism, and prevented others from traveling to the site.

The horrors of Babi Yar and the entire Holocaust dictate that we remember the crimes which were committed against the millions of innocent victims of that grim era. We will not forget. But we must also look ahead.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who are committed to a policy which places a high priority on human rights are obligated to apply the lessons of the Holocaust to the present condition of World Jewry. As Americans who live with the freedom to practice our religion, we have a responsibility to see that all oppressed Jews—be they in the Soviet Union, Ethiopia, Syria, or Nicaragua—are spared the persecution that has resulted in all of the Babi Yars throughout history. We must always remember the past; but we must also take whatever action is within our power to help all oppressed Jews and, indeed, all oppressed peoples, who depend on our efforts to gain their freedom.●

CONGRESSIONAL AUTO CAUCUS BREAKFAST

HON. ELWOOD HILLIS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, the Congressional Automotive Caucus had the extreme pleasure to host a breakfast this morning with Philip Caldwell, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Ford Motor Co. Mr. Caldwell's comments provided the caucus with an excellent insight into some of the current issues affecting the U.S. auto industry.

I believe every Member of the House will benefit from Mr. Caldwell's comments. Therefore, I am placing a copy of Mr. Caldwell's prepared statement in the RECORD at this point. I commend it to anyone's reading who has an interest in the automobile industry.

[Sept. 29, 1983]

Good morning. I'm delighted to have this opportunity to be here in an informal atmosphere, with congressmen who share the concerns of our industry and its employees. Although this caucus and its predecessor—the House Auto Task Force—were formed during some of Detroit's darker hours, let me assure you that the need for such a group to focus on automotive concerns has not diminished with the industry's present resurgence.

Originally, I had planned to use this opportunity to focus almost entirely on long-range competitiveness—hoping to enlist your aid and counsel in getting some strategies out of the idea stage and into the action stage. That is still my goal today; but first, there are some pressing "current events" on the agenda. In the last several weeks, three issues have been receiving a great deal of both media and congressional attention—safety, fuel economy, and Japanese export restraints.

Turning first to safety. At Ford, we're proud of our ongoing commitment to safety and our recent developments in safety technology:

We're the only bidder on a contract to supply the GSA with 5,000 driver-side air bag-equipped cars.

We have an on-the-road test fleet of cars equipped with new generation antilacerative windshields, which will also be installed on the GSA fleet.

Ford's 1983 and 1984 cars offer 5 mile an hour bumpers. These stronger bumpers, as well as other design and engineering features, have convinced one insurer to offer discount rates for two-thirds of our cars—by comparison, only one car from our five major Japanese competitors has earned a discount, and many are charged an extra premium.

Recent breakthroughs in microprocessor technologies and improved sensing systems will permit us to put new faster acting and more efficient anti-skid brakes on our 1985 luxury cars.

Over on the Senate side, the Commerce Committee recognized many of these technologies as having potential benefits. But they chose an unfortunate method of demonstrating this recognition—they want to mandate them. For a long-lead industry like ours, this approach leaves us no choice but to oppose the legislation vigorously because—among other reasons—the timing is impracticable. The judgments on the technologies are premature and legislating highly technical requirements so early may preclude development of the best approach.

We hope this is an idea whose time won't come. All of the safety technologies included in the Senate Commerce Committee bill are under development in the industry, and DOT has them under consideration and has the authority to accelerate this development and can regulate the timing and details of implementation, if needed.

My second "current event" is fuel economy.

At Ford we have improved our average fuel economy by more than 70 percent since 1975, and we're the only manufacturer with cars on all three of the EPA 1984 highest fuel economy lists—top ten overall, top ten gasoline, and top ten domestic.

In real world driving, the 1984 Ford Escort and Mercury Lynx with their lively 2-liter diesels will give 1,000 miles of city driving for just over 24 gallons of fuel at a cost of about $29 at present prices. Most drivers will need to fill the tank only once a month.

Our full-size sedan for 1984 has better fuel economy than our smallest 1975 car.

Put another way, fuel economy improvements have more than offset real fuel price increases—the inflation-adjusted fuel cost to operate today's full-size car is 28 percent less than a comparable 1975 model. It's no wonder then that there has been some shift back toward larger cars. But it's not a return to the pre-OPEC way of living and driving. Large cars today only account for about 12.3 percent of new car sales.

Yet press reports have seemed to focus not on progress we've made, but on the fact that we will be short of CAFE standards. Ford expects to comply with the law by using the flexibility provided in the law to apply credits from those years in which we exceed the standards. Let me assure you that the reason we're short of the standard is not a lack of technology or any diminished financial or engineering commitment to new fuel efficient products, but rather it is directly attributable to a change in what consumers are buying today.

As you know, you have provided NHTSA with administrative authority to make some adjustments; therefore, we have not urged any specific changes to the law at this time. Surely manufacturers—after all of our efforts and success in completely revamping the country's vehicle fleet—will not be unduly berated for something that is largely a matter of consumer preference.

The third of the three current issues is also the most critical to the recovery and competitiveness of the industry. We consider it imperative that Japanese auto restraints continue at the present level for at least the Japanese fiscal year beginning April 1, 1984. The September 15 letter to Ambassador Brock from your Caucus cochairmen couldn't have said it better:

It cited the handicaps of the current dollar/yen ratio and the beneficial commodity tax treatment granted Japanese manufacturers by their government as prohibiting the marketplace from correcting our automotive trade imbalance.

It called for an aggressive political response if we are to prevent further deterioration of our domestic automobile manufacturing industry.

It strongly recommended that Ambassador Brock insist that the Japanese agree to an extension of the current 1.68 million annual rate with no exceptions.

I urge you to keep the pressure on in case there is a tendency for backsliding. Your support is needed and timely; in the last few weeks it has become obvious that there are some in the Administration who would like to use the modest auto recovery as an excuse not to redress the obvious trading inequities under which we're operating.

As your letter to Ambassador Brock indicated, there's not much that auto manufacturers can do about the windfall advantage the Japanese get as a result of an out-of-joint exchange rate that reflects an undervalued yen and an overvalued dollar. That's the province of government. And so is the tax problem, which gives the Japanese an unfair advantage in this market and penalizes us in their market. Together, the dollar/yen misalignment and the tax inequity account for well over half of the Japanese "cost" advantage. This is a very serious problem for the domestic producers.

At Ford, we believe that the lion's share of the responsibility to be competitive belongs to us in the private sector and we're working hand in hand—management and labor—as hard as we know how:

When other industries were cutting back in recessionary times, we accelerated the pace of product innovation, introducing 8 new cars and trucks in the brief span of 18 months—products which are leading the industry in quality, value, technology and fun.

Our quality has improved by more than 50 percent since 1980, and independent surveys show we are better than our U.S. competition and as good as, or better than, most of our foreign competition.

By reducing operating costs, raising productivity and moderating compensation, we have reduced our break-even point sharply, which is why we're in the black even with sales levels that aren't really worth celebrating yet.

But while we in industry pursue those product, quality, cost and productivity factors within our control, government has to make the same sort of progress in the areas only it can control. The long-term answer is to have a fully competitive auto industry in a competitive United States. The way to get there is to have a business environment and government policies that are competitive with those of our foreign rivals. I believe the top priorities for policy change are to correct distortions in exchange rates and inequities in tax treatment.

Although the dollar is overvalued against most major currencies, the greatest damage comes from the misalignment with respect to the yen. The misalignment is a problem for all industries competing with Japanese imports at home and abroad. The dollar/yen misalignment alone gives the Japanese an artificial advantage or subsidy of $750 a car. The first step toward resolving the problem is to get the Administration to pay attention—serious attention—to the impacts involved.

Loss of competitiveness in international trade reduces U.S. production and increases unemployment—both of which further increase the budget deficit. The $100 billion deficit in trade projected for 1984 means $25 billion in lost tax revenues and $15 disappear.

Your support of the "Williamsburg" yen resolution shows you understand the importance of this misalignment. I hope you will continue to urge U.S. policies to deal with this issue.

Further, the Japanese with their commodity tax, and most other industrial nations with their value-added taxes, have also discovered how to make their tax systems competitive in world trade. The United States has not.

Unlike the United States, our major trading partners hold down their income and payroll taxes (which are themselves burdens on production costs) by imposing substantial sales taxes on consumption. Under GATT rules, these sales taxes may be rebated on exports and imposed on imports, whereas income and payroll taxes may not.

This really hits U.S. products and jobs where it hurts. United States cars shipped to Japan carry a full load of taxes when they leave our shores, and then Japan adds a sizable commodity, or consumption-type tax when they get there.

Conversely, when a Japanese car is exported to the United States, Japan doesn't levy the consumption tax—which amounts to 17½ or 22½ percent—and there is no commensurate tax collected in this country. That's worth something like $600 a car to the Japanese. It's all legal under GATT regulations, but U.S. producers and their employees get hurt, and all taxpayers in the United States have to pay the bill.

These are the reasons—tax inequities and currency misalignment—that explain why the United States can't compete on equal terms against imports at home or in markets abroad.

I know there are some tax writing experts on the Caucus. It seems to me that short of recasting our entire tax system, the United States has to find a way to treat some of our taxes in a manner similar to Europe's and Japan's—that is, to reduce the burden on United States exports and to equalize the burden on goods imported into this country. The idea of a reciprocal tax came up in a House Banking Committee hearing on industrial policy—placing a U.S. tax on any imported goods that carry an unfair tax advantage. John Nevin of Firestone has offered another approach: adopt a federal excise tax and allow credit against excise tax liability for other U.S. taxes paid on domestic production.

Well, that's a pretty lengthy list of issues and I know you have other priorities, as we do. We still think, for example, that some of the Clean Air Act changes we supported make sense for the industry and consumers. Also, we understand that the House is waiting for the Senate to act on the issue of product liability reform, which is essential if this country is to provide a measure of certainty for the engineers and managers who make design decisions as to what they can expect to be held accountable for. When these issues get farther along I would like to meet with you again to discuss them.

We've seen examples of what can be done when government, industry and labor come together on critical issues in other countries and in other industries. By working together I am sure we can make progress here as well.

Now let me recap those items that I have mentioned today . . .

Continued Japanese auto restraint at present levels is top priority. This is the quickest, surest way to get U.S. auto workers back on the job and keep them there.

Action on yen and tax are critical if we're to get away from short-term remedies and have a competitive U.S. business environment. Perhaps you would consider establishing a working group to move these issues into the action phase.

We hope you'll help us get the message across about the progress being made in safety and fuel economy; surely we don't wish to revert to the adversarial way of addressing these mutual goals.

Clean Air Act revisions and product liability reform continue as issues of high importance to us and we hope that you will assist us when these items come before you.

One thing is clear: America is in a worldwide competitive race and running behind. It is up to all of us to do our part to put our country back in the running. We in the auto industry are glad to have you on our team.

One final note, we have our all-new Mark VII outside . . . I hope you'll take the opportunity to take a quick look. It is the most technically advanced luxury car built in America. It literally rides on air.●

H.R. 1010

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I voted in favor of H.R. 1010, the Coal Pipeline Act 1983, following considerable deliberation and careful study of the arguments on both sides of the issue.

The United States must continue to move forward to reach its goal of energy independence. During the last decade, our country and other industrialized nations suffered greatly due to dependence on energy supplies subject to interruption. With instability in both the Middle East and Latin America growing, we must lessen our dependence on foreign fuel and thereby serve as a stable source of energy for our allies.

Coal is the most abundant resource in this country. The competition from coal pipelines could assist us in attracting foreign markets and could help assure that U.S. markets use U.S. coal. As the cost of rail transportation of coal escalates, more and more domestic utility companies are purchasing or looking to purchase their coal overseas. The National Coal Association projects that coal imports will increase from the current level of 1 million tons to 2 million tons in 1985, 4 million tons by 1990, and 6 million tons by 1995. Imports will continue to come from Australia, South Africa, and Poland and will begin to come from new exporting countries such as Colombia. Colombian marketing representatives are currently meeting with utilities in the United States offering cheaper coal delivery than our domestic market can provide.

Our Commerce and State Departments have concluded that the enactment of coal pipeline legislation granting access to Federal eminent domain could be a strong incentive to our trading partners to purchase U.S. coal. The European Community and the Japanese have specifically stated that the high cost of inland transportation is a major deterrent to increased purchases of United States coal. Competitive pricing of our coal is essential for the United States to achieve and maintain its role as a stable and reliable source of energy.

Consumer-owned utilities and individual consumers would benefit from the competitiveness of the coal market. Presently, a small number of railroads have a virtual monopoly on hauling coal needed by electric utilities. Coal slurry lines could compete with railroads and encourage them to modify their coal hauling rates, which in turn would benefit consumers. Recently, the Arkansas Power & Light Co. signed a coal transportation contract with the railroads, who underbid the ETSI pipeline project. Had there been no slurry line, the railroads would have set their own rate unchallenged. The utility estimates that the savings over present fuel transportation costs projected through the year 2016 would be $16.5 billion.

Additional benefits from enactment of coal slurry pipeline legislation would be realized in the potential of providing thousands of construction and related jobs, as well as creating the need for steel and other equipment used in pipeline construction. Direct construction jobs for the proposed pipelines are estimated at 46,000, with 5,000 jobs for operating and maintaining the systems. Indirect manufacturing jobs to provide valves, pumps, heavy duty equipment, and steel would be approximately 100,000.

Pipeline construction would provide a market for thousands of heavy-duty vehicles, light-duty trucks, pumps, and electric motors. It is estimated that 3 million tons of steel would be needed for the main pipelines, as well as additional pipes and conveyor belts. And, over a 20-year period, the amount of State, local property, and excise taxes paid would be approximately $2.9 billion.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, I supported the Coal Pipeline Act of 1983 for the employment opportunities it would provide, for the savings to consumers it could generate, and most important, for the vital boost it would give our Nation in attaining its goal of energy independence.●

BROTHER PATRICK GREGORY O'BRIEN DAY PROCLAIMED BY CITY OF CINCINNATI

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and a privilege to recognize and commend Brother Patrick Gregory O'Brien F.S.C. for his outstanding service to Cincinnati's religious, educational, and cultural communities. Brother O'Brien, who is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his profession of vows and the beginning of his high service, has recently been honored in a special event that recognizes his many contributions to the city of Cincinnati.

Cincinnati paid special tribute to him by proclaiming September 24, 1983, as Brother Patrick Gregory O'Brien Day. This appreciation day will acknowledge Brother O'Brien's caring for all humanity and depict his honorable character.

At a time in our Nation's history when many would rather take than give, we find a man who is devoting his time and effort to something meaningful. Brother Patrick Gregory O'Brien had devoted 25 years to his religious vocation. During these years he has been a prominent member of the Cincinnati community and has participated in the cultural and artistic life of our city through his active involvement in the Cincinnati Art Museum, the Museum of Natural History, the Ancient Order of the Hibernians, and many others. Brother O'Brien has used his knowledge of the greater Cincinnati community and his upbringing in Price Hill to further an appreciation of Cincinnati's citizens in general. He has spent the last decade in service to the Cincinnati educational community at LaSalle High School. Moreover, Brother O'Brien has carried his vocation to other States and foreign countries during his years of service to his faith.

We in Cincinnati are privileged to have a man who seeks to help his fellow citizens. Brother Patrick Gregory O'Brien has waved a banner of sensitivity, compassion, and service and deserves a day of honor for immeasurable public service. Speaking for the people of the First District of Ohio and the city of Cincinnati, I would like to thank Brother O'Brien for his dedicated and distinguished service to his faith and our city.●

GOD, MAN, AND WAR: CHRISTIANITY VERSUS ISLAM VERSUS JUDAISM

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, one would think the news of Lebanon is emanating from a time warp and today's headlines should highlight the feats-at-arms of Saladin, St. Louis of France, and Richard the Lionheart. Lebanon has become, par excellence, the land of global deja vu. We all look at Lebanon and wonder if we and those fighting there have learned anything since the days of the Crusades.

Certainly, today's battles over the Middle East involve, as the Crusades involved, political and financial interests not directly related to religiously inspired intolerance. However, without the official excuse and smugly held belief that "God is on our side," there could long ago have been a peaceful resolution of the conflict instead of further atavistic massacres and eternally bloody reprisals.

The history of mankind's wars is replete with belief in "God" as their motivation and justification. More precious human life and potential have been lost in fighting for a claim to exclusive relations with the Deity than any other reason. Neither human greed nor lust nor envy can match religious conflict as the preeminent cause of mankind's killing each other. Even the United States-Soviet confrontation has an undertone of theism versus atheism.

Pharoah Akhnaton's ruthless purges of Egypt's polytheism, its priests and followers was followed quickly after his assassination by efforts to wipe both his memory and followers off the face of the Earth. Christianity was finally granted toleration by the Roman Empire in A.D. 313, but in very short order was using that same Empire as its secular arm in persecuting heterodox Christians.

As the Moslem Empire spread over the Near and Middle East, North Africa, and most of Spain, the cry was of "Jihad!" against the infidel Christians. Islamic paradise was to be won by killing enemies of the true religion in "holy war." Today, the same cries of "Jihad" echo near the Persian Gulf as the Iranian Shiites and the Iraqi Sunni die by the thousands, clinging to their version of the message left by the Prophet.

The Sunni, Druze, and Shiite moslem sects of Lebanon have temporarily left off shooting at each other and have united—very warily—in shooting at the Christian Phalange, which temporarily is representing the Christian Maronites, Greek Orthodox, and Uniates, and Catholic Armenians.

Christian intolerance, however, has not taken second place to that of our Islamic brethren. From persecution of the Donatists in the fourth century—through both Catholic and Protestant Inquisitions, the Wars of Reformation, the Thirty Years War, St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre, the Battle of the Boyne, brutal persecutions in both North and South American colonies, up to today's sickening fratricide in Northern Ireland—Christians have continued to kill each other with frightening regularity and efficiency. All of this killing has been in the name of the same Christian God of love in whom they all professed belief. The Holocaust has written its own incredible and sad chapter in mankind's inhumanity and murderous intolerance.

Fortunately, we Americans have been blessed with a Constitution and a tradition of tolerance derived directly from an immigrant people—devout believers in diverse faiths who sought in America the religious freedom denied them in the original homelands from which they fled. That Constitution and tradition prohibit any law "respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

We Americans, while experiencing some religious intolerance in our history, do not reflect sufficiently on how fortunate we are and how rare such a benign separation of church and state is in a world driven by religious hatred and violence. Man himself cannot be separated neatly into body and spirit—nor can the insitutions he creates to serve his temporal and spiritual needs be separated absolutely.

However, America has achieved what might literally be called a modus vivendi between church and state—the ministers of God going about His business and the ministers of Caesar going about theirs—cooperating where possible but also trying never to interfere. We have come to realize that government can best protect religious freedom and encourage a moral citizenry by passing and enforcing fair laws in consonance with our Constitution.

The churches can best foster and help protect democratic principles by encouraging strong faith, good works, and an inviolable tolerance of the beliefs of others. Working separately and successfully each in their own earthly vineyard is the best way a fortunate and blessed America can benefit most from church and state. Would that Lebanon and all the Middle East could be so fortunate.●

HON. BOBBI FIEDLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join today as one of the original sponsors of the Pension Equity Act of 1983. This legislation is the result of long meetings between White House officials and many of the Republican Congresswomen. It is designed, in part, to correct some of the inequities which currently exist in the private pension system.

I believe most of my colleagues understand the importance of this legislation—and the need for its swift enactment. Women have been the recipients of much lower levels of retirement income for too many years. The reasons for this lower level of income are many. Among them are that women's wages are lower than men's wages; women's labor force participation is lower than men's; entry into the labor force in many instances is more recent than men's; and women's job turnover is greater than men's. As a result, many more married women are dependent on their husband's pension for retirement income. More importantly, there are too many examples of women who never receive any of their husband's pension because of the inequities of the current pension system. Thus, the need for the Pension Equity Act of 1983 is even more pronounced.

Mr. Speaker, in 1978, the average annual pension for a woman was more than $1,000 less than that of the average male benefit. Even worse are the horror stories which we all continue to hear about, where a husband dies 1 year before being eligible for early retirement benefits, and as a result, his spouse receives no survivor benefits. Mr. Speaker, these inequities simply cannot continue.

No one questions the positive impact that the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) has had on some—it has significantly increased the ability of women to receive pension benefits based on their own or their husband's earnings. But, as I have stated earlier, much more needs to be done.

Finally, while I would like to see the Pension Equity Act of 1983 go further in some areas, I nonetheless believe that there is a great need for reform of the private pension system to eliminate those pension provisions which discriminate against women. While the legislation that we are introducing today moves us one step closer, we must continue to carefully examine other pension areas where we might be able to achieve equality by eliminating discrimination while at the same time continuing to assure a healthy private pension system.●

TRIBUTE TO STEPHEN ROSEMAN, ESQ.

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, recently, there has been a great deal of discussion on the issue of legal services for indigent Americans in connection with the Legal Services Corporation and the Older Americans Act. Although some may disagree over the vehicle for providing such services, I believe this debate has helped focus congressional attention on the pressing need for the poor to have access to legal representation.

The need for legal services is particularly evident in the case of senior citizens. The elderly are especially susceptible to the kinds of civil legal complications—for example, tenant/landlord, welfare and pension benefits—which legal service programs are designed to assist. Furthermore, whereas one-quarter of our elderly population is poor or near poor, it becomes evident that senior citizens, as a group, have special requirements for legal assistance.

Stephen Roseman, Esq., president of the Bar Association for Sussex County, understands this situation. Sussex County's Senior Legal Resource Center has only one attorney and one paralegal to handle the legal needs of hundreds of indigent senior citizens. The inadequacy of these resources has led Mr. Roseman to urge all members of the Sussex County Bar Association to contribute financially toward the creation of another staff attorney position. Here is an example of the true spirit of cooperation and philanthropy which is needed to insure all Americans are afforded the opportunity to safeguard their own legal rights and liberties. Stephen Roseman deserves commendation for working toward this modest, but significant, objective. The members of the Sussex County Bar Association have demonstrated that small gestures can mean a great deal to the less fortunate. I applaud Mr. Roseman for his efforts to show that equal justice under the law is not an empty phrase in this country.●

THE 42D ANNIVERSARY OF BABI YAR

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise today to remind my colleagues of the atrocities committed 42 years ago during World War II at Babi Yar. Babi Yar geographically can be described as a ravine outside of Kiev. It is now realized, however, that Babi Yar is far more than a ravine. It is an eerie, black abyss, a cemetery where thousands upon thousands of Ukrainian Jews were slaughtered by being stripped naked of their clothes and belongings, lined up to face a Nazi firing squad, machinegunned down, or buried alive.

On September 29, 1941, the Jews of Kiev were called to assemble by the Nazi invaders. Many of the Jews believed they were being evacuated to Palestine. The Soviet Jews knew nothing of the anti-Semitic legislation enacted by Nazi Germany against the Jews or of Hitler's final solution. With their destination unknown the Jews gathered to be led to an incomprehensible fate. On September 29 and 30, during a 36-hour period, a total of 33,771 Jews were executed. Babi Yar was applauded by the German High Command because in 2 days the Jewish death toll was statistically higher than before was thought conceivable. The gas chambers of Auschwitz at their peak could not duplicate this feat. And at Birkenau only 6,000 Jews were killed daily utilizing their four gasing and cremating plants.

After World War II and the murder of 6 million European Jews, the Soviet Union labeled Jews as unpatriotic, rootless, and cosmopolitans since they sympathized with world Jewry. Thus, Soviet Jews suffered a backlash of anti-Semitism. International attention was focused on Babi Yar in 1961 when the Soviet Government was planning to build a park over the ravine. Soviet poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko wrote of Babi Yar, "Here all things scream silently." The Soviet Union had denied that Babi Yar was a gravesite of Soviet Jews. The Soviets even went so far as to charge that Zionists were conspiring with Hitler and were in part responsible for Babi Yar. In 1976, the official monument at Babi Yar finally was erected, even though it makes no mention that most of the victims were Jews.

Today, Babi Yar has become a symbol of a lost Jewish identity for Soviet Jewish dissidents. The Soviets continue to rewrite history. According to the National Conference on Soviet Jewry, a Soviet film was recently released abroad entitled "Babi Yar: The Lessons of History." It is a film linking Nazism, racism, apartheid, and other forms of rabid nationalism with Zionism. The tragedy of Babi Yar is that there is no mention of Jewish victims, only Soviet heroism.

This Sunday at Temple Sinai of Hollywood, Fla., the Jewish Federation of South Broward will be remembering Babi Yar with a special program. Presentations will be given by two couples who recently visited Babi Yar and by guest speaker Dr. Franklin Littell, professor of religion at Temple University and founder of the National Institute on the Holocaust in Philadelphia. Also, the regional B'nai B'rith youth organization will share their Holocaust project with the community. They intend to collect 6 million pennies to remember the victims of the Holocaust and then make an allocation to Jewish agencies in south Florida. Thus far, 1 million pennies have been collected over a 2-year period.

Babi Yar is more than a Nazi massacre, it illustrates the kaleidoscope of the Jewish experience in Russia, the harsh and bloodstained history of a people who still have no freedom from harassment today.●

TRIBUTE TO HART AND SIMONA HASTEN

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to pay tribute today to Hart and Simona Hasten of Indianapolis, two people whose interests span the globe, ranging from philanthropy to sports.

Hart Hasten exemplifies the American success story. He was born in Poland and came to the United States in 1951, later graduating from the University of Minnesota Institute of Technology.

His business career has been long and distinguished. Perhaps his most outstanding business commitment was to the elderly, through his founding of the Colonial Crest nursing centers, which he operated with his brother Mark.

He later became president of the First National Financial Corp. of Martinsville, Ind., and as chairman and director of the executive committee of two prominent banking institutions.

But the business side of Hart Hasten is only part of the story. He is a devoted husband and father. This year he and Simona celebrated their 22d wedding anniversary. They have three lovely children, Renee, Barnard, and Joshua.

Hart Hasten's devotion to improving the lives of others literally covers the world. His involvement with philanthropic and educational organizations reaches from the heartland of America to the Middle East. His work to improve human understanding can best be exemplified by his past membership on the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Throughout his life, Hart Hasten has been a good natured, but determined competitor, whether in business or on the tennis courts he loves so much.

I wish him and his family all the best in all their future endeavors.●

BILL TO ELIMINATE MANDATORY RETIREMENT FOR TAX COURT JUDGES

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, in 1967 Congress passed the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) which prohibited discrimination in employment on account of age. It applied generally to individuals in the private sector. In 1974 Congress amended the ADEA to include within its scope Federal, State, and local government employees, and in 1978 Congress further amended the ADEA by eliminating mandatory retirement in Federal employment. The legislative history makes it clear that Tax Court judges were intended at least by the House to be within the group of Federal employees for which mandatory retirement was eliminated.

* * * Mandatory retirement would be eliminated for the great majority of jobs in the civil service, for positions in the foreign service, for tax court judges, District of Columbia public school teachers, District of Columbia judges, the United States Comptroller General, and the Director of the Federal Judicial Center among others. However, the current provision in section 15(b) which allows the Civil Service Commission to establish maximum age requirements when such age is a bona fide occupational qualification necessary to the performance of job would remain * * * (H. Rept. No. 95-527, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 11 (1977).)

Yet, the statute appears not to exempt Tax Court judges; it refers only to units of the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government having positions in the competitive service; 29 U.S.C. 633(a).

SEC. 633(a). Nondiscrimination on account of age in Federal Government employment.

(a) Federal agencies affected. All personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment who are at least 40 years of age (except personnel actions with regard to aliens employed outside the limits of the United States) in military departments as defined in section 102 of title 5, United States Code (5 USC § 102), in executive agencies as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code (5 USC § 105) (including employees and applicants for employment who are paid from nonappropriated funds), in the United States Postal Service and the Postal Rate Commission, in those units in the government of the District of Columbia having positions in the competitive service, and in those units of the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government having positions in the competitive service, and in the Library of Congress shall be made free from any discrimination based on age.

Thus, the present status of Tax Court judges, of whom several are rapidly approaching the age of 70, is unclear.

In eliminating mandatory retirement for employees generally, the Senate recognized that a new awareness has developed concerning discrimination against the elderly, and public attention has focused on the inequity and lack of wisdom of mandatory retirement. It further recognized that older employees may, in fact, be better employees because of experience and job commitment, and that an age limitation unfairly assumes that age alone provides an accurate measure of an individual's ability to perform work. See Senate Report No. 95-493, 95th Congress, 2d session 505-506 (1978). The express purpose of this legislation supports the view that Tax Court judges should likewise be exempt from mandatory retirement. However, section 7447(b)(1) currently imposes a mandatory retirement age of 70 on Tax Court judges. That section, which was enacted long ago, is effectively obsolete in light of the intent and purpose of the recent legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment solely on account of age. Thus, I urge the amendment of section 7447(b)(1) to eliminate any mandatory retirement imposed on Tax Court judges.

This position is further supported by recent legislation. In 1981 Congress amended section 7443, Internal Revenue Code 1954, to eliminate the ban on initial appointments of individuals age 65 or older as U.S. Tax Court judges. The reason for the change was that such a ban conflicted with Federal policies against age discrimination and could deprive the Tax Court of experienced personnel. Senate Report No. 96-993, 96th Congress, 2d session 3949 (1980). This legislation and the reasons behind it simply reflect congressional concern that qualified and able judges should be allowed to continue in the same capacity irregardless of their age. Moreover, it would seem to me highly unusual to allow the appointment of a Tax Court judge older than 65 only to require him to retire at age 70.

One further note. Recent social security amendments, although clearly applicable to active Tax Court judges, raise certain questions with respect to judges who stay on after retirement. Although retired pay is not salary for social security purposes, it is unclear whether a retired judge is thereby precluded from acquiring social security quarterly credits necessary for qualification. Therefore, the mandatory retirement provision may prevent some of the older judges from fully qualifying for social security coverage although they are required to pay into social security up to age 70. I understand any tampering with the social security provisions is a politically sensitive issue, and I do not suggest amending those provisions. However, amending the mandatory retirement provision in the Internal Revenue Code would appear to be a reasonable solution. Then a judge would have the option of continuing on a salary basis and acquire the necessary credits. Federal district court judges do not have any upper age limit and almost without exception are known to carry out their duties efficiently and capably well past the age of 70. To be sure, judges grow with age and experience. I further note that special trial judges of the Tax Court who hear small tax cases, deficiencies less than $5,000, as Federal employees in the competitive service, are exempt from mandatory retirement. I would like to see the elimination of mandatory retirement for all Tax Court judges, and I believe such a provision is entirely consistent with recent legislation. Indeed, it appears that it may be an inadvertent omission that Tax Court judges have not already been exempted.●

A TRIBUTE TO 50 YEARS OF EXCELLENCE

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment of the House's time to offer my congratulations to two constituents of mine who are celebrating a doubly special occasion.

This October 17, Mary and Joseph Stafford will commemorate the 50th anniversary of their wedding as well as their restaurant business in Camden, N.J.

Chubby's Restaurant, which is owned and operated by the Stafford family, has remained at its present location since its opening a half century ago.

Since then, Chubby's has developed a widespread reputation for its special steak dinners. During the peak years of the nightclub era, Chubby's was one of the most popular nightclub restaurants in the Northeast. At that time it was considered comparable to the famed Copacabana nightclub in New York City. Many of the Nation's top entertainers appeared at Chubby's during that period.

Today it continues to provide the Philadelphia metropolitan area with an excellent dining opportunity time after time.

Combined with the 50th wedding anniversary of the restaurant's founders, this occasion becomes an extra special one for the Stafford family, and the community of Camden where they continue to reside in the area known as Fairview.

I believe this is truly a golden time for these two fine people, and I want to wish them the very best for many years to come.●

RAILROADS MUST KEEP THEIR BARGAIN WITH THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the land grant railroads continue to renege on their bargain.

Over a century ago the railroads received vast tracts of public land—over 130 million acres—and in return agreed to build and operate railroad lines for the public benefit.

Some of the land grant railroads now want to walk away from that bargain. They want to abandon 155 branch lines, with almost 3,000 miles of track, in 22 States over the next 3 years.

The people served by these branch lines need railroad service. Farmers need to ship their products. Manufacturers need to receive raw materials and ship the finished goods. The small towns along each of the branch lines are dependent on regular railroad service. When service is abandoned the economies in these towns suffer a depression that makes the 1930's seem like boom times.

A recent Wall Street Journal article, which I submit for the RECORD, describes how some States are stepping into the railroad business by taking over branch lines. They are trying to preserve needed service, but without the benefit of the land grant assets entrusted to the railroads.

States should benefit from the land grant assets when they take over branch lines. It would help them out, and it is only fair. I introduced the Railroad Service and Accountability Act of 1983 to accomplish this. Let us hold the land grant railroads to their bargain and preserve rail service across America.

WORRIED STATES ENTER THE RAILROAD BUSINESS TO SAVE BRANCH LINES

(By Bill Richards)

DENTON, MONT.—In the gathering gloom of a late Sunday afternoon, Jack Sparks directs a steady stream of heavily laden farm trucks toward a 20-foot-high mound of wheat and barley spreading across the ground at Cargill Corp.'s grain elevator here.

Mr. Sparks, manager of the elevator, is clearly unhappy about the dumping, but he hasn't any choice: The harvest isn't over yet and the nine-story elevator is already crammed with 415,000 bushels of wheat. With similar scenes taking place around the region, Mr. Sparks lays most of the blame squarely on the Burlington Northern Railroad, which ran its last train down the 74-mile branch line into this rural area last February.

Pigweed and thistle sprout between the tracks here now, and the grain is piling up faster than trucks can haul it to the railroad's main line, 30 miles away. "We could be skiing down those piles before they get it all out of here," Mr. Sparks grumbles. "If we had a railroad, we could handle it."

To forestall such problems, Montana and other states are taking steps that harken back to the days of prairie populism. The states themselves, or public authorities they have helped create, are moving toward the purchase of thousands of miles of threatened branch lines, in effect putting themselves into the railroad business. In some states, purchases have already been made.

A MATTER OF SURVIVAL

"A few years ago, this wouldn't have gone over too well in a politically conservative part of country like this," says John Conrad, a transportation official for the state of Washington. Now, he says, "it's a matter of survival."

Wheat and railroads in this part of the country are like the chicken and the egg: It is difficult to say which came first, but they are inextricably linked. In June, the Burlington Northern declared its intention of abandoning 111 branch lines of mostly rural track through the Midwest and Northwest, including nearly 475 miles in Montana. The move, coming on top of recent abandonments by the bankrupt Rock Island line and by the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad, has state officials worried.

They say the abandonments will burden farmers with stiff trucking charges, overload inadequate local road systems and possibly kill of some of the same small trackside communities that the railroads once helped spawn.

It is such fears that are spurring the move by states and agenices into the railroad business. The state of Washington, where the Burlington Northern plans to drop 29 branch lines, is working on a program to save at least half a dozen rural spur lines. It has already helped set up two "port districts" that have purchased branch lines and is working on a third.

OTHER STATES ACT

Similar branch-line rescue programs are under way in Oklahoma and Wisconsin. In Kansas, the legislature amended the state's 1859 constitution—which banned public dabbling in railroading—so that the state could guarantee part of an $18 million loan to purchase and rehabilitate 460 miles of former Rock Island track slated for abandonment. An authority, composed of 14 counties along the line's right-of-way, plans to lease the track to an independent short-line operator.

Deregulation of railroads has made branch-line abandonments easier, and the railroads have been seizing the opportunity, particularly west of the Mississippi. The Association of American Railroads estimates that an average of 4,900 miles of track is being dropped annually. "This isn't what deregulation was all about," says U.S. Sen. Mark Andrews, the North Dakota Republican who heads the transportation subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee. In 1981 he pushed through a bill limiting, to 340 miles, the amount of branch line that railroads can abandon in his home state. "I imagine other states may seek the same form of protection," he says.

In South Dakota, Gov. William Janklow headed up a drive that raised $30 million and allowed the state to buy 799 miles of threatened Milwaukee Road branch line. "We have public schools, public hospitals, public airports—why not a public railroad?" says the Republican governor.

BETTER THAN YELLING

South Dakota pruned about 300 miles of money-losing branch—including a line to Mr. Janklow's home town of Flandreau—and leased the rest back to the Burlington Northern to operate. Mr. Janklow says that the action saved his state's grain industry. "You can yell and sue all you want when a railroad abandons it tracks," he says, "but that isn't going to get your grain to market."

Montana has moved more cautiously. "If you'd have tried to get this state involved in railroading even a year ago, you'd have gotten murdered in the legislature," says William J. Fogarty, head of Montana's department of transportation. But in April, after it became known that the Burlington Northern planned to drop 18 branch lines in Montana, the legislature authorized Mr. Fogarty's department to look into buying several of the threatened lines. No line has been purchased yet.

The Burlington Northern's role as monopoly railroad in the state since the Milwaukee Road shutdown has made Montanans particularly touchy. Farmers' groups say that the railroad is using its position to charge grain shippers here more per mile to the West Coast than it charges farmers in Nebraska, where it has competition from the Union Pacific. The railroad denies being unfair and is fighting a lawsuit filed in federal court by four farm groups over its grain-hauling rates.

Still more hard feelings have surfaced over the Burlington Northern's status as a land-grant railroad. When it was formed in a 1970 merger, one of the original railroads was the Northern Pacific, largest of the federal and state land-grant recipients with nearly 38.6 million acres—including nearly 16% of Montana. Over the years, the railroad has sold much of the land but retains valuable mineral rights. Members of Congress from Montana and North Dakota are seeking federal legislation to force railroads to plow back some of their revenue from such rights into operations and branch-line maintenance.

"Part of the land-grant concept was to provide service to rural Amercia, and that's something the Burlington Northern isn't doing these days," says Keith Kelly, head of Montana's department of agriculture.

Burlington Northern officials say the railroad long ago repaid whatever debt it owned under the land-grant system. "There's nothing in the land grant that says we have to continue to maintain railroad lines that aren't profitable," says Darius Gaskins, the railroad's senior vice president for marketing and sales.

The railroad says that the branch lines proposed for abandonment are "losers" that don't fit into its plans for streamlining its grain hauling by using more 52-car unit trains—trains that are fully loaded at one point and fully unloaded at another—moving along profitable east-west main lines.

"Some communities would like the railroad to continue to make a contribution to them," Mr. Gaskins says. "That isn't the business we're in."

Denton is one of those towns. "We ship five million bushels of wheat out of here every year and we're entitled to a railroad," says Robert Barber, a local farmer and member of the Fergus County Board of Commissioners. On a recent evening, Mr. Barber and several of Denton's 400 Citizens gathered in John Musik's International Harvester dealership here, trying to explain to a visitor the delicate rural ecology that depends on the railroad.

For Mr. Musik, who has operated the only farm-implement dealership in Denton for the last 16 years, the shutdown of the branch line means a 60-mile round trip to pick up every carload of machinery that arrives by rail—20 so far this year. If the line isn't reestablished here, he says, he may have to relocate to another town with rail service. That would cost Denton 10 full-time jobs and two part-time positions.

"And if John leaves," adds wheat farmer Gene DeMars, "I'd end up traveling 50 miles every time I needed a piece of machinery repaired." As it is, Mr. DeMars is paying an extra $10,000 to $15,000 this year to have his grain hauled by truck. "Some of us won't last with expenses like that," he predicts.

Without a rail link, Cargill has indicated it may have to move its local operation from Denton to Stanford, Mont., the nearest community on the Burlington Northern main line. That would idle two of Denton's three grain elevators, raising concern here that not enough business would be left to support the town's bank and hardware store.

What's more, Mr. Barber estimates it will cost nearly $40 million to upgrade the county's roller-coaster, two-lane highway system to handle thouands of extra truck-loads of grain. And formal abandonment of the branch line will cut Denton's high-school-district tax base by nearly 5%. "We've only got 42 kids in the high school now," Mr. Barber says. "Pull a dozen or more families out of a town this size and you lose the whole thing. So much depends on the railroad."

The Burlington Northern says it shut down the branch line and scheduled it for abandonment because it could cost $30 million to bolster the track to handle much heavier unit trains. In 1980, when it bought the branch line from the Milwaukee Road, the Burlington Northern pledged in writing to continue service here and spend $7.4 million on repairs. The money was never spent, says Lawrence Kaufman, a railroad vice president. "We reneged," he admits. "It doesn't pay out. But I don't think any corporation is in a position to dump $30 million just to honor a commitment."

Some people here don't see it that way. Last week Montana sued the Burlington Northern in state court, charging that the railroad had breached its agreement on the branch line. "This is still a state where people feel they can do things on a handshake," says Mr. Fogarty. "No one's shaking hands with Burlington Northern anymore."●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, last night, September 28, 1983, the House passed House Joint Resolution 368, making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984. I was not able to be present for this vote. Therefore, I would like to make it clear for the record that I would have voted "yea" on this measure, rollcall No. 362.●

THE CONTINUING PRESENCE OF MARINES IN LEBANON

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I have received a copy of an excellent letter to President Ronald Reagan from my longtime friend and constituent, Arnold Ligon, of Madisonville, Ky., with regard to the continuing presence of U.S. marines in Lebanon and the downing of Korean Air Lines flight 007. I believe Arnold Ligon's comments to be thought-provoking and as the House has just passed House Joint Resolution 364, regarding the multinational force in Lebanon, I want to share my friend's views as directed to the President. His letter follows:

ARNOLD LIGON CO.,
Madisonville, Ky., September 12, 1983.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I do not want our American people killed on foreign soil such as recently happened in Lebanon. I want us to be a strong nation with all the military might that we can. But as far as killing our people, we should be very careful about that. We can furnish knowledge but not lives.

This letter is certainly not meant to be critical—just my personal observation. Had Begin been allowed to do as he wanted, he would have had all of those people attended to—the PLO's would have been annihilated by now. We did not only let them slip out of there, we have now let them slip back.

I know I should have written this letter sooner but you have been on vacation as well as Congress. I just believe we should furnish the weapons to the guys over there and do the training and be the brains.

Another subject of recent interest is the shooting of the Korean airplane. I had a company commander tell me when I was in the National Guard that someday we would have to fight Russia—the sooner the better. Maybe we should just get it over with. Today I am sure we do not intend to fight Russia. I think your grain contract needs to be lived by. I really believe the power nations of the world should boycott Russia from everything—stop their airplane flying—just let them sit over there by themselves. We should not send them anything. I am tired of them grabbing our people. I guess it would be a little too tough to say we should bomb Moscow, but I guess if we dug up Harry Truman he would not have to be told to bomb them—he would probably do it.

I really think we should boycott Russia off of every piece of soil in the world except maybe for the Embassy in Washington and send the rest of the Communists home. Let them get out of there—cancel all of their passports—everything. You could even close the Embassy if you wanted to.

This may be a little tough but I think we have a right to voice our opinion.

Sincerely,

ARNOLD LIGON,
President.●

TRUCKERS' 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JAMES J. HOWARD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that the United States is a nation on wheels. In a very real sense, that is true. Our population is the most mobile in the world. To a degree, unmatched in any other country, the materials which fuel the economy, and the food that sustains our people move across an unparalleled system of highways.

Mr. Speaker, I have said all of this by way of preface, to call to the attention of the House the fact that this week will mark the 50th anniversary of the American Trucking Associations, a federation with affiliates in every State of the union. We have seen the trucking industry grow from its infancy in the post-World War I days to the point where, today, more than 80 percent of all fresh fruits and vegetables move by truck; more than 70 percent of all clothing; and almost 60 percent of all manufactured goods.

Obviously, no great segment of the transportation industry can function without the dedicated service of tens of thousands of men and women, both in management and labor. It is their effort, repeated on a daily basis, which makes it possible for people in the United States to enjoy a standard of living unprecedented in history.

On behalf of my colleagues I congratulate the ATA on its 50th anniversary and extend my best wishes for the future.●

A TRIBUTE TO O. K. ARMSTRONG

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to extend my congratulations and best wishes to former Congressman O. K. Armstrong, a great American and a good friend, who is celebrating his 90th birthday on October 2.

The book of Proverbs tells us that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches and loving favour rather than silver and gold." O. K. Armstrong has earned both in his lifetime, gaining a national reputation as a U.S. Congressman and Missouri State legislator, a Christian leader and educator, and a widely read and influential author, while at the same time earning the loving favor of everyone he meets. His daughter-in-law Judy was my first legislative assistant and was a tremendous help to me in my first two terms in Congress. Judy and her husband, Stanley, remain good friends of my family to this day.

O. K. Armstrong was born on October 2, 1893, in Willow Springs, Mo., the son of Rev. William Calvin Armstrong and Agness Brockhaus Armstrong. He was educated at Drury College in Springfield, Mo., and graduated summa cum laude before moving on to Cumberland Law School and the University of Missouri School of Journalism to complete his education. O. K. served the United States patriotically as a lieutenant in World War I, and represented the American Legion at the FIDAC Congress in Paris, France.

O. K. Armstrong has a strong calling to serve his fellow man, and he has fulfilled this calling in many different ways. As a Christian leader and educator in Missouri, Florida, and Washington, D.C. he has spread the word of God to many generations. In his role as State legislator, U.S. Congressman and adviser to Taiwan, Vietnam and Germany he has spread the American message of peace and democracy. His speechwriting and lecturing for the Republican Party, and his literary contributions have enlightened thousands of people throughout our country.

O. K. Armstrong is a man of great faith, extraordinary patriotism, and exceptional talent. I am honored to be able to stand here today to pay tribute to his accomplishments, congratulate him on his 90th birthday, and extend my best wishes to O. K. and his beautiful family on this very happy occasion.●

INCOMPLETE REPORTING BY THE NEWS MEDIA

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, in today's environment, a citizen must depend to a great extent on the news media for enlightenment in world affairs and particularly for understanding the affairs of his Government. Today, in the media and elsewhere, we see many and frequent criticisms of our defense procurement practices: waste, fraud, inefficiency. Some of these criticisms are undoubtedly valid; many are not.

I would like to cite, Mr. Speaker, a recent example of how incomplete reporting contributes to the public's misunderstanding of defense procurement practices.

Recently you may have noticed that there were a number of articles in the newspapers deploring the operational test failures of the recently deployed air launched cruise missile system. They reported that the ALCM missile had failed every flight test since it attained initial operational capability last December. The headlines groaned, "Cruise Missile Tests Suspended." Surely this was yet another example of Government waste, deploying a weapon that does not work. Subsequent articles cited these failures as examples of the Air Force's failure to adequately test in a complete system environment before procuring a weapon.

It is interesting to note that in the few weeks since those articles were published, the Air Force has systematically reviewed the test results and determined the cause of the most recent failure. They have resumed flight testing and there have been three consecutive totally successful, full duration ALCM flight tests in a period of 8 days. To the best of my knowledge there has been no coverage in the media of these three flight successes—no reexamination of their previously expressed concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I might also note here that the ALCM flight testing has experienced 16 successes out of the last 19 flight tests. The weapon achieved its initial operational capability last December at Griffiss Air Force Base in New York, meeting a schedule set over 3 years earlier. A second base is now operational at Wurtsmith Air Force Base in Michigan, also on schedule. The remaining deployments of the ALCM apparently will be attained on schedule through full operational capability.

These achievements hardly seem to be an indictment of the process by which this particular weapon was tested and procured. Rather, it appears in this instance that the country has acquired and is deploying an effective strategic deterrent—and a weapon that works. If I may rephrase an old adage, it seems that "Good news is no news."

Date	Flight number	Missile	Launch position	Flight duration	Termination	Notes
August 3, 1979	1	FTM 1	LP-2	44m [1]	Impact	Max lift data.
September 6, 1979	2	FTM 2	LP-2	4h, 9m	Mid air recovery (MAR)	Total success.
September 25, 1979	3	FTM 3	LP-5	4h, 24m	Soft landing	Cross country landing.

EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, time and time again, my constituents ask me about the cost of college tuition. The fundamental right to learn, to make a better life for himself or herself is an integral part of the American dream. Yet I see that dream of educational opportunity for all Americans fading with the rising cost of higher education.

There are 12 million Americans from all income brackets, all ages, and all walks of life who today are students at our colleges and universities. Those numbers must not be diminished because of lack of funds.

Every democratic society needs a literate population that can read and make decisions for themselves. Our greatest threat is ignorance. Our greatest defense is a population that can read and make decisions for themselves. Our greatest defense is a people that can go beyond their own personal experience for information. Colleges and universities give people those skills. It is the responsibility of this Government to make sure that the funds will be there to teach those skills.

For these reasons, today I am reintroducing a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the establishment of, and the deduction of contributions to, education savings accounts.

This bill is the result of a study done by the Citizens League of Baltimore to determine additional ways to help students and their families pay for higher education. The citizens league has recommended a higher education investment plan that is practical, administratively simple, and economically sound.

Essentially, this legislation would amend the IRS Code to permit individuals to set aside for educational purposes up to $2,000 per year per student beneficiary and be allowed a corresponding income tax deduction. The funds would not be taxed until after the student has graduated and then the funds would be taxed as income to the beneficiary over a 10-year period in 10 equal parts. The legislation sets aside 5 percent of the money placed in these accounts for a State scholarship fund.

Such legislation could only be beneficial to all our attempts to make this country one where education is a right, not a gift to the wealthy. Education is the greatest gift we can give our children, and our country.

The bill follows:

H.R. 4036

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to additional itemized deductions for individuals) is amended by redesignating section 223 as section 224 and by inserting after section 222 the following new section:

"SEC. 223. EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.

"(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—In the case of an individual, there is allowed as a deduction the sum of—

"(1) amounts paid in cash, and

"(2) the fair market value at time of transfer of stock, bonds, or other securities, which are readily tradeable on an established securities market, transferred.

during the calendar year which ends with or within the taxable year by such individual to an education savings account established for the benefit of an eligible individual.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) ACCOUNT MAY NOT BE ESTABLISHED FOR BENEFIT OF MORE THAN 1 INDIVIDUAL.—An education savings account may not be established for the benefit of more than 1 individual.

"(2) INDIVIDUAL MAY NOT BE BENEFICIARY OF MORE THAN 1 ACCOUNT.—An individual who is the beneficiary of more than 1 education savings account during any calendar year shall not be treated as an eligible individual for that calendar year.

"(3) MAXIMUM DEDUCTION PER ACCOUNT.—The amount allowable as a deduction under subsection (a) to an individual for amounts paid or transferred to an account for any calendar year shall not exceed $2,000.

"(4) CONTRIBUTIONS BY MORE THAN 1 PERSON.—If more than 1 individual makes contributions to an education savings account during a calendar year, the $2,000 amount under paragraph (3) shall be allocated proportionately among all individuals contributing to the account during that year on the basis of the amounts contributed by each such individual.

"(5) ADJUSTMENT OF LIMIT FOR INFLATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Beginning in 1984, the dollar amounts in paragraph (3), paragraph (4), and subsection (c)(2)(A) shall each be adjusted by multiplying such amounts by the inflation adjustment factor for the 12-month period ending on July 31 of the preceding calendar year and, as adjusted, shall be substituted for such amounts for taxable years ending with or within the calendar year next beginning after such 12-month period.

"(B) COMPUTATION OF INFLATION ADJUSTMENT FACTOR.—

"(i) DETERMINATION AND PUBLICATION.—The Secretary shall, not later than October 1 of each calendar year (beginning in 1983), determine and publish in the Federal Register the inflation adjustment factor for the immediately preceding 12-month period ending on July 31 in accordance with this paragraph.

"(ii) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT FACTOR.—The term 'inflation adjustment factor' means, with respect to a calendar year, a fraction the numerator of which is the average monthly Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor for the most recent 12-month period ending on July 31 and the denominator of which is the average monthly Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) for the 12-month period ending on July 31, 1981.

"(c) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'eligible individual' means the taxpayer or a child of the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 151(e)(3)) unless the taxpayer or child—

"(A) has attained the age of 21 before the close of the calendar year for which the contribution is made, or

"(B) is enrolled as a full-time student at an eligible educational institution for more than 4 weeks during that calendar year.

"(2) EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'education savings account' means a trust created or organized in the United States exclusively for the purpose of paying the educational expenses of an eligible individual, but only if the written governing instrument creating the trust meets the following requirements.

"(A) No contribution will be accepted unless it is in cash, stocks, bonds, or other securities which are readily tradeable on an established securities market, and contributions will not be accepted for the taxable year in excess of $2,000.

"(B) The trustee is a bank (as defined in section 401(d)(1)) or another person who demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the manner in which that person will administer the trust will be consistent with the requirements of this section.

"(C) No part of the trust assets will be invested in life insurance contracts (other than contracts the beneficiary of which is the trust and the face amount of which does not exceed the amount by which the maximum amount which can be contributed to the account exceeds the sum of the amounts contributed to the account for all taxable years).

"(D) The assets of the account may be invested in accordance with the direction of the individual contributing to the account, but, if more than one individual has made contributions to the account, the consent of all such individuals shall be required for any such direction.

"(E) The assets of the trust will not be commingled with other property except in a common trust fund or common investment fund.

"(F) Any balance in the account on the day before the date on which the individual for whose benefit the trust is established attains age 26 will be distributed on that date to each of the individuals who have contributed to the trust in an amount which bears the same ratio to such balance as such individual's contributions bear to the sum of all such contributions.

"(G) The trustee is required to transfer 5 percent of the amount of any contribution to the trust to a qualified State educational fund.

"(3) TIME WHEN CONTRIBUTIONS DEEMED MADE.—For purposes of this section, a taxpayer shall be deemed to have made a contribution on the last day of a calendar year if the contribution is made on account of such calendar year and is made not later than the time prescribed by law for filing the return for the taxable year (including extensions thereof) with or within which the calendar year ends.

"(4) STOCK, ETC., TO BE VALUED AS OF TRANSFER DATE.—The fair market value of stocks, bonds, and other securities shall be determined as of the date on which they are transferred to the account. If the date of transfer falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or public legal holiday, then the fair market value shall be determined by reference to the last preceding day on which they could have been traded on an established securities market.

"(5) EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES.—The term 'educational expenses' means—

"(A) tuition and fees required for the enrollment or attendance of a student at an eligible educational institution.

"(B) fees, books, supplies, and equipment required for courses of instruction at an eligible educational institution, and

"(C) a reasonable allowance for meals and lodging.

"(6) ELIGIBLE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION.—The term 'eligible educational institution' means—

"(A) an institution of higher education, or

"(B) a vocational school.

"(7) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term 'institution of higher education' means the institutions described in section 120(a) or 491(b) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

"(8) VOCATIONAL SCHOOL.—The term 'vocational school' means an area vocational education school as defined in section 195(2) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 which is in any State (as defined in section 195(8) of such Act).

"(9) Special rules relating to transfers to qualified state educational fund.—

"(A) QUALIFIED STATE EDUCATIONAL FUND.—The term 'qualified State educational fund' means a fund established by State law or the chief executive officer of a State the assets of which are used to provide scholarship assistance to individuals attending eligible educational institutions within the State.

"(B) TIME PAYMENT MADE.—The trustee shall make the transfer described in paragraph (2)(G) with respect to any contribution not late than 30 days after the last day prescribed by law for filing the return (including extensions thereof) for the taxable year—

"(i) of the individual making the contribution, and

"(ii) within which the contribution was made or deemed to be made.

"(C) STATE TO WHICH MADE.—An individual making a contribution with respect to which a transfer described in paragraph (2)(G) is required shall designate the qualified State educational fund to which such transfer shall be made.

"(d) TAX TREAMENT OF DISTRIBUTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, any amount paid or distributed out of an education savings account shall be included in gross income by each individual who has contributed to the account, in an amount which bears the same ratio to such payment or distribution as the amount contributed by that individual for all taxable years bears to the amounts contributed by all individuals for all taxable years, for the taxable year in which the payment or distribution is received, unless such amount is used exclusively to pay the educational expenses incurred by the individual for whose benefit the account is established.

"(2) EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS RETURNED BEFORE DUE DATE OF RETURN.—Paragraph (1) does not apply to the distribution of any contribution paid during a taxable year to an education savings account to the extent that such contribution exceeds the amount allowable as a deduction under subsection (a) if—

"(A) such distribution is received on or before the day prescribed by law (including extensions of time) for filing such individual's return for such taxable year,

"(B) no deduction is allowed under subsection (a) with respect to such excess contribution, and

"(C) such distribution is accompanied by the amount of net income attributable to such excess contribution.

Any net income described in subparagraph (C) shall be included in the gross income of the individual for the taxable year in which it is received.

"(3) QUALIFIED DISTRIBUTIONS INCLUDED IN BENEFICIARY'S INCOME OVER 10-YEAR PERIOD.—The gross income of an individual for whose benefit an education savings account was established for the taxable year in which that individual attains age 25 and for each of the 9 succeeding taxable years shall be increased by 10 percent of the sum of the amounts paid or distributed out of the account which were used exclusively to pay the educational expenses incurred by that individual.

"(4) AMOUNTS TRANSFERRED TO QUALIFIED STATE EDUCATIONAL FUNDS.—The gross income of any individual shall not be increased by reason of any amount paid or distributed out of an education savings account to a qualified State educational fund if such amount is required to be so paid or distributed under subsection (c)(2)(G).

"(e) TAX TREATMENT OF ACCOUNTS.—

"(1) EXEMPTION FROM TAX.—An education savings account is exempt from taxation under this subtitle unless such account has ceased to be an education savings account by reason of paragraph (2) or (3). Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, any such account is subject to the taxes imposed by section 511 (relating to imposition of tax on unrelated business income of charitable, etc., organizations).

"(2) LOSS OF EXEMPTION OF ACCOUNT WHERE INDIVIDUAL ENGAGES IN PROHIBITED TRANSACTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If, during any taxable year of an individual who contributes to an education savings account, that individual engages in any transaction prohibited by section 4975 with respect to the account, the account ceases to be an education savings account as of the first day of that taxable year.

"(B) ACCOUNT TREATED AS DISTRIBUTING ALL ITS ASSETS.—In any case in which any account ceases to be an education savings account by reason of subparagraph (A) on the first day of any taxable year, paragraph (1) of subsection (d) applies as if there were a distribution on such first day in an amount equal to the fair market value (on such first day) of all assets in the account (on such first day).

"(3) EFFECT OF PLEDGING ACCOUNT AS SECURITY.—If, during any taxable year, the individual for whose benefit an education savings account is established uses the account or any portion thereof as security for a loan, the portion so used is treated as distributed to that individual.

"(f) ADDITIONAL TAX ON CERTAIN AMOUNTS INCLUDED IN GROSS INCOME.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION NOT USED FOR EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES.—If a distribution from an education savings account is made, and not distributed to a qualified State educational fund or used in connection with the payment of educational expenses of the individual for whose benefit the account was established, the tax liability of each of the individuals who has contributed to the account for the taxable year in which such distribution is received shall be increased by an amount equal to 10 percent of the amount of the distribution which is includable in his gross income for such taxable year.

"(2) DISQUALIFICATION CASES.—If an amount is includable in the gross income of an individual for a taxable year under subsection (d), his tax under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by an amount equal to 10 percent of such amount required to be included in his gross income.

"(3) DISABILITY CASES.—Paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply if the payment or distribution is made after the taxpayer becomes disabled within the meaning of section 72(m)(7).

"(g) COMMUNITY PROPERTY LAWS.—This section shall be applied without regard to any community property laws.

"(h) CUSTODIAL ACCOUNTS.—For purposes of this section, a custodial account shall be treated as a trust if the assets of such account are held by a bank (as defined in section 401(d)(1)) or another person who demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that the manner in which he will administer the account will be consistent with the requirements of this section, and if the custodial account would, except for the fact that it is not a trust, constitute an education savings account described in subsection (c). For purposes of this title, in the case of a custodial account treated as a trust by reason of the preceding sentence, the custodian of such account shall be treated as the trustee thereof.

"(i) REPORTS.—The trustee of an education savings account shall make such reports regarding such account to the Secretary and to the individual for whose benefit the account is maintained with respect to contributions, distributions, and such other matters as the Secretary may require under regulations. The reports required by this subsection shall be filed at such time and in such manner and furnished to such individuals at such time and in such manner as may be required by those regulations.".

(b) DEDUCTION ALLOWED IN ARRIVING AT ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—Paragraph (10) of section 62 of such Code (relating to retirement savings) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or education" after "Retirement" in the caption of such paragraph, and

(2) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "and the deduction allowed by section 223 (relating to deduction of certain payments to education savings accounts)".

(c) TAX ON EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 4973 of such Code (relating to tax on excess contributions to individual retirement accounts, certain section 403(b) contracts, certain individual retirement annuities, and certain retirement bonds) is amended—

(1) by inserting "EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS," after "ACCOUNTS," in the caption of such section,

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) as (3) and (4), and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

"(2) an education savings account (within the meaning of section 223(c)),", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS TO EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—For purposes of this section, in the case of an education savings account, the term 'excess contributions' means the amount by which the amount contributed for the taxable year to the account exceeds the amount allowable as a deduction under section 223(b) for such taxable year. For purposes of this subsection, any contribution which is distributed out of the education savings account and a distribution to which section 223(d)(2) applies shall be treated as an amount not contributed.".

(d) CONTRIBUTION NOT TO BE TREATED AS A GIFT FOR GIFT TAX PURPOSES.—Section 2503 of such Code (relating to taxable gifts) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—For purposes of subsection (b), any payment made by an individual for the benefit of his child to an education savings account described in section 223(c) shall not be considered a gift of a future interest in property to the extent that such payment is allowed as a deduction under section 223.".

(e) TAX ON PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS.—Section 4975 of such Code (relating to prohibited transactions) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following new paragraph:

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—An individual for whose benefit an education savings account is established shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this section with respect to any transaction concerning such account (which would otherwise be taxable under this section) if, with respect to such transaction, the account ceases to be an education savings account by reason of the application of section 223(e)(2)(A) to such account.", and

(2) by inserting "or an education savings account described in section 223(c)" in subsection (e)(1) after "described in section 408(a)".

(f) FAILURE TO PROVIDE REPORTS ON EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—Section 6693 of such Code (relating to failure to provide reports on individual retirement account or annuities) is amended—

(1) by inserting "OR EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNTS" after "ANNUITIES" in the caption of such section, and

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following: "The person required by section 223(i) to file a report regarding an education account at the time and in the manner required by such section shall pay a penalty of $10 for each failure unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause.".

(g)(1) The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 223 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 223. Education savings accounts.
"Sec. 224. Cross references."

(2) The table of sections for chapter 43 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 4973 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 4973. Tax on excess contributions to individual retirement accounts, education savings accounts, certain 403(b) contracts, certain individual retirement annuities, and certain retirement bonds."

(3) The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 68 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 6693 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 6693. Failure to provide reports on individual retirement accounts or annuities or on education savings accounts."

(h)(1) Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by redesignating section 130 as section 131 and by inserting after section 129 the following new section:

"SEC. 130. EDUCATION SAVINGS ACCOUNT DISTRIBUTIONS.

"In the case of an individual, and except as is provided in section 223(d)(1), gross income does not include distributions from an education savings account used exclusively for the payment of educational expenses of that individual (within the meaning of section 223(c)(5)).".

(2) The table of sections for such part III is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 129 the following new items:

"Sec. 130. Education savings account distributions.
"Sec. 131. Cross references to other Acts."

(i) Subsection (b) of section 152 of such Code (relating to definition of dependent) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) A payment to an individual for whose benefit an education savings account (as defined in section 223(c)) is established from that account which is excluded from the gross income of that individual under section 130 shall not be taken into account in determining support for purposes of this section.".

(j) The amendments made by this section shall take effect with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1983.●

A SALUTE TO MARION GENE CLEMONS

HON. LOUIS STOKES
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to join with the members of the Tower of Prayer Church of God in Christ in Akron, Ohio, in saluting Mrs. Marion Gene Clemons. On Saturday, October 1, the church members and other friends of Mrs. Clemons will sponsor a banquet in her honor in the city of Akron. This is a fitting tribute to a Christian woman who has a special place in the hearts of everyone who has come in contact with her.

I ask my colleagues, at this time, to join with me in sending congratulations to Mrs. Clemons on an exceptional career of service to her church, community, and family.

Marion Gene Clemons is the wife of Rev. Burton D. Clemons, pastor of the Tower of Prayer Church of God in Christ. Together, they have made an indelible mark on the members of that great church in Akron. I am sure that Reverend Clemons would agree with me in saying that his lovely wife has been his primary supporter in the church and during his entire 25 years in the ministry.

She has worked tirelessly and eagerly in promoting the program of the church within the membership and throughout the community. She has been a pillar of strength and faith within the Tower of Prayer Church of God in Christ.

She produces the church bulletins and coordinates a cadre of church programs. Her unceasing imput has enhanced the effectiveness of the church's programs. Put succinctly Mr. Speaker, Marion Gene Clemons has been a part of the decisionmakers and workers in her church.

However, Mr. Speaker, not only has she been an advocate for her husband and the church, but also an innovator and leader in her own right. Mrs. Clemons developed many programs within the church which emerged as a tradition. Her weekly sermonette for the children in the church called Brown Bag has gained notoriety throughout the community and the city. She also founded and currently serves as the chairwoman of the Ministers' Wives Auxiliary which sponsors spiritual and support services to the church members.

Her love for the church and her fellowman extend beyond the physical walls of the Tower of Prayer Church. A 20-year resident of my district in Shaker Heights, Mrs. Clemons is known throughout the community for her dedication to her neighbors and particularly to the young people in her area. Her volunteer efforts and coordination of groups of volunteers has earned Mrs. Clemons recognition from many groups. She has gained a significant amount of attention for her efforts as a mathematics and English tutor for children with learning disabilities.

In addition to her demanding schedule in serving the church and her community, Mrs. Marion Gene Clemons is a dedicated wife and mother of seven children. Mr. Speaker, she has instilled in each of her children a love for God and mankind.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, in my estimation, Marion Gene Clemons has been a role model in her church, community, and family. She is a rare and good human being. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Mrs. Clemons on this momentous occasion.●

SENATE—Friday, September 30, 1983

(Legislative day of Monday, September 26, 1983)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

The prayer today is the very familiar, much loved prayer by St. Francis of Assisi.

"Lord, make me an instrument of Thy peace: where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; and where there is sadness, joy.

"O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love; for it is in giving that we receive; it is in pardoning that we are pardoned; and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life." Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this morning after the leader time and special orders, I think we should have a time for the transaction of morning business.

ORDER FOR A PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the execution of the special orders there be a time for the transaction of routine morning business of 5 minutes, in which Senators may speak for not more than 1 minute each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the reason for the short time, and I will say parenthetically that we can provide additional time for morning business if there is a need for it, was so we can get to the pending business, which is the supplemental compensation bill, S. 1887, as soon as possible.

When we do that, the Levin amendment will be the pending question, to be followed by the Byrd amendment, and based on the statements of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee last evening there are a number of amendments yet to be disposed of.

But I talked to him this morning. He indicated the hope that he and his counterpart could finish the management of this bill by noon or thereabouts.

We also must deal with the conference report on the continuing resolution.

I misinformed a few Senators yesterday in the well, not on the floor, but in the well when I said I thought we had passed the House bill without amendment. That is almost right, but almost right is not good enough. We did not. There were amendments added by the committee and that necessitates a conference. The conference began 3 minutes ago with the House of Representatives if they were on time, and I talked to Senator HATFIELD this morning who said he thought they could have the conference report back to us by noon and that the staffs of the two Houses had already done most of the work he hoped and thought, and he did not expect to ask for a rollcall vote on the conference report.

So I hope that is the case and we can have the CR conference report out of the way and on its way to the other body as soon as possible and to the President.

Mr. President, there are several items that we should do today since this is the last day of the fiscal year, but one in particular has been called to my attention, and that is the Export Administration Act.

We have on our side a number of notations on our calendar of Senators who do not wish to do that bill at this time. But I am going to try to talk to them later in the day because it has been brought to my attention that if this act expires tonight, as it will, unless we act, the authority of the Government of the United States to regulate and restrict the export of goods, equipment, and material from this country to other countries expires.

That may not sound terribly bad, but what it means is the United States loses all of its authority to regulate even the export of strategic material to other nations, and that is a serious matter and one that I wish to discuss further with Senators in the course of the day.

My hope would be that we could arrive at an arrangement to take the House bill, to amend it in only one respect, that is, to extend the measure for 30 days instead of 15 days since we will be out of town at the end of 15 days, to pass it without any other amendments and send it back to the House of Representatives with the hope that they would concur in that single Senate amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I concur with the majority leader. This is an act that has to be passed, with the expiring date being today at midnight. The majority leader was just informed of this. I cannot understand why the majority leader was not informed of it until the last minute. I was sitting with him when he was informed of it.

So we knew we had the continuing resolution. We knew we had the extension of the unemployment compensation expiring. But we did not know anything about this.

I agree with the majority leader that we need to get it done, hopefully without any amendments, change the dates slightly to get us through the holiday break, and I will endeavor on this side to help accomplish that.

I cannot keep any Senator from offering an amendment if he wishes to do it, but I will certainly do my best to check the matter out, in view of the urgency of the situation.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I also wish we had notice of this earlier, but in this situation we have to deal with facts as we find them, and I intend to try to see that we have a better notification system.

Mr. President, I have no further need for my time under the standing order, and I am prepared to yield it to the minority leader if he wishes it.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEPSEN). The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does either Mr. METZENBAUM or Mr. PROXMIRE need any time?

I yield my time to the Senator from Ohio.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR METZENBAUM

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator not be recognized for longer than 15 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the leadership time, the Senator from Ohio is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Chair.

HAPPY FISCAL NEW YEAR

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, and all Americans, happy fiscal new year. I take this occasion to express to my colleagues and to all Americans my best wishes for their health and happiness in the new fiscal year.

Tonight, after all, is fiscal New Year's Eve.

But, sad to say, there is not much to celebrate.

For the first time ever, we are ending a fiscal year with a budget deficit in excess of $200 billion. Let the bells ring out. The previous record, set by the Reagan administration in 1982, was $110 billion.

What a wondeful occasion it is that, in 1 year, President Reagan has succeeded in almost doubling that deficit.

In his fiscal 1983 budget, the President predicted that corporate income tax revenues for that year would total $65.3 billion. But in fact, Mr. President, it now appears that corporate receipts will total not $65.3 billion, but only $35.3 billion—a $30 billion shortfall.

In 4 of the 12 months of fiscal 1983, corporations got back more in refunds than they paid in taxes.

Mr. President, that, to me, is so significant that I am going to repeat it.

In 4 of the 12 months of fiscal year 1983, corporations had refunds that exceeded the total amount that they had paid in Federal taxes. It is unbelievable.

An as we move into fiscal 1984, we face more—much more—of the same.

The Budget Committee estimates a deficit of $170 billion.

The President says $185 billion.

CBO puts it at $183 billion.

Most people, Mr. President, if asked to name the fastest-growing item in the Reagan budget, would probably single out defense spending.

But it is probably shocking to learn that they would be wrong.

The fact is that the fastest-growing item in the budget is interest on the national debt.

In fiscal 1983, which is mercifully ending tonight, we paid $127 billion in debt service.

That is a whale of a lot of money.

Think of it as $4,000 a second—$14.5 million an hour—just under $348 million a day.

Think of it as equal to the total of the annual personal savings of every man, woman, and child in America.

And what will be the effect on our economy of this massive drain?

Well, Mr. President, it depends on who you ask.

On September 5, 1981, Ronald Reagan said:

> We know now that inflation results from all that deficit spending. Government has only two ways of getting money other than raising taxes. It can go into the money market and borrow, competing with its own citizens and driving up interest rates, which it has done, or it can print money and it's done that. Both methods are inflationary.

On January 27, 1983, President Reagan told the Nation that "Deficits have now reached towering levels that cast a pall of uncertainty over the financial markets and threaten to slow and weaken the economic recovery ahead of us."

"Well," the President said, "I don't intend to let that happen."

But it has happened.

It has happened on an extraordinary, unprecedented scale.

And, Mr. President, this administration has no policy—no policy whatsoever—to deal with a potential economic catastrophe.

Just look back, Mr. President, on what this administration claimed would happen as a result of its supply-side policies. And compare that with what did in fact, take place.

We were told back in 1981 that the Reagan tax program would stimulate business investment.

It did not happen—and what we have right now in the way of a recovery has been carried almost entirely by consumer spending.

We were told that the savings rate would increase.

In fact, Americans are saving less now than they were before the Reagan tax program was enacted.

We were told that economic growth spurred by supply-side incentives would actually increase Federal tax revenues.

That is a joke. As I have already mentioned, corporate tax receipts for fiscal 1983 are $30 billion below the administration's budget projection.

And, Mr. President, we were told that supply-side prosperity would provide jobs for the 7 million Americans who were out of work at the time Mr. Reagan took office.

Today, 10.7 million Americans are without jobs—an increase of more than 50 percent.

And so, Mr. President, I do not think there is much to look forward to in this fiscal new year.

I do not think that much champagne will flow at midnight tonight.

And I must say, Mr. President, that I am deeply pessimistic about the ability of this administration to deal with problems for which cocktail napkin economics has no answers.

Happy fiscal new year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of my time may be turned over to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Wisconsin may proceed out of order. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I thank my good friend from Ohio. I do not expect to use all of the time, but I appreciate very much his graciously yielding the remainder of his time.

LET US HEAR ONE FOR THE BANKER

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am going to speak this morning on something that is a little unusual for a Democrat or for any other person in political life. But I think it is about time that someone said a good word about the banker in this country and the remarkably competent job bankers do in our economy. I doubt if there is any occupation that is more consistently and unfairly demeaned, degraded, denounced, and deplored than banking. Before almost any kind of a crowd you can always get a warm and encouraging response when you describe the bankers as grubbing, money-mad millionaires with hearts of stone, cold, and glassy eyes, and the annoying willingness to loan only when you do not need it. Labor leaders or Federal bureaucrats or Members of Congress are sometimes handy targets but none of them are always available any time, any place, under any circumstances as objects of scorn and denunciation. Bankers are. Bankers are specially useful for those hornswogglers who have a weak case and need an easy, can-not-miss scapegoat. It is always open season on bankers.

Consider the astonishing attack by the Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan a couple of weeks ago on bankers for being to blame for high interest rates. How utterly ridiculous. That charge must rate as one of the most transparently self-serving as well as phony of recent years. After all—who is Donald Regan? He is Secretary of the Treasury. and what does the Secretary of the Treasury do? He serves at the very top, the man in command of the Federal Government's fiscal policy. He more than any other official is responsible for our tax system. When it comes to managing the national debt, he is Numero Uno. No one, but no one, can come close to the Secretary of the Treasury in responsibility for the fact that last year the Federal Government ran by far the biggest deficit in the history of the country, a deficit of over $100 billion. This year ends today. And for this year the Reagan-Regan deficit makes last year's recordbreaking deficit look like the kind of a take from your kid's piggy bank. This year the deficit will be a teeth-rattling $200 billion. And for the next 4 or 5 years it is likely that the deficit will be flirting with that appalling level.

Secretary Regan knows this better than any man in America. And, as the former top banana in the country's biggest brokerage house, Merrill Lynch, he also knows that his friends and former colleagues in Wall Street overwhelmingly blame the Federal Government's massive deficits for the level of interest rates and the probability that they will rise and choke off recovery. And no one knows better than Regan that the consensus among economists also attributes the level of interest rates to this massive Federal borrowing driving up the price of that borrowing—or interest rates. So what a laugh when this highly knowledgeable, financial expert blames high interest rates on the banks. That, my colleagues, is a real boob pitch. It is a flagrant appeal to the ignoramuses who believe that any banker can raise interest rates at will. Secretary Regan knows he will get nothing but laughs from Wall Street and savvy economists. He is making his pitch in the know-nothing league. But how grossly unfair.

This country has without question the most efficient and responsive capital markets in the world. And that is not an accident. Those markets are the product of competent, capable, and expert work, day after day, year after year, by thousands of American bankers. Now, there are many countries with four, or five, or six huge banks that control 90 percent of the financial assets. In such countries on occasion one bank may be able to raise interest rates at will. But in the United States? No way, absolutely no way. After all, what proportion of bank assets do our 10 biggest banks control? Answer: less than 30 percent of our banking assets. And those 10 banks compete vigorously among themselves. We have in this country more than 30,000 financial institutions and in the past 3 years the Congress has made them more competitive than ever. Savings and loans, mutuals, credit unions now all compete to make personal loans, offer checking accounts, and WIN savings deposits. Neither the bankers at Bank of America or at National City Bank, or any other bank in this country, can raise interest rates no matter how desperately they would like to do so, and I am sure that Don Regan knows that.

Why, then, did he accuse the bankers of raising interest rates? Because he knew that populist bunkum has gone down easily and smoothly for years. Liberal Democrats have used it and gotten away with it, so why should not conservative Republicans play the same game?

At this moment both Republican and Democartic Members of the Congress are playing that beware-of-the-banker-boogie-man game in opposing the appropriation of $8.5 billion by this Government for the International Monetary Fund. Those who favor this apparopriation argue that our $8 billion will match more than $32 billion that other countries will provide for the IMF. That means the IMF will play the critical role in reviving this country's priniciple trading partners. And we will put up less than one-fifth of the money the IMF will use for this revival. But even this bonanza for the country only begins to tell the story. The IMF will help but where will the major job fall for reviving these trading partners of ours? Answer: with the denounced, demeaned, deplored banks. The fact is that the banks some Members of Congress denounce have made an absolutely critical contribution to the economies of these struggling countries. These banks have loaned far more than the IMF has loaned to these countries. Furthermore, far from bailing the banks out, the IMF would bail the banks in. That is right. Not bail the banks out, but bail them in, by insisting that the banks provide more funds for these hard-pressed countries. And both the banks and the IMF are playing the tough, unpopular but essential job that bankers play better than anyone else. That is the IMF and the bankers will require that the countries follow austere policies that will enable them to recover on a sound basis. The lending banks as well as the IMF are making an absolutely critical contribution not only to the recovery of these countries but to the hundreds of thousands of American jobs that depend on those exports.

To be sure, the banks have not been entirely blameless in the international debt situation. With the benefit of hindsight, it is clear that some banks were too generous in the amount of credit they extended to some foreign countries. But much of that overlending can be attributed to weak and inconsistent regulation. We have three bank regulatory agencies and they often compete among themselves for clients. Under these circumstances the most lax regulator generally prevails.

It is important to note that the IMF quota bill which has been unfairly tagged as a big bank bailout, actually strengthens our bank regulatory system so that we will not have a repeat performance. For the first time, the bank regulators are given a clear mandate from the Congress to prescribe minimum capital ratios for all banks. Unpaid foreign loans must be taken off the books. Fees must be amortized over the life of the loan.

Mr. President, bankers make an easy target because they often are prosperous. In small towns or big cities the banker is not only often the richest guy in town, he also has that critical power to determine which business survives and which does not. But because he is more competitive now than ever, he must not and cannot make that decision on the basis of whim or favoritism, but on the basis of sound business judgment. Many critics of bankers do not even know that bankers provide more than credit. They provide sound business advice and guidance for businesses. After all where does the typical American businessman get his expert advice in making vital decisions that determine success or failure in the use of capital? The fact is he usually gets more such advice and better advice from his banker than from any other source.

With all of our economic problems, this country is still the richest, most productive country the world has ever seen. There are many reasons why we are. One of the most important reasons is the role that bankers have played in this country throughout our history. And yes, they have in many cases profited from their competence and judgment. But as a group they have suffered demeaning and wholly unjustified denunciation as everybody's favorite scapegoat. It is a phoney and it is time it stopped. Let us hear one for your friendly or even your unfriendly banker. If you really want an unsung hero he is it.

PRIME CASUALTY OF NUCLEAR WAR: FREEDOM

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the prime quality of American life for which many Americans would die is the freedom, the personal freedom, that gave birth to this country in our struggle for independence and is expressed in our Declaration of Independence. One State speaks in its motto for millions of Americans when it shouts: "Live Free or Die," the motto of New Hampshire.

I can recall some 25 years ago when John Kennedy served in this body. I asked him to appear with me on one of my weekly television reports to Wisconsin. In the course of that report I said that the prime purpose of our foreign policy must be to achieve peace in the world. The then Senator and later President Kennedy promptly corrected me—and added that the purpose of America in our foreign relations must be peace with freedom. Mr. President, that was in 1958. Could President Kennedy or anyone else make that same distinction today? It is the same distinction the motto of New Hampshire makes when it cries out: "Live Free or Die." But today the question and the answer is different. The question no longer can be, Do we go to war and end the peace so we can preserve freedom? We have lost that option. We go to war that is a nuclear war now and we not only lose peace—we lose freedom.

Oh, sure, there may be some survivors of a nuclear war. There might even be something that the survivors would call the United States of America. But freedom? No way. First, a nuclear war involving the United States and the Soviet Union would probably kill and leave dying half our population. It would destroy most of our communications and a great deal of our transportation. It would not only destroy virtually all of our hospitals and medical care, but it would contaminate our drinking water. It would also destroy a great deal of our food supply and drastically diminish our capability of producing food. Many of those who survived the nuclear attack would literally die of starvation.

But the surest and most dramatic difference between our present lives in America and the lives of the survivors in postnuclear war America would be in the total loss of personal freedom. This country would necessarily and inevitably become a military dictatorship. In the fierce struggle to keep our surviving Americans alive, the Government would have to make heartbreaking decisions in allocating limited food and medical supplies and in commandeering the work and property of all the remaining Americans. The Government could not and would not brook dissent. Would we have free elections with contending and disagreeing political parties, with those out of power able to denounce and criticize those who occupied office? Are you kidding? In the chaos of a destroyed nation? Free democratic institutions have been very rare in world history, and the ashes of a war-devastated nation would be the least hospitable soil for freedom.

So Mr. President, the stirring choice between peace and freedom no longer exists when we choose between peace and nuclear war. It is very hard for us as American citizens to accept that grim and terrible fact. But in a nuclear war, we no longer can fight to be free. From the moment the first nuclear missile is launched we Americans lose our most precious legacy: freedom.

Those who believe we can somehow forego arms control or rely on limited arms control, while we let the nuclear arms race speed ahead with a limitation here or there, should ponder what happens to freedom in the aftermath of nuclear war.

DO DEFICITS MATTER?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I recently raised the question in an article I wrote for the New York Times:

> If deficits are so bad, why is the economic recovery so strong? Why did it seem to actually benefit from the staggering deficits run up during World War II to end the Great Depression?

Do not get me wrong. I still believe we must reduce the $200 billion deficits facing the Federal Government for the foreseeable future. They threaten to weaken the recovery, to ignite another round of inflation or to do both. But I also pointed out that I would feel more comfortable believing that way if the economics profession could explain, clearly and precisely, why those deficits were so dangerous.

Mr. President, I received a number of responses to my appeal in that New York Times article. Some came from respected economists, others from interested citizens, and one from a New York Times editorial. Let me summarize first the responses of those who believe that deficits do matter.

Mr. Lawrence Chimerine, who is chairman and chief economist of Chase Econometrics, cogently presented this argument:

> In my view, these deficits are so large that they cannot occur simultaneously with a sustained, vigorous economic recovery because the combined current demands needed to support the recovery and to finance the deficit will inevitably lead to much higher interest rates.

The New York Times took a similar position and pointed out that the Fed could hold firm on credit in which case, "The Treasury sucks up funds that would otherwise be lent to businesses to purchase goods and services." But if the Fed does not hold firm and increases the supply credit," the competition shifts from the credit markets to the product markets, as too many dollars chase too few goods. The inevitable result is inflation."

Others pointed out that conditions have changed since World War II. Prof. Manuel Gottlieb wrote that the Fed accommodated the deficits during World War II at "near zero short-term interest rates." This Fed policy as complimented by "a scheme of elastic managed controls of wages and prices supported by overt rationing of essential consumer and industrial materials in short supply."

Now for the other side, one of the most thought-provoking responses came from Prof. Richard Ruggles and Nancy Ruggles who is a senior research economist. Both are now at Yale University—a place I know well—and they wrote.

> Thus discretionary household savings is not (and never has been) the primary source of investment finance. Depreciation, retained earnings, and the accumulation of funds by pension and insurance companies are the primary sources.

They ended by saying that:

> Certainly a better understanding of the process of saving and investment and the empirical magnitudes involved is needed before economists can make pronouncements about how saving and investment contribute to the growth and productivity of the economy.

Prof. Herb Stein wrote a response, originally entitled "Right on, Senator Proxmire," which also appeared in the New York Times. He said that, "The balanced budget is a flag more often saluted than followed," and offered as a reason ". . . the case for balancing the budget is different, more conditional and weaker than commonly said." He argues that even if we accept the proposition that deficits crowd out private investment we do not know the quantities involved or what effect it will have on long term growth.

Mr. President, I have quoted from only a few of the responses I received. All were informative and stimulating but I wanted to highlight a limited number of issues for my colleagues.

First, the American economy is an enormously complex, ever-changing and vibrant beast. We know far less about it than we like to pretend. When we debate economic policy, I sometimes think of us as 100 ants who found sanctuary on an uprooted oak tree floating down the mighty Mississippi. Each of us is certain that he is steering that tree.

Second, although a majority of economists would probably agree with the crowding-out thesis, that agreement is by no means overwhelming. Sound, logical arguments can be made that deficits will not crowd out private investment, at least not to a damaging extent.

Third, numbers give an impression of precision which may be misleading. How many of us knew, as the Ruggles pointed out, that:

> The BEA personal saving estimates in the national income accounts differ significantly from the FRB household saving estimates in the flow of funds accounts, both in magnitude and in direction of change, and not much can be said with confidence about which figures present the truer picture.

Yet, we confidently assert that the deficit will absorb such and such a percentage of savings.

Fourth, the hardest habit to change is a habit of thought. We get used to using certain words—savings, investment, crowding out—to describe what are complex processes. These words serve us well at first or they would not be used so often. But then the economy changes, the processes behind the words are no longer the same, but we keep on using the same words. By habit, we continue using the same words, the same thought patterns, even though they may no longer be an accurate respresentation of reality.

Mr. President, after reading these responses, I am more than ever convinced of the virtue of keeping an open mind. I believe that those who argue that the deficits will damage the economy have the more persuasive case. But that case is not conclusive and we should all remember Learned Hand's admonition, "The spirit of liberty is the spirit which is not too sure that it is right."

IMAGE AND REALITY: JEWISH LIFE IN TEREZIN

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on November 9, the B'nai B'rith Klutznik Museum will open a new exhibit entitled, "Image and Reality: Jewish Life in Terezin." The exhibit will feature a variety of artifacts and artwork from Theresienstadt, the Nazi "paradise ghetto" for Jews in Czechoslovakia.

Terezin was a prime component of Nazi propaganda. Following the Nazi takeover of Czechoslovakia, the town was converted into an internment camp. The Nazis claimed it to be a wonderful place for Jewish refugees, a place where they could live "normal and productive lives." They gave the Red Cross tours of the town and boasted of its very reasonable living conditions. There were art classes, sporting events, and religious services for all observers to behold. It was in reality, of course, all a show. The classes were nominal while the religious and sporting events were staged for outsiders. Worse yet, the town was more than just a new home for uprooted, innocent people—it was more importantly a transfer point for the eastern death camps.

According to the B'nai B'rith International, over 140,000 Jews were deported to Terezin from Prague between 1941 and 1945. At least 33,000 died while residents of this so-called showplace, and 88,000 others were "relocated" to the death camps of Auschwitz, Treblinka, and elsewhere. Needless to say, few, if any of these transferees survived their ordeal. Included in this estimate are 15,000 children under 15 years of age. Less than 100 survived.

Despite the pangs of death and despair in the air, the residents of Terezin produced and collected what can serve as the documented history of the camp. The B'nai B'rith exhibit contains paintings and drawings by both adults and children; there are photographs and pieces of jewelry produced by the residents. There is a Scroll of Esther, used during the Jewish holiday of Purim, and a collection of medals from staged sporting events. In addition, we find works done by Terezin's own set of professional and amateur artists—among them such names as Norbert Troller, Leo Haas, Fritz Fabian, Henry Behr, and Jo Spier—who vividly depicted the harsh life they were leading in Terezin. We see a pastoral countryside in the distance, yet we see starvation, torture, disease, and executions in the foreground. Yes, this is quite a paradox.

Mr. President, creating such a paradox seems to be the goal of most perpetrators of genocide. They seem to have an incessant need to prove to the world that they are doing no wrong. Thus, they expend a token amount of money and manpower to try to create a myth of goodness, a myth which says that they are not really hurting people. The collection from Terezin shows us that the residents of this model camp quickly saw through this sham. We, too, must see through these genocidal paradoxes. The victims cry out for justice. Ratification of the Genocide Treaty is a giant step in the direction of this justice.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR NUNN

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). Under the previous order, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Chair.

SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, with the death of Senator Henry M. Jackson, the country has lost a leader of unusual vision and ability, the Senate has lost one of its giants, and many of us have lost a trusted personal friend.

My heartfelt sympathy goes out to Scoop's family, to his wife Helen, and to his children, Peter and Anna Marie. My wife Colleen and I felt especially close to Scoop's family and to his beloved State of Washington, because Colleen is from Olympia. My thanks go out to the people of Washington State for sending Scoop Jackson to serve this Nation.

Though Helen and his children grieve at his loss, they can rejoice that they were privileged to know him as a loving husband and father. The time and attention he devoted to his children—which Peter and Anna Marie described so eloquently at his funeral—has given them a solid foundation on which to build.

It would be impossible for me to summarize adequately the life and achievements of Senator Jackson. Like all truly great men, the magnitude of his accomplishments will undoubtedly loom larger with the passing days and years. His unrivaled effectiveness as a Senator stemmed from the trust, respect, and admiration he inspired in each one of us, regardless of our party or our political philosophy.

I was 2 years old when "Scoop" Jackson was first elected to the House of Representatives, and I was a boy of 14 when he came to the Senate. By the time of my own election in 1972, he was an established leader in this body and in the country as a whole. I considered it a great honor to serve with him, a great benefit to share his knowledge and experience, and a great privilege to be his friend.

I had the good fortune to be assigned to two committees—Armed Services and Governmental Affairs—on which Senator Jackson sat as a senior member. He became my adviser and my mentor from the day I arrived in the Senate. I know from personal experience that he was a loyal and untiring ally when he agreed with you—and a formidable but honorable foe when he did not.

One of the first pieces of legislation that I was involved in was the Jackson-Nunn, offset amendment requiring that our allies offset the balance of payments deficit created by the stationing of U.S. forces in NATO. I recall working with him on a wide array of other issues as well, ranging from draft registration to strategic arms. Scoop Jackson was the expert I looked to for advice in so many areas—national security, foreign policy, energy, and the environment, to name only a few. I never ceased to be impressed by the soundness of his judgment and the breadth of his knowledge.

I had the privilege of working closely with Senator Jackson on the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. Under his chairmanship between 1973 and 1979, the subcommittee investigated a wide range of important topics—from the energy crisis to the effectiveness of the Federal Drug Enforcement effort to the transfer of high technology to the Soviet bloc. I worked at his elbow during most of those investigations, and he gave me the opportunity to conduct a number of them as either acting chairman or vice chairman of the subcommittee. I had the distinct honor of succeeding him as chairman in 1979, and I will be forever grateful for the support he gave during the 2 years that I tried to fill his very large shoes.

Scoop was the consummate student of world politics, one of the greatest geopolitical thinkers in the history of the U.S. Senate. His understanding of global issues flowed partly from his love of history, which he studied devotedly. He was always able to apply the lessons of the past to the challenges of the present and future.

The historical insights and anecdotes that he offered up in discussion and debate enlightened, charmed, and sometimes humbled us. Many will recall that at the time of the revolution in Iran, when all of Washington was seeking knowledge about that country, Scoop turned hearings into informal seminars to which administration officials and Senators came to hear him expound on the history of Persia, on Iranian ethnic groups, and on the history of Soviet designs on and intrigues in that part of the world. He was just that kind of man, someone who always added to a discussion or debate by his knowledge and grasp of issues.

Scoop Jackson not only was a great student of history—he made history. He was always too modest to speak of his own role in shaping our postwar world, but it was considerable. Scoop was elected to Congress more than a year before Pearl Harbor, and at the time of his death he had served more years continually in the Congress than any other incumbent Congressman or Senator.

Scoop was one of the first Americans to enter the German concentration camp at Buchenwald after the war, and the searing memory of that experience inspired his passionate efforts to aid and sustain the state of Israel. He never wavered in this support.

Scoop was a central architect of our postwar nuclear programs. As a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, he witnessed numerous nuclear tests and gained an appreciation for the awesome power man had discovered. He played a key role on many occasions in assuring that the United States maintained an adequate nuclear deterrent—pressing successive administrations not to allow the Soviets to gain superiority and literally keeping alive our nuclear submarine program in its early, uncertain days.

Senator Jackson firmly believed that strength is the best deterrent to the Soviet threat. In this regard, I believe he subscribed to the words that Elizabeth Barrett Browning wrote:

Happy are all free peoples,
Too strong to be dispossessed.
But blessed are they among nations,
Who dare to be strong for the rest.

Scoop was a statesman and a Senator, playing a unique role on the world stage which few Members of this body have ever attained. Scoop became deeply involved in the struggle for Europe's heart and mind in the 1950's, working to insure that radical forces did not take over the labor movements in Western Europe and that the NATO alliance remained strong and firm in a democratic tradition. He became so well-known in Europe that in later years Kings and Prime Ministers would alter their schedules to meet with him.

Nor were Europe and the Middle East the only stages on which he walked. In his first term as Senator, Scoop visited the Soviet Union and Afghanistan, and even at that early date warned our Nation of Soviet designs on that country and of the strategic implications of the highway Moscow was building in Northern Afghanistan.

Interestingly enough, I heard him on several occasions explain the history of that highway and his warnings to the Afghan leaders about the Soviet's intentions and use of that highway. Certainly his prophecy became reality tragically for Afghanistan when the Soviets used the highway they built to invade and occupy that country.

In the last decade of his life, Scoop worked to establish better relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China, developing close personal ties with a number of Chinese leaders. His last visit abroad, in fact, was to China. Scoop felt strongly that this relationship was essential to America's strategic interests, and he helped to keep our Nation on this course even when diplomatic mistakes and domestic politics produced serious obstacles.

But it was not only world leaders and strategic issues that dominated Scoop's attention. He was deeply concerned also about the human rights and liberties of people everywhere in the World. He was particularly well known for his close ties with many Soviet dissidents and their families and his voice was raised again and again for human rights and against tyranny and oppression wherever they surfaced. No man spoke more boldly or more often about the terrible realities of our era.

At home, Scoop was a champion of civil liberties. He resisted the excesses of the House Committee on Un-American Activities when he was a Congressman, and later, as a Senator, stood up to Joseph McCarthy at a time when few dared to do so.

The son of Norwegian immigrants who worked for everything he ever obtained, Scoop was dedicated to the ideal of equal opportunity for all. He imbued the hundreds of people who worked on his staff over the years with a love of country, a devotion to duty, and a sense of loyalty. Many of them have gone on in public service and are one of his finest legacies to this Nation.

In these and all his other endeavors, right up to the end of his life, Scoop Jackson always gave 100 percent of his mental and physical capabilities to the great challenges that we face as a nation.

He was in the front rank of leaders in the Senate, and he was in the front rank of leaders in the history of our country.

I leave it to others to explain to future generations why this great American leader was never elected to our Nation's highest office. For myself, I will say simply, he would have served this Nation well in that capacity, but I wish to add and emphasize that he also served our Nation well as a Senator. Scoop proved that one does not have to become President to leave indelible footprints on U.S. history.

Upon the death of Harry S. Truman in 1972, Senator Jackson said of that great American:

With the passing of the years, his place in history—and in the hearts of his countrymen—is ever more assured.

With the passing of the years, the same will be said of our friend, Henry M. Jackson.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of the time I may have.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order there will now be a 5-minute period for the transaction of routine morning business where Senators may speak for 1 minute each.

SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON

Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, I rise today to express my sorrow at the passing of my colleague and fellow American, Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson.

For nearly one-half century he served the people of the State of Washington and this country with unwaivering and unequaled dedication. The length and exceeding quality of his public service insure him a place in history beside this country's great statesmen. Indeed, I am honored to have served with Scoop Jackson in the U.S. Senate.

While working with Scoop over the past 8 years, I knew him as a respected statesman, a great American, and a valued friend. Scoop had the rare ability to stand hard and fast by his principles while remaining open to reasoned opposition. Scoop had another refreshing quality I have always admired and for which I will probably remember him best: Though he was among this Nation's most influential and powerful men, he always maintained the charm and simple ways that make up the common touch.

Although I will always miss Senator Jackson the man, I find some solace in knowing that the things he stood for will live on in an America made better by his work and accomplishments. Simply put, Senator Jackson was a man of unparalleled decency and integrity whose wisdom and leadership the world will sorely miss.

FRINGE BENEFIT TAXATION

Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, the time has come for action on the issue of fringe benefit taxation.

Yet another extension of the moratorium, banking Treasury Department action in this area, would constitute procrastination on an issue whose resolution is long overdue.

The question before us is: Do we intend to change the tax status of some, or all, of the employer-paid benefits which are currently tax favored? Or, do we wish to leave these benefits in their respective tax-exempt or tax-deferred categories?

The issue is not concerned with all fringe benefits since only 28 percent of all benefits are tax favored. Of these fringe benefits approximately half are tax exempt, while the other half are merely tax deferred. Tax-favored benefits constitute only 8.8 percent of total wages and salaries.

The use of many of these fringe benefits, such as parking, child care, and subsidized food and accommodations, reflects the changing needs of our work force. These forms of remuneration have become common practice in some industries. Taxing these benefits, which are often provided for the convenience of both employers and employees, may have a disruptive effect on relations between these two groups.

Furthermore, any reduction in the number of tax-favored benefits will result in a loss of disposable income for recipients of those benefits.

Who are these people whose income may be threatened with reduction? The majority are average white-collar and blue-collar workers.

I cannot, with a clear conscience, ask them to give up still more of their incomes.

A bill, entitled the "Fringe Benefits Tax Act of 1983," has been proposed in the Senate.

The bill does not address all possible forms of fringe benefits because the information which would allow prudent decisionmaking in all areas of this subject is not currently available.

It does, however, cover numerous forms of fringe benefits in a reasonable, practical, and equitable manner. Furthermore, it provides uniform treatment for a matter previously settled on a regional basis.

I would like to quote my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Idaho (Mr. SYMMS), when he introduced this bill in early August:

> The lack of a national uniform policy on the treatment of fringe benefits imposes costs, burdens, uncertainty, and inequity among taxpayers. These adverse consequences are beginning to be felt, and I believe the time has come to find a permanent solution to this problem.

Mr. President, this should not remain as a cloud over the heads of taxpayers. This issue must be resolved now, not be postponed to surface and threaten taxpayers in the future.

It should be underlined that a large proportion of fringe benefit recipients are members of the middle class. This group has consistently borne a very heavy tax burden. They have neither the tax shelters of the rich nor the Government assistance—especially in the area of education—of the poor. Their only relief from taxation consists of the few tax-favored fringes they receive.

Taking more money from these overburdened taxpayers can hardly be viewed as equitable.

Mr. President, in previous years Government policy has been geared toward promoting more retirement income security and greater health insurance benefits. In response to tax incentives designed to reflect this policy, corporate and union finance managers have sought to improve health insurance benefits and pension plans.

Now it appears that Government officials are willing to forsake these beneficial socioeconomic goals in an attempt to balance the budget. To increase fringe benefit taxation would be inconsistent, as well as poor public policy.

The assertion that the revenues generated by the new taxes would be sufficient to significantly reduce Federal deficits is questionable. Even more dubious is the idea that with increased revenues, Congress would suddenly embark on a course of fiscal responsibility.

Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in cosponsoring S. 1817. It deals fairly with the issue at hand without imposing a greater burden on our taxpayers.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF KOREA ADOPTS RESOLUTION ON KAL 007 TRAGEDY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the National Assembly of the Republic of Korea has joined in the worldwide condemnation of the shooting down of the Korean Air Lines jetliner, flight 007. The civilized world has reacted in shock and revulsion over this act of barbarity, but the people of Korea, as is most proper, feel the greatest burden of horror.

On September 8, the National Assembly, in the first plenary meeting of the 118th extraordinary session, passed a resolution expressing in the most explicit terms its condemnation of the act. The people of the United States, and the Members of the Congress of the United States, stand in sympathy with those feelings.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution of the Korean National Assembly be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION CONDEMNING THE SAVAGE ACT OF THE SHOOTING DOWN OF A KOREAN AIRLINES JETLINER BY THE SOVIET UNION

The National Assembly of the Republic of Korea,

Expressing a profound shock and anger over the brutal shooting down of a Korean Airlines Boeing 747 jetliner on September 1, 1983 by a missile launched by a Soviet fighter plane;

Infuriated and reacting with revulsion to the barbarous action taken by the Soviet Union in wantonly killing 269 innocent and precious human lives, despite the sincere efforts on the part of the government of the Republic of Korea to pursue friendly and peaceful policy to all nations of the world;

Condemning most stringently in the name of the forty million Korean people the savage, inhumane act, unprecedented in the annals of mankind, of massacre in the air committed by the Soviet Union;

1. Demands to the Soviet Union to provide a full and detailed account of the incident and publicly apologize not only to the Republic of Korea and the bereaved families but to all peace-loving peoples of the world;

2. Also demands to the Soviet Union to promptly comply with the requests made by nations of victims and international organizations for public investigations of the incident, and to make as speedily as possible just and full compensation for all losses;

3. Further demands to the Soviet Union to bring those responsible for the incident to justice by sternly punishing them, and to solemnly and publicly declare that it would guarantee against a recurrence of such an appalling and barbarous action;

4. Calls upon all freedom and peace-loving nations of the world to come forward and positively support and cooperate in worldwide disciplinary measures directed against the Soviet Union unless our just demands are met.

NATIONAL EMPLOY THE HANDICAPPED WEEK

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, next week our Nation will be involved in recognizing the achievements of handicapped persons within our "world of work."

President Reagan has declared October 2 to 8 as "National Employ the Handicapped Week" to increase awareness of how the Nation can utilize the abilities and talents of handicapped citizens.

To help President Reagan launch his commemorative week, HHS Secretary Margaret M. Heckler announced two special exhibits during National Employ the Handicapped Week. They feature some of the aids and devices available to help disabled persons in their jobs.

John Kemp, director of human resources, National Easter Seal Society, will deliver the keynote address during an opening ceremony for the departmental observance of the week, His speech will be at 10:30 a.m. Monday, October 3, in the great hall of the Hubert H. Humphrey Building, 200 Independence Avenue SW. Kemp, a disabled attorney, has gained an international reputation in the field of disability rights.

Also participating in the program will be Jay Rochlin, human resources manager, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The special exhibits are:

Technology in the Workplace, October 3 and 4 from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. in the Humphrey Building.

Tools to Independence, October 5 and 6 between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. in the Social Security Administration Headquarters, 6401 Security Boulevard, Baltimore, Md.

Both events are open to the public. I encourage the participation of all my colleagues and their staff in this worthwhile endeavor.

A SUSTAINED RECOVERY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I have at hand some enlightening comments by John Welch, chairman and CEO of the General Electric Co., concerning the prospects of a sustained economic recovery.

Speaking to participants in the 51st Annual Edison Electric Institute Convention in Minneapolis, Mr. Welch outlined his perception of the respective roles of private industry and government in the economic recovery.

Corporations, he says, should concentrate on providing the highest-quality, lowest-cost products. In the process, they will not only develop a competitive edge in the world economy, but also provide the stable, long-term jobs our Nation so badly needs.

The proper role of Government—and this should strike close to home for all who truly believe in the free enterprise system—is to give business a chance to compete, he said. Instead of searching for ways the Government might solve problems for businesses—which the Government cannot do—legislators ought to give the private sector an opportunity—if not the incentive—to solve its own.

I could not agree more. If we really believe in the private enterprise system, we should step aside and let it work.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEW COMPETITIVENESS: CAN IT SURVIVE THE RECOVERY?

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to so many good friends of General Electric.

My talk today is not going to be focusing on just General Electric and the utility industry, important as that relationship is. It's going to be about something else I think critical to both of us, and also to our country. I want to talk this morning about whether we as a nation are going to be led by our feelings of the moment, the bright optimism at the beginning of this recovery, or are we going to be drawn by a deeper understanding of what we have to do for the long term. Are we going to have the will to do what's necessary so the glow we are beginning to experience can last beyond its early stages?

There's no question about it: Many people are feeling better today. And no doubt, there are reasons to be optimistic. Most forecasters see real GNP growing three to four percent per year between now and 1985. Inflation, by recent standards, may stay relatively low, maybe four to six percent. Most people think, at least for the next year or so, we may even see reductions in long-term interest rates.

Americans are feeling better about themselves. Many say we learned our lesson from the competitive shocks of the last decade: OPEC, inflation, last place in productivity growth, loss of share everywhere we looked. It was a decade when the contingency scenario suddenly became the base case, and Americans "stopped dreaming in color."

Some believe our experience of the last ten years brought shock, yes, but also revelation. They say it forged a new set of business attitudes, a new sense of reality. The decade, they say, has been restorative, awakening our consciousness, knocking us out of our complacency.

But did it—or more importantly, will it?

Fourteen months ago, I gave a talk at the University of Chicago in which I remarked, "We're having our Dunkirk," referring to the recession. After the talk, a fellow came up to me and said, "Nice speech, but we haven't had a Dunkirk. We're not even close. When we get a recovery, managment will forget cooperation with labor; labor will forget competitiveness and just clamor for more; companies won't reinvest profits, they'll load up obsolete, noncompetitive plants, and it will be business as usual."

Well, let's examine the recovery as we see it this morning: Housing starts are up, automotive sales are looking brighter, banner headlines proclaim the good news. But are we ready for it? Awful as it sounds, was the experience of the last ten years sharp enough to get the issue of world competitiveness in focus for many of us?

Are Americans finally ready, do we now have the will, to do what is necessary to be competitive? Or, seeing good times ahead, will we do as we've done the last couple of recoveries: take the easy way out? It's a very big question.

Said simply, are we as a nation ready to accept that what was good enough ten years ago, what may have been good enough five years ago, just isn't good enough today. And this applies with equal force to a broad spectrum of business and its managment—including service industries like yours—and to government and labor, because the worldwide challenge of competitiveness is no longer simply a problem that the U.S. manufacturer, competing against foreign multinationals and their countries, can solve by himself.

In looking at what we have to do, a number of things are paramount. One of the first is that, with a world economic pie expanding more slowly and with more people after it, the successful marketing concepts which many abandoned in the seventies, perhaps unconsciously in favor of super-subtle planning systems, now need to be revived and used to hone the cutting edge of our businesses. I know that you have also seen this problem and many of you are now placing greater emphasis on the need for marketing your own products and services.

In this more competitive world, it's also clear that U.S. business must be leaner and more agile. For a company like General Electric, this has meant paring away bureaucracy, subjecting every activity to the most rigorous and continuous review, distinguishing between those things which we absolutely need to do and know versus those which would be merely nice to do and know.

It has meant breaking down the barriers of corporate protocol so that anyone with a good idea feels he or she has the freedom to communicate it with anyone else.

Competing in a world marketplace that puts a premium on innovation, on response time, on entrepreneurship, also means that big is not necessarily beautiful. Big can go bust, as The Economist magazine put it. In the recent difficult period, many large corporations realized how crucial it was to come up with new models of entrepreneurial effectiveness—often, decentralized smaller units with a sense of ownership and reward.

Today, as business starts to feel better and better about this recovery, the questions for each of us mount. Will our offices again fill up with staff? Will we once again bureaucratize our companies? Will we re-create the formalities that reward status instead of ideas? Will we revert to the memos that need to be signed-off by ten layers of authority, that make a mockery of entrepreneurship . . . that make big go bust? Will we forget so quickly our drive to be competitive?

With a leaner company, with break-even points lowered, will we be satisfied just to leverage the short-term volume that's going to occur no matter what we do? Or, will we assume the longer view, and take advantage of a host of new productivity-enhancing technologies like computer-aided design and manufacturing, which offer us the possibility of structural breakthroughs—a dramatic discontinuity—in the industrial sector?

Will our manufacturers find the vision to invest in these technologies, to create what I call "new factories in old shells"? Or will manufacturers sit this recovery out, let these exciting new technologies collect dust while feeling awfully good about filling up relatively empty plants, leveraging the reduced cost base which we've all developed during the downturn, and building products in what often are rather obsolete factories?

In the short term, that would make our balance sheets a little healthier, our margins a little better, our bonuses a little higher, but by the end of the cycle, not leave the country any more productive than it was at the beginning.

That's not the kind of recovery any of us wants for America. We desperately need what I call a "quality recovery." By that I mean a recovery bent on growth, but not just any kind of growth: growth based on investment. A recovery that has a major investment component to provide for sustainable, long-term gains in productivity and real income.

Are we headed for a quality recovery? Or, could the unthinkable once again become the inevitable? Well, look at the so-called consensus forecast. This recovery, to a much greater extent than previous ones, appears to be driven, overwhelmingly, by housing and consumer spending. The magnitude of the potential problem is clear when we realize that capital spending in 1984—two years into the recovery—will be only slightly above 1979 levels. That would mean hardly any real growth in five years, and actually a decline in capital stock relative to the size of a larger economy!

Will U.S. businesses reinvest some of their recovery profits?

Many will. At General Electric, one of our most important strategic moves has been to reaffirm our commitment to a number of our large, profitable core businesses—such as those that serve your industry. That commitment has taken the form of heavy technological investments in productivity to help assure our long-term, worldwide competitive leadership.

We believe these core businesses can have a great future, even in slow times, if we can increase productivity, if we are prepared to make the investments to allow us to be very good at what we do.

Consider our locomotive business. The largest single automation investment in GE's history—$300 million—isn't being made in our robotics business or integrated circuits but in locomotives—a mature core business that's seventy years old. That plant is running well under capacity now, yet we're confident we can justify this investment even if it takes time before domestic volume increases, because of the long-term competitive cost and quality improvement we'll be gaining.

Our power systems sector—the sector that serves your industry—is another example. As you well know, we have enormous excess capacity. Our Schenectady facility, alone, has enough capacity to supply the entire world market for large steam turbines. What are we doing? Without a single domestic order for a large steam turbine in twenty-one months, we're investing. Not in capacity, but in productivity, technology and quality: $80 million for large steam turbine over the past two years—$700 million for all our energy-related businesses.

This investment underscores GE's long-term commitment to being a world-competitive supplier in your industry. It's a deep, but also a wide-ranging, commitment—from enhancing our services to GE's BWR nuclear plants, to helping you with plant-life extension and other approaches to competitiveness and productivity growth.

A renaissance in productivity in your industry could have a disproportionate impact on the competitiveness of this nation. In 1980, American manufacturers spent almost $22 billion for electricity. This was nearly four percent of their value-added and almost forty percent of their profits.

I recognize that you've got a tougher productivity challenge than most: a regulatory environment where the rules in many cases do not provide incentives for upgrading older plants, for making existing capacity more efficient, for converting from expensive foreign oil to cheaper domestic coal, or even for taking a good marketing idea and bringing it, entrepreneurially, to life.

You face the added challenge of public debate, of political education to change the rules. But if it's any consolation, in entering the lists of public debate, you have a start on the rest of us. Because more and more, the issues of competitiveness will be decided in public forums all across this country. You're already in it, and we are all going to need your experience, your insight, your skills to forge public understanding.

Critical to achieving competitiveness will be developing the institutional framework, the social and political consensus, that makes it possible. But the myopia that recovery can bring, could now make even more difficult the acceptance of the short-term social costs of some of the actions necessary to make America more competitive.

Little solace to Lilco, which is trying to get a plant opened at Shoreham, or Con Edison, which is trying to keep one open at Indian Point, but for a manufacturer, the most difficult social issue is closing a non-competitive plant to keep a healthy but vulnerable business healthy for the long term.

It's very simple to look at a discounted rate of return and know that a business is in trouble. And, once that business is losing money, it seems, our society can come to grips with the terrible tragedy of closing a plant, provided that business takes the responsibility to recognize the pain, demonstrate compassion and offer support for the people affected. But in more and more cases, the competitive challenge faced by American business today involves something else. It involves taking still-profitable businesses and reinvesting in them, creating those new factories in old shells, to assure world competitiveness—to assure that these plants won't become candidates for closing five or even ten years from now. These productivity investments, of course, result in better, but often fewer, plants.

Understanding of the productivity investment issue started to build in the recession. Will it grow, or even survive, the recovery? Once good times are here, will political pressures inhibit the flexibility business needs to be competitive? Or, will our memories of competitive struggle prevail, allowing responsible management to retain the right to increase the world competitiveness of the factories we will need?

A few other things we presumably learned in recession and may soon forget in recovery:

In labor-management relations, after we went through a sharp increase in wages in the early seventies, we talked a lot about labor-management cooperation, about quality of work life, wages, and productivity. And back in 1975—again, at the bottom of a recession—it seemed that both management and labor had agreed on common goals and had understood that wage settlements must have a sensible relationship to improvements in productivity, profitability and international competitiveness.

But by 1979, all that had been forgotten. Management and labor were not focusing on cooperation. Wages were running away from productivity, running away from profitability, running away from competiveness—one of the main causes of inflation—forcing the government to tighten the money supply, resulting in higher interest rates and a painful recession.

Now, again on the threshold of recovery, do management and labor remember this recent experience, or are we condemned to management-labor divisiveness, condemned to make agreements that have no connection to world competitive realities, condemned to repeat the same painful process one more time? Some of the early signs here are not encouraging.

How about the government? Our political leaders are beginning to feel pretty good about this economy. But that good feeling may take them in some unpromising directions. For example, we hear some in Washington saying, or at least acting as if, budget deficits don't matter. Well, nobody really quite understands what a $200 billion annual deficit means, but experience suggests how short-lived this recovery might be if deficits, or the fear of them, result in a reversal of recent interest rate trends.

And recently, some in the administration have suggested we not worry about the overvalued dollar. Well, try competing in manufacturing exports with it. How quickly people forget—and it never was a front-page headline—that our overvalued dollar helped contribute, between the first quarter of 1981 and fourth quarter 1982, to a decline in our net exports of $21 billion. Now, while it's impossible in today's complex world economy to identify all the cause-and-effect relationship, it's worth noting that the $21 billion was equal to two thirds of the decline of our entire Gross National Product over the same period.

These vignettes should help sharpen our memories. A lot of pain was endured in that difficult, deep recession. But what an opportunity we have if we can bring forward those memories, those attitudes, that were shaped in the recession to serve us now as the underpinnings for fundamental, long-term recovery. We just can't have gone through that pain for nothing! We can't let it happen. We all have to make sure it doesn't happen.

You have a great part to play. Your industry represents a major portion of our national wealth. Almost two trillion dollars would be required to replace your 600 thousand megawatts of electricity generation, transmission and distribution capacity. To employ that investment more productively, to have it run at higher efficiency and reliability, is a significant national challenge and one that GE wants to be a part of.

American corporations have a great responsibility to be the lowest-cost, highest-quality producers of goods and services, to provide the stable, long-term jobs that this country deserves. But beyond that, they have the task to speak out on this issue of world competitiveness.

Your challenge, too, extends well beyond producing electricity at the lowest possible cost. Your task—because you are leaders in your communities, in your states and in this nation—is to carry this issue everywhere, to keep competitiveness out in front of all the constituencies you deal with every day.

And the government's job? The government's role—and that includes the PUCs—is to give business a chance to be competitive, by facing up to the tough issues that affect competitiveness—whether deficits, spending, revenue enhancement; to face them, not walk away from them. And it's government's job to provide the atmosphere, the incentives, to bring forth the high-risk innovations that competitiveness demands.

Can we do it? Frankly, I thought I'd be a lot more optimistic today, June 8, 1983, than I was a year ago in June of 1982, in the depths of the recession. A year ago, I saw us starting to develop a real understanding of the world competitiveness issue. I saw momentum building. A sense of urgency was in the air. Today, I still see some of this, but I also see signs of how easy it would be for all of us to slip back into our old habits. In these early recovery days, it seems to me that we are by no means out of the woods.

Already, there are more than subtle hints of a gridlocked government; troubling signs of a management that isn't sure how fast it ought to invest; inklings of management and labor undecided between cooperation or confrontation.

Let me assure you, that is a battle worth fighting for. This competitiveness issue demands, and is worth, so much of our energies—and more than that, our courage to do what's right for the long term.

If you and I, and government and labor, don't do what's right, if we don't drive to be competitive, we may be responsible for the first generation of Americans to live less well than their parents. But we don't have to be. We don't have to settle for that. The opportunities for courage are there for every one of us.

PRIME MINISTER MARGARET THATCHER'S SPEECH AT CHURCHILL AWARD DINNER

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, last evening a few of us were privileged to be in attendance at a dinner of the Winston Churchill Foundation of the United States held at the British Embassy, in which an award was made to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, of the United Kingdom.

This is a speech that I think should be shared with all of my colleagues. Mrs. Thatcher is a personality of Churchillian proportion herself. The remarks that she made last night should be an inspiration to people everywhere who value freedom and people everywhere who seek self-determination and look to the West as providing some reasonable hope of realizing that aspiration.

These very eloquent and lucid and forceful words, I think, will serve as an inspiration to my colleagues. I ask unanimous consent that Prime Minister Thatcher's remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH AT CHURCHILL AWARD DINNER SEPTEMBER 29, 1983

INTRODUCTION

I am deeply grateful to the Winston Churchill Foundation of the United States for honouring me with this award.

It is my great pride that when I first entered the House of Commons nearly 25 years ago Winston Churchill was still a Member. I remember him then; small, a little deaf, a little hunched, yet towering above the rest of us as he has done ever since.

He was always concerned to keep the courtesies of the House. I remember the day when he left it. Supported by two friends he slowly turned and for the last time bowed to the Speaker and to the Parliament he loved. Then he was gone.

No one, least of all a Conservative Prime Minister, can receive an award that bears his name without an abiding sense of humility. In doing so, I am conscious that Churchill belongs to you in the United States as well as to us in the United Kingdom.

He began life with an American mother and an English father. By the end of his life he had been made an Honorary American citizen by the United States Congress. At his funeral the Great Battle Hymn of the Republic was sung.

Churchill knew before his death that you had set up this splendid foundation as a tribute to him. Already eight of your Churchill fellows have won Nobel Prizes. I congratulate you on that magnificent achievement. The presence of the Churchill fellows in Cambridge helps to sustain and enrich the close personal links between the United Kingdom and the United States which are the bedrock of our enduring friendship. Nothing would have delighted Churchill more.

He was a giant. He saw clearly. He warned clearly. He did what had to be done. His steadfast attachment to fundamental principles, his heroic indifference to the pressures and expediencies of the moment, and his unbending determination both saved his own country and helped to save the world. It was he who said:

"Once you take the position of not being able in any circumstances to defend your rights against aggression, there is no end to the demands that will be made or to the humiliations that must be accepted."

True in the face of the Nazi menance in the 1930s. True in the face of the threats to our way of life today.

True, too, in the South Atlantic last year when with the most heartwarming support and encouragement of the people of America, Britain again had to demonstrate that aggression must not be allowed to succeed and that international law and the right of people freely to choose their own way of life must be upheld.

The best memorial we can offer to the life of that man of destiny is to treasure the matchless gift of freedom which his leadership preserved for us and to pass it on to generations yet to come, both in those countries which already know freedom and to those which yearn for it.

That is the great role of the Western democracies in this age. It is our duty to understand the threat we face; to be strong enough to deter any aggressor to engage in and win the battle of ideas; and, as Churchill always sought to do, to bind ever more closely those nations who cherish the dignity of man and the power of the human spirit.

THE THREAT

First, the threat. We have to deal with the Soviet Union. But we must deal with it not as we would like it to be, but as it is. We live on the same planet and we have to go on sharing it. We stand ready therefore—if and when the circumstances are right—to talk to the Soviet leadership.

But we must not fall into the trap of projecting our own morality onto the Soviet leaders. They do not share our aspirations; they are not constrained by our ethics; they have always considered themselves exempt from the rules that bind other states.

They claim to speak in the name of humanity, but they oppress the individual. They pose as the champion of free nations, but in their own empire they practice total control. They invoke the word "democracy", but they practice single-party rule by a self-appointed oligarchy. They pretend to support the freedom of the ballot box, but they are protected by a system of one man, one vote, and one candidate.

Their power is sustained by myth. Presenting themselves to the world as the fount of progress and revolution, they preside over a modern version of the early tyrannies of history. A structure so rigid that it totally precludes the normal processes of questioning, discussion, and change. They have little contact with their own people, still less with the free-world.

This would-be revolutionary power has an unparallelled arsenal of nuclear and conventional weapons at its disposal. Its governing principles are force and dictatorship. It sees the expansion of communism as inevitable, a logical step in the march of history, and the rest of the world as its rightful freedom.

We have watched the depredations of the Soviet Union in the 66 years since its creation. While the Soviet Union has imposed its rule on its neighbors and drawn an Iron Curtain between East and West, we in Great Britain have given freedom and independence to more than 40 countries whose populations now number more than one thousand million—a quarter of the world's total.

The readiness of Russia to use force outside its borders is manifest. It is active in every continent, reaching deep into the domestic affairs of independent countries—openly or covertly, by using the tools of subversion.

Less than a month ago, we saw fresh evidence of the nature of the system with which we have to deal. The destruction of the Korean airliner was an act of atrocity, and of profound contempt for their fellow human beings.

Mr. Chairman, it is disturbing but not surprising that the system I have described should be capable of such acts. The lesson for us is that our policies should recognise that system for what it is.

We are confronted by a power of great military strength, which has consistently used force against its neighbours, which wields the threat of force as a weapon of policy, and which is bent on subverting and destroying the confidence and stability of the Western World. That is the threat we face.

What is our response?

THE ALLIED RESPONSE

Mr. Chairman, after the Second World War, when optimism gave way to the sombre realisation that the democracies faced a new danger, a few far-sighted men, inspired by the wartime collaboration of Churchill and Roosevelt, established the Western Alliance.

Its aim was then, and remains today, entirely defensive—to safeguard the democratic ideals and way of life of its members. Its membership was then, and remains today, entirely voluntary.

It has been an unqualified success. The member countries of NATO have preserved their freedom and provided material prosperity for their people on a scale that only 50 years ago would have seemed like a dream. And peace has reigned secure.

Why? Because potential aggressors know that we in the West are strong and that we have the will to use that strength to defend what we believe.

Does it need saying that the Soviet Union has nothing to fear from us? For several years after the war the United States had a monopoly of nuclear weapons. But was a threat to no one. Democracies are naturally peace loving. There is so much which our people wish to do with their lives, so many uses for our resources other than military equipment. The use of force and the threat of force to advance our beliefs are no part of our philosophy.

The radical proposals for disarmament now on the table come from the West. It is the response from Moscow which is deficient. This week we have seen yet again genuine proposals from the West peremptiorily rejected.

No amount of propaganda, of spurious half truths can disguise the determination of the Soviet Union to maintain or gain numerical advantage in weaponry, men and materials.

No amount of facile argument can conceal the fact that Soviet flexibility to date has been designed to beguile public opinion, not to make progress by genuine negotiation at Geneva.

Some may recoil at the thought of negotiating with men whose theories and actions have been responsible for so much suffering. Yet the character of modern weapons, not only nuclear but conventional, obliges us to do so. So we must persist in our efforts, but resolved to do nothing that would hand an advantage to the other side, nothing to put at risk the credibility of the Western Alliance and nothing to unsettle that military balance on which peace itself depends.

THE BATTLE OF IDEAS

Mr. Chairman, the facts of nuclear life have—we profoundly hope—ruled out war as an instrument of national policy, provided, of course, that there is no military weakness on our side which would tempt the other into ill-considered action.

But there is another battle. In June 1983 Mr. Andropov told the Central Committee of the Communist Party: "A struggle is under way for the minds and hearts of billions of people on the planet, and the future of mankind depends, to a considerable extent, on the outcome of this ideological struggle."

That is Mr. Andropov's challenge. I accept it, and I do so with the confidence which Winston Churchill would have shared that in this battle we in the West hold the cards.

Here, in the West, the peoples of the world find creative thinking, creative art, and inventive genius. Standards of excellence in literature and music, indeed in that whole great area of human reflection, and expression that we call culture.

It is to the West that friend and foe come for investment capital: Grain supplies; science and technology; medical research, methods to protect environment, and to preserve wildlife—and for so much else. People turn to the West because we are free. It is our human values to which men aspire.

"You in the West", said an Hungarian poet, "Have a special duty because you are free. That freedom is both a blessing and a burden, for it makes you spiritually responsible for the whole of humanity." He was right. For if we do not keep alive the flame of freedom that flame will go out, and every noble ideal will die with it. It is not by force of weapons but by force of ideas that we seek to spread liberty to the world's oppressed. It is not only ideals, but conscience that impels us to do so.

Is there conscience in the Kremlin? Do they ever ask themselves what is the purpose of life? What is it all for?

Does the way they handled the Korean airliner atrocity suggest that they ever considered such questions? No. Their creed is barren of conscience, immune to the promptings of good and evil. To them it is the system that counts, and all men must conform. Nevertheless in Poland they have seen that communism, even when disguised as military government, cannot suppress the soul of the people.

Do they ever wonder, nay even fear, whether the day will not dawn when their own people will give voice to their feelings and frustrations. Freedom of conscience is a natural right which laws did not give and which law can never take away. It is the countries of the democratic West which recognise the limits of the power of the state, and which enshrine the conscience of man in the very structure of their institutions.

It is this which is the burden of our responsibility to mankind. Surely this was what Churchill meant when he said in a wartime broadcast to this country: "united we can save and guide the world. Divided the dark ages return." Those words are as true today as they were in June 1941.

Our ideals and our values are our living strength. Soviet ideology teaches that we in the West are like ripe apples, ready to fall into their laps. That all they have to do is shake the tree. As someone else might have said: "Some apple, some tree".

ANGLO/AMERICAN RELATIONSHIP

Mr. Chairman, I yield to Winston Churchill in many things but not in his admiration and affection for this country. The American commitment to freedom is the lynchpin of the West. You have shown incomparable generosity to others as we, in Europe, have good cause to know. By promoting post-war economic recovery through the Marshall plan, by offering the shattered European democracies your military protection, by contributing your resolve and strength to the Western Alliance you have made possible that remarkable renaissance of Western Europe which stands in such stark contrast to the Eastern half of our continent.

Differences between us? Yes. We have a few. But they are as nothing compared with the things we share; our resolve to defend our way of life, to deter all threats and to ensure in the end that triumph of freedom which America and Britain work for, long for, and believe will one day come.

Mr. Chairman, I began with Winston Churchill, and I will end with him. Who better? Churchill wrote: "Where we are able to stand together and work together for righteous causes, we shall always be thankful, and the world will always be free."

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL COMPENSATION AMENDMENTS OF 1983

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the pending business, S. 1887, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1887) to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for 18 months, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on amendment No. 2252 of the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is my understanding there might be a change in the order of amendments. We will not object to that if that is a fact. Senator BYRD may want to proceed before Senator LEVIN.

I would indicate that there are not really that many amendments pending, but we still have to go to conference today on this very important bill. This Senator was supposed to be in Philadelphia tonight for a meeting of the nonpartisan national waterlines with Senator DECONCINI and Senator DURENBERGER. The point I guess I would make is if, in fact, we get bogged down here and nothing happens for a couple of hours, we are going to be looking at probably being here tomorrow to wrap up the conference report. Maybe that will not require a vote.

But we have at least started at the staff level some contact with the House side to see what the major differences will be between the 45-day extension passed by the House and what I hope to be an 18-month extension passed by the Senate.

So I would urge, since we have two amendments agreed upon to be brought up in the order of either LEVIN and BYRD or BYRD and LEVIN, that after that we move to the remainder of the amendments. There are only a couple of those. We could finish within the next couple of hours if everybody would come to the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order of yesterday pertaining to amendments to be offered by Mr. LEVIN and myself be reversed, and that I be permitted to call up my amendment at this time, and Mr. LEVIN to follow after the disposition of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2253

(Purpose: To provide for up to 8 weeks of additional benefits for individuals who have exhausted their benefits)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) proposes an amendment numbered 2253.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out sections 3 and 4 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

NUMBER OF WEEKS OF BENEFITS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 602(e) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 is amended by striking out paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4), and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

"(2)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the amount established in any account shall be equal to the lesser of—

"(i) 50 percent of the total amount of regular compensation (including dependents' allowances) payable to the individual with respect to the benefit year (as determined under the State law) on the basis of which he most recently received regular compensation, or

"(ii) the applicable limit determined under the following table times his average weekly benefit amount for his benefit year:

In the case of weeks during a:	The applicable limit is:
5-percent period	12
4-percent period	10
3-percent period	8
Low-unemployment period	6

"(B) If the applicable limit in effect for a State for the week beginning September 25, 1983, was 14 (as determined under the provisions of subparagraph (A) as in effect prior to the amendments made by the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983), the applicable limit for such State shall remain at 14 for any consecutive week thereafter for which such limit would have remained at 14 under such prior provision. Paragraph (3)(D) shall not apply in the case of an applicable limit determined under this subparagraph.

"(C) The total amount established in any account of an individual who received Federal supplemental compensation for any week beginning prior to October 1, 1983, but who has not exhausted his rights to such compensation (by reason of the payment of all of the amount in such account) prior to October 1, 1983, shall not be less than the amount of compensation to which such individual would have been entitled under the provisions of this subtitle as in effect prior to the amendments made by the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983, including the termination date and reduced compensation amount contained in subsection (f)(2) as then in effect.

"(D) In the case of the account of an individual to whom Federal supplemental compensation was payable for any week beginning prior to October 1, 1983, and who exhausted his rights to such compensation (by reason of the payment of all of the amount in such account) after March 31, 1983, and before October 1, 1983, the amount established in such account for compensation payable for weeks beginning on or after October 1, 1983, shall be equal to the lesser of the subparagraph (A) entitlement or such individual's additional entitlement.

"(E) For purposes of subparagraph (D) and this subparagraph—

"(i) the term 'subparagraph (A) entitlement' means the amount which would have been established in the account if subparagraph (A) had applied to such account; and

"(ii) the term 'additional entitlement' means the lesser of—

"(I) 75 percent of the subparagraph (A) entitlement, or

"(II) 8 times the individual's average weekly benefit amount for the benefit year.

"(3)(A) For purposes of this subsection, the terms '5-percent period', '4-percent period', '3-percent period', and 'low-unemployment period' mean, with respect to any State, the period which—

"(i) begins with the 3d week after the 1st week in which the rate of insured unemployment in the State for the period consisting of such week and the immediately preceding 12 weeks falls in the applicable range, and

"(ii) ends with the 3d week after the 1st week in which the rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the immediately preceding 12 weeks does not fall within the applicable range.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the applicable range is as follows:

"In the case of a:	The applicable range is:
5-percent period	A rate equal to or exceeding 5 percent.
4-percent period	A rate equal to or exceeding 4 percent, but less than 5 percent.
3-percent period	A rate equal to or exceeding 3 percent, but less than 4 percent.
Low unemployment period.	A rate equal to or exceeding 3 percent.

"(C) A State shall qualify for a 5-percent period without regard to paragraph (2) and subparagraphs (A), (B), and (D) of this paragraph, for weeks beginning in a calendar quarter if the rate of insured unemployment in the State equals or exceeds 6 percent for the period consisting of all weeks which begin—

"(i) on or after January 1, 1982, and

"(ii) in or before the second preceding calendar quarter.

"(D) No 5-percent period, 4-percent period, 3-percent period, or low-unemployment period, as the case may be, which is in effect for the week beginning on October 2, 1983, or any week thereafter, shall last for a period of less than 13 weeks (but subject to the termination provision under subsection (f)(2)).

"(E) For purposes of this subsection—

"(i) the rate of insured unemployment for any period shall be determined in the same manner as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970; and

"(ii) the amount of an individual's average weekly benefit amount shall be determined in the same manner as determined for purposes of section 202(b)(1)(C) of such Act.".

(b) Section 602(d)(3) of such Act is amended by striking out "or (D)(ii)".

EFFECTIVE DATE OF FSC PROVISIONS

SEC. 4. (a) The amendments made by sections 2 and 3 shall apply to weeks beginning after September 30, 1983.

(b) In the case of any eligible individual—

(1) to whom any Federal supplemental compensation was payable for any week beginning before October 1, 1983, and

(2) who exhausted his rights to such compensation (by reason of the payment of all the amount of his Federal supplemental compensation account) before the first week beginning after September 30, 1983.

such individual's eligibility for additional weeks of compensation by reason of the amendments made by this Act shall not be limited or terminated by reason of any event, or failure to meet any requirement of law relating to eligibility for unemployment compensation, occurring after the date of such exhaustion of rights and before October 1, 1983 (and the period after such exhaustion and before October 1, 1983, shall not be counted for purposes of determining the expiration of the two years following the end of his benefit year for purposes of section 602(b) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982).

(c) The Secretary of Labor shall, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, propose to each State with which he has in effect an agreement under section 602 of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 a modification of such agreement designed to provide for the payment of Federal supplemental compensation under such Act in accordance with the amendments made by sections 2 and 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if any State fails or refuses, within the 3-week period beginning on the date the Secretary of Labor proposed such a modification to such State, to enter into such a modification of such agreement, the Secretary of Labor shall terminate such agreement effective with the end of the last week which ends on or before the first day of such 3-week period.

WE MUST HELP THOSE UNEMPLOYED THE LONGEST

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it is all too easy for us to forget the tragedy that confronts those who have worked all their adult lives, lose their jobs, cannot find new jobs, and finally exhaust all available unemployment insurance benefits. At that point, these persons—who are accustomed to being responsible, taxpaying citizens who meet their financial obligations—are faced with the prospect of utter destitution.

In this recession, that has been happening with growing frequency. Not only has the unemployment rate soared up to levels not seen since the Great Depression, but virtually all the statistics concerning the length of unemployment have reached record levels, including the average duration of unemployment and the number of persons unemployed for over 1 year. The results are clear—and devastating. Home foreclosures have skyrocketed. Welfare and food stamp rolls have grown dramatically, and the free cheese and soup kitchen lines have stretched out the door and around the corner, as proud people who have never before needed or accepted charity find they have no choice.

And yet, as we have debated the extension of the Federal supplemental compensation program—the "last gasp," final tier of unemployment benefits—at no point have we contemplated providing any aid for those who have been unemployed longer than 57 weeks, a period only a little longer than a year. I truly regret that the Senate has not accepted any proposal to provide additional benefits for those who already have exhausted all benefits for which they are eligible, including supplemental compensation.

Mr. President, yesterday I complimented the manager of the bill, who is dedicated to trying to come up with the kind of a system and the reform of the system which will be more fair and which will allow more States to participate on the basis of need. Obviously, he cannot do that in 24 hours. It will take some time.

What we are about to do on this bill is to set in place a program that provides fewer weeks of benefits in a number of States than does the program that expires at midnight tonight, and which does nothing for those who previously have exhausted all benefits but still cannot find a job.

I find that totally unacceptable, Mr. President. I am a realist—and so I recognize that we must depend on the House in conference to insist on providing a more nearly adequate level of benefits in this bill, out of a sense of responsibility to the unemployed and their families which neither the administration nor the majority in this Chamber seems able to muster. But I am not prepared to leave the longest of the long-term unemployed high and dry—with the Senate of the United States having ignored them completely.

Consequently, I have offered an amendment to address this problem. My amendment is short and quite simple. For any person who has exhausted all available unemployment benefits, including supplemental compensation benefits since April 1, but remains unemployed and continues to meet all applicable requirements for the supplemental compensation program, my amendment provides that he or she will be able to receive three-fourths of the number of weeks of benefits new FSC beneficiaries will receive in that State, up to a maximum of 8 weeks. This is the same number of weeks of "reachback" benefits contained in the House version of the bill.

I know beyond any doubt that this will not be a complete solution for the problems of many of the long-term unemployed. But I also know that, for them, any assistance is desperately needed and will be of great help. In many cases, this additional assistance could keep families afloat economically until they can find a job as the economy slowly begins to warm up.

Surely we should take this minimal step as a matter of decency and compassion—and an acknowledgement that most of these unfortunate people were the victims of national and international economic forces far beyond their control. But that is far from the only reason. I hope my colleagues who are inclined to look at such amendments through green eyeshades will keep in mind the following: This amendment will reduce the movement of the long-term unemployed onto the welfare and food stamp caseloads and therefore its net cost to the Federal and State governments will be less than its gross cost. More important but along the same line: we are talking about workers with long-term attachment to the work force—stable members of our society who have responsibly paid taxes and who have formed the backbones of our communities. If we shrug our shoulders and walk away, instead of helping to tide them over until they can find work and get back on their financial feet, many of these people and their families will break the last thread in the safety net. They will lose their life savings, their homes, and everything they have worked for—an economic and emotional blow from which they may never recover. This is the true-life story of how dependency is born—and we all should recognize that taxpayers at all levels of government pay ceaselessly to support those who have fallen into that state. I should think we would do everything within our power to keep the number of persons in that condition from growing larger.

My amendment has a modest cost, Mr. President. The Congressional Budget Office projects it will cost approximately $285 million after adjusting for expected savings in food stamps and AFDC. I believe that the importance of what this amendment can do for the long-term unemployed more than justifies this expenditure.

Mr. President, I urge Senators on both sides of the aisle to support this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that a table be printed in the RECORD showing the number of weeks of benefits—I am not sure that such a chart can be printed in the RECORD, but I shall try to supplement my remarks in ways that will demonstrate the number of weeks of benefits exhaustees will receive in each State under my amendment.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the following Senators be added as cosponsors of my amendment: Senators DIXON, LEVIN, BINGAMAN, RIEGLE, MOYNIHAN, and RANDOLPH.

I also ask unanimous consent that any other Senators who wish to do so may do so by going up to the desk and so indicating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished minority leader for his discussion. Again, it is very difficult. Obviously, he has made some good points and I guess if we did not have a lot of other problems, this would certainly be a place to invest more money. Again, I think at the end of his statement, the minority leader indicated that we are going to conference. The bill passed by the House—a 45-day extension, I might say—costs about $1.2 billion. The 18-month extension we are looking at is about $3.7 billion. In the past year, I think we have expended for unemployment benefits about $5.6 billion. So I want the record to show that the Congress, with the support of the administration, has been very generous in this area.

Certainly, there are hardships in every State. I know many Senators who are running around trying to put together some formula to give their State 2 more weeks or 4 more weeks or open up the extended benefit program. That is not very difficult to do. It is not very difficult to stand up and say, I want to take care of something that has only a nominal cost, a couple of hundred million dollars—for the Labor Department, this will be about $400 million.

The labor cost is not the most important thing, though it is a factor, obviously. It seems to this Senator we need to resolve this issue. We need to have a comprehensive review of unemployment compensation. That has been triggered on the Senate side by the introduction of the bill by the distinguished minority leader (Mr. BYRD) and by the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ). We have already had one brief hearing—at least we have had the highlights pointed up at a hearing by Senator BYRD 2 weeks ago. That does not address the concerns of those who are unemployed or whose benefits have expired. But again, I think there has to be some restraint. This is a total federally funded program. The States are not involved. The States do not pay anything under this program.

It would seem to me that when we are debating the FSC program or the reach-back amendment, I would hope that, notwithstanding the motivation and good intentions of those who have a different view, my colleagues would oppose the amendment.

The amendment would provide additional FSC benefits—commonly known as reach-back—to individuals who first began receiving FSC benefits on or after April 1, 1983. We have different cost estimates than those of the Senator from West Virginia. The Congressional Budget Office estimates the cost at some $305 million, using the optimistic August assumptions. The Department of Labor has estimated that each week of reach-back costs between $60 and $100 million per week. This would obviously increase the cost of the Finance Committee bill and jeopardize the administration's support for the bill. The Byrd amendment, according to the Labor Department, will add $421 million to the committee bill.

Whether it is $300, $400, $420 million, it is a lot of money.

The FSC extension reported by the Finance Committee provides basic levels of benefits, tiered to the insured unemployment rates in each State, which are rational and affordable. Earlier FSC extensions did provide reach-back benefits, but that was at a time when unemployment was high and rising. Unemployment is certainly not low at this time, but it is clearly falling.

Remember that when the FSC program was first enacted in September 1982, the total unemployment rate, TUR, was 9.9 percent and going up to its December 1983 peak of 10.8 percent. Now the TUR is 9.5 percent and going down. In fact, the CBO August assumptions project a rate of 8.9 percent by year's end.

Also, State insured unemployment rates (IUR) are low. As we discussed yesterday, the IUR is a count of those who may be eligible for FSC. Currently, 24 States have IUR's at 3 percent or below and only 2 States are above 5 percent. Rates are now as low as 1 percent in Virginia. With rates this low, it is difficult to justify additional benefits.

Even total unemployment rates are low in many States. For instance, 13 States have a TUR below 7.5 percent and 36 States are less than 10 percent. New Hampshire and North Dakota show a June TUR of 4.7 percent with Maryland at 6.5 percent and Massachusetts at 7.5 percent.

So, Mr. President, I just suggest that for a lot of reasons, we are emerging from the recession. This Senator happened to turn on CSPAN last night and were able to watch Democrats and Republicans on the House side castigating each other for big deficits and which party spent more money than the other party, the inflation rates, the tax rates, and where the deficit was going. I say very candidly, the Republicans were on the defensive. They are being charged with increasing the deficit.

Again, I suggest that every time we add on another $200 or $300 million, maybe in some cases, they are justified, but we certainly are not lowering the deficit. I hope that not just on those general grounds but on the grounds that we have a good, solid package, we have made an effort to really take a hard look at States like West Virginia, Michigan, and others, where they have long-term high unemployment, hard-core unemployment.

Perhaps we did not do as well as some would want, but it just seems to me that our best thing to do is pass this bill and go to conference. There will be some adjustments made. Perhaps we can accommodate some of the States that have serious problems. But to start doing it on the floor one at a time or two at a time or six at a time, in my view, would not be fair to the other States.

I might suggest that my State gets the lowest 6 weeks. I could figure out some reason to make that 8 or 10 or 12.

We have tried to be objective in the formula. We believe that we have addressed the problem fairly, and I would hope that we might defeat this amendment and then move on to the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The monority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the manager of the bill Mr. DOLE, as usual is very considerate. He knows how to criticize without appearing to be critical, and he is one whom I greatly admire in that respect. I do not know anyone who has a keener wit, who can even poke fun at himself at times, as can Mr. DOLE. I have a great fondness for him.

But, Mr. President, we are talking here today about spending some money. If this amendment is not adopted, it would not make any bigger dent in the deficit than dropping a grain of sand in the Potomac.

I am talking about people who have exhausted all benefits under all programs—State basic programs, extended benefits program, supplemental compensation. They have exhausted all benefits. There are thousands of them in West Virginia. West Virginia is not alone in having this problem. West Virginia just happens to have the highest unemployment rate in the state of the Union at this point. We are talking about food and the basic necessities of life. These people have exhausted all benefits. They cannot pay their rent, they cannot make payments on their homes, the cannot make payments on their cars. Where are they going to eat? What are they going to eat? Are they going to have to get food stamps? Are they going to have to go on welfare? What is going to happen to them? Their children need clothes, their children need food.

Mr. President, this is simply an amendment that is born of great necessity. It is a humane amendment. As I said, the net cost, according to the CBO, will be $285 million. True, using the same economic assumptions, CBO estimates the gross cost of the amendment to be $305 million, from which CBO subtracts $20 million in AFDC and food stamp savings attributable to the amendment, which would yield the $285 million net cost.

Mr. President, we contribute to organizations that make available loans to the Soviet Union and loans to other Communist countries—loans at very low interest rates. We make grain available to the Soviets when our own people are going to be paying higher prices this fall for grain. Of course, it will partially result from the drought, but the Soviets are going to get theirs. We are also asked for money by the administration to support a program in the Caribbean. I think it is time that we consider the helpless people in our own States who have helped to build this country, who have helped to mine the coal, make the steel, and do the other important things that are conducive to a normally viable economy and a strong Nation with a high standard of living.

I hope that we would not look at this purely on a dollar basis. Admittedly, it will cost in the area of $300 million, but charity begins at home, when we have people who have exhausted every dime of unemployment compensation. They have exhausted every dime. In some cases it has caused broken homes. So in order to alleviate those hardships for a while longer until, hopefully, we can work out an overall program that will be more fair, that will operate more on the basis of need and utilize a better formula than the one we have been using, I hope Senators will vote for this amendment.

Those States that are not so seriously affected today may be before long. But it does not make any difference what States in this context are so vitally affected. The point is that there are human beings in Gary, W. Va., where the unemployment rate is 90 percent—90 percent unemployment—and they have long ago exhausted their benefits. People are selling their belongings in yard sales in order to pick up a little money that will temporarily hold them from falling through the safety net entirely. I do not think that that argument can be answered by quoting dollar figures and talking about deficits. This money when compared with the deficit of this year could hardly be picked up on a microscope. I hope that Senators will vote for the amendment.

Mr. President, I am ready for a vote if the Senator from Kansas is ready.

Mr. DOLE. Do you want the yeas and nays?

Mr. BYRD. I would like to have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUAYLE). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. NICKLES) are necessarily absent.

Mr. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. BYRD's amendment (No. 2253) was rejected.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2257

(Purpose: To provide an alternative method of qualifying for the maximum number of weeks of compensation)

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Levin amendment be temporarily set aside so that I might offer an amendment for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I send and amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), for himself and Mr. DIXON, proposes an amendment numbered 2257.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 602(e)(3)(C) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 (as amended by section 3 of the bill), strike out "exceeds 6 percent" and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds 5.5 percent,".

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I send this amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator DIXON. I am offering this amendment to S. 1887, the extension of Federal supplemental unemployment compensation bill, which would keep benefits from being cut in States that have suffered high unemployment the longest. It would provide that unemployed workers in States where insured unemployment rates (IUR) for the past 18 months exceeds 5.5 percent would receive 12 weeks of benefits. In 1 year, the IUR requirement would drop to 5 percent.

I believe that we have turned the corner on high unemployment and are heading for a sustained recovery. However, this does not mean that we can turn our backs on those who are still out of work, and on those areas hardest hit by severe unemployment. In Illinois, for example, total unemployment stands at 11.5 percent, and remains even higher in some cities. For example:

Joliet 23 percent;
Rockford 18.7 percent;
Peoria 18.2 percent
Danville 17.4 percent;
Moline 17.1 percent;
Decatur 16.5 percent; and
Kankakee 16.1 percent.

Mr. President, we must recognize that it will take longer for these cities, where just a few months ago unemployment topped 25 percent, to get back on their feet again. While it is difficult for many Americans to find work, in these areas it can be next to impossible considering that one out of every four to five persons is searching for employment. In spite of these conditions, S. 1887 would cut Illinois' benefits by no less than 4 weeks—more than almost any other State in the Union. I simply cannot stand idle while the rug is being pulled out from under the thousands of unemployed people of my State. I will not turn my back on them.

I fully understand the need to reduce Federal spending to cut the deficit, and have opposed unreasonably expensive unemployment compensation programs. My amendment will add approximately $67 million to the cost of the FSC program as proposed in S. 1887. I feel that this is a small price to pay for the substantial relief it will bring to States that have suffered high unemployment over the past 1½ years.

Mr. President, Illinois has the sixth highest unemployment rate in the Nation, yet it is possibly having more benefits cut than 47 other States. There is simply no way I can go back to my State this weekend and explain this inequity, this unfairness to those who are out of work in Illinois.

I am not asking that we increase Illinois' benefits; I am not suggesting that we provide for those who have already exhausted benefits—there are over 100,000 of these exhaustees in Illinois—realistically, with this program expiring tonight, we will not be able to address their plight today in the Senate; I'm not proposing that we do away with the insured unemployment rate even though it is grossly unfair to States such as Illinois.

All I am asking is that the unemployed of Illinois be treated with the compassion and fairness they deserve. Illinois has 11.7 percent unemployment now. It has gone up in the last month. There are some States that deserve and desperately need more than they are getting in this bill.

I would be honored indeed and pleased to hear from the distinguished manager of the bill, the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator DOLE, who is thoroughly familiar with this situation. We have discussed it at considerable length.

I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, Senator HEINZ.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a comment, I hope we can find a way to accommodate the Senator from the State of Illinois. I am well aware of the problems faced by the State of Illinois.

I commend the Senator for his amendment and his approach. I have examined his amendment and also his earlier dear colleague letter rather carefully. I join him in any effort to work with Senator DOLE, the chairman of our committee, to accommodate the really special problems in the State of Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. I thank my distinguished colleague very much indeed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a comment if he has the floor?

Mr. PERCY. I do have the floor, and I am happy to yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the conditions of unemployment in Illinois are well known to all of us. Throughout the country, we looked at unemployment figures State by State and we understand and feel compassion for those workers that are not gainfully employed at this time.

I feel that, when I hear certain figures of high unemployment, they are very graphic and they cause concern to me and every Member of this body.

I wish to speak not only of West Virginia, except to say that we have the highest unemployment rate in the Nation—not Illinois or any other State—at the present time. Of course, we are a State of basic industries, we realize that—coal, steel, glass, and chemicals. But we are very, very severely hit by unemployment at the present time. Our people are suffering.

Unemployment in the State of West Virginia stands at 17.4 percent today. We have communities that have 30- and 35-percent unemployment, and we have communities with 90-percent unemployment. We have communities that have percentage of 25 and 30 and more of the men and the women who need jobs that are unable to secure them, partially because of the closing of plants and mines and the reduction of work opportunities and also by the basic industries which I have mentioned being severely curtailed in production, including aluminum, at this time.

I would like to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois. I commend him and his colleague for presenting this amendment.

Is this an across-the-board amendment for all the States? I did not hear the amendment read. Or is it an amendment that seeks to help, understandably, the situation in Illinois?

Mr. PERCY. It seeks to help those States which are in the same position of Illinois, which have unemployment levels which have been the longest sustained. Of course, the assistance offered in the present bill for Illinois is very limited, compared to West Virginia, for instance, which has a 14-week extension, the longest of any other States. I am fully in sympathy with the deep plight of West Virginia, its State economy, and its people. I am aware of the deep concerns my colleague from West Virginia, the senior Senator, the minority leader, and the Governor and first lady of West Virginia have for the people of West Virginia. But the particular amendment. I am offering now takes care of States such as Ohio, Illinois, Rhode Island, and Alabama, which are not taken care of as well as West Virginia is in the present bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank my colleague.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. I am seeking the floor in my own right.

Mr. PERCY. I would like comments on the pending amendment. Otherwise, I would first appreciate whatever thoughts the distinguished chairman of the committee has on the pending amendment so I will be better advised as to the outcome.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. How much more time does the Senator wish?

Mr. PERCY. One or two minutes.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Let me say the Senator from Illinois has stated the case, saying that there are a number of States, Alabama, Illinois, Rhode Island, and maybe others.

We understand that there are States with pockets of unemployment which are suffering great distress. This has also been called to my attention by the two Senators from Indiana. Other Senators are coming in with the same problem, from States having pockets of unemployment. The House bill does mandate a study of the feasibility of some State triggers. I support such an effort, as I know the Senator from Illinois does. The two Senators from Minnesota also are vitally interested in this subject, as well as other Senators.

We know there are differences between the House and Senate bills. I cannot stand on the floor and promise we will take care of this State or that State because every State has a problem. In my State of Kansas we have high unemployment in Wichita. The airline industry is practically on its knees.

I would say to the Senator from Illinois and others, we are aware of the special concerns that a few States have and we are going to try to address those in conference. If we can find a way to do it without disrupting parameters of the overall cost of the program, it will be done.

Mr. PERCY. I very much appreciate the assurance of the distinguished Senator from Kansas. He is well aware of our problem. He knows the solution we are seeking now is not a costly solution and is targeted strictly at those which are the most hard pressed and have been hard pressed the longest. The figures I have given speak for themselves. I have every confidence that something can be worked out to take care of our situation.

With that, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Illinois withdrawing his amendment?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Reserving the right to object and I certainly will not object, I wanted to note the comment of the Senator from Kansas. I know that he attempts to be very fair in the handling of this matter. I would point out to him the extreme sense of urgency that exists in my own State of Ohio. Under this bill, there will be an inequity and the supplemental benefits would be cut from 10 weeks to 8 weeks. I would urge upon the chairman in as strong as possible terms that the milk of human kindness might run forth in Ohio in regard to this subject. I am grateful to him for his consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is withdrawn.

The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to report that there has been some improvement in the economy over the past few months. Unemployment has dropped from 10.8 percent to 9.5 percent. But unemployment still remains a very critical problem. There are 10.7 million Americans who are still out of work. And if you take those who have become too discouraged to be presently seeking a job you can add a million or two more who still are out of work.

Last year, 22 percent—more than 1 in 5 workers—were unemployed at some time during the year. A recent public opinion poll indicated that between 40 and 50 percent of the families in this country either had one member of their family or a friend who was out of work.

Mr. President, last month almost 25 percent of the unemployed, 2.5 million workers, had been out of work for 27 weeks or longer. Four years ago only 500,000 workers were out of work longer than 27 weeks. In other words, five times as many workers are out of work today for longer than 27 weeks than 4 years ago.

So it is clear that we cannot turn our backs on the plight of unemployed workers.

Yesterday, the Senate rejected an amendment to increase the number of weeks of unemployment benefits to be provided to workers who lost their jobs due to the current recession. The unemployed in New Jersey would have received 5 extra weeks of unemployment benefits. Unfortunately, less than 40 Senators voted in favor of the increase.

Today there are several other proposals before us to provide additional aid to jobless workers. We should not leave here until we have provided some extra help for these deserving Americans.

Until now the debate on the Senate floor has centered on important but technical matters, such as the insured unemployment rate, extended benefit triggers, and so forth. We need to cut through the technical jargon and get to the heart of the matter.

The fact is that unemployment benefits are much scarcer than they were in past major recessions. At the height of the recession in 1975, over two-thirds of the jobless were receiving unemployment aid. Today, considerably less than half are being helped.

This is due to two conditions: First, because of the prolonged downturn—really a 4-year recession—many people have exhausted all benefits to which they were entitled. Second, the tighter rules for unemployment have reduced the number of people receiving benefits.

Currently, Mr. President, in New Jersey, the maximum number of weeks of benefits stands at 34. In 1971, when the unemployment rate nationally was just 6 percent, unemployed New Jersey workers were eligible for 52 weeks of benefits.

We clearly need to do more for the unemployed.

That is why I will support both current efforts underway to increase the number of weeks of benefits. First, the reach-back proposal to provide extra weeks of benefits to persons who have already exhausted their benefits, as proposed by Senator BYRD. And second, the Levin amendment to provide extended benefits in the 34 hardhit States, including New Jersey.

The President, in addition to unemployment benefits, we need to provide proper health care coverage for unemployed workers. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that over 10 million persons lack health insurance coverage because of job loss. In New Jersey, this amounts to over 300,000 persons, nearly 5 percent of the State population.

In the recently concluded August recess, when I was in New Jersey, moving around the State at town meetings and meeting groups all over the State, I came in contact with any number of New Jerseyans who were in this predicament—who had exhausted their unemployment benefits, who were unable to get health care because they had, and who had very serious family illnesses and, therefore, faced bankruptcy. Mr. President, I think this is unacceptable.

To help remedy this problem, on July 25, over 2 months ago, the Senate Committee on Finance reported out a $1.7 billion measure to provide health care coverage for the unemployed. The House has already passed a similar measure, but the Finance Committee bill languishes on the Senate docket, apparently because some do not want to see this program enacted.

Mr. President, it is time to act. We need to provide additional aid for the unemployed through unemployment benefits and we need to insure that those Americans who have been unlucky enough to lose their jobs and their health care benefits do not face the option of bankruptcy and do not face the possibility of being unable to care for their sick family members.

So, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join with us in our efforts to aid the unemployed, both through increasing unemployment benefit levels and providing health care benefits for the unemployed.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I wish to join with the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois in his plea to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the floor manager of the bill, to give the problem raised by the Senator from Illinois the utmost attention in conference, as has been promised by the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

I join in the concerns that have been expressed. As was noted by the Senator from Illinois, my State is one of those affected.

Second, Mr. President, I support the 18-month extension of the FSC program. There are few experiences more discouraging than to be unable to find a job. The unemployment problem has not yet been solved, and we must provide continued relief to those who are out of work. The temporary provision of additional benefits, however, is not the answer to the unemployment problem and should not be considered as a solution. The solution lies in a better economic environment and in training and retraining.

Mr. President, I would also like to mention that section 8 of S. 1887 increases the fiscal year 1984 authorization for title XX, the social services block grant, from $2.5 billion to $2.7 billion. The first concurrent budget resolution allowed for a $300 million increase in the program.

Senator BRADLEY and I offered this amendment during the Finance Committee's consideration of the unemployment compensation extension. Senators DURENBERGER, HEINZ, MATSUNAGA, and MOYNIHAN cosponsored the $200 million increase.

This measure would provide additional authorization for those who are concerned with the social services block grant, namely children, providing day care centers for those who are low-income working families and to women with work or training programs.

The 1981 budget cut in title XX decreased its funding by 21 percent. One result of the cut has been well-documented by the Children's Defense Fund. According to CDF, fewer children are receiving title XX child care. Those hurt most by these cuts have been those low-income working families and women in work or training programs.

States have made, through necessity, the difficult choice between providing title XX assistance either to children from severly troubled families, or to children from low-income working families. Unemployment and budget cuts have added to the pressures already felt by low-income families. The result has been an increase in reported child abuse, neglect, and requests for foster care placements.

The importance of title XX cannot be overstated. Title XX provides vital funds for a range of services for children and their families, disabled persons, and the elderly. The committee amendment will certainly help to meet the original goals of the program—helping people attain or maintain economic self-sufficiency.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I can assure the Senator from Rhode Island that I appreciate his comments. We shall look at that problem carefully in conference as I have indicated to the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), both Senators from Illinois, and others have raised questions about similar pockets of unemployment in their States. We are going to try to address those with the next bill we have in the conference.

Mr. President, as I understand, Senator LEVIN is prepared to offer his amendment. Following that, I think there is a colloquy with Senator SPECTER on health care for the unemployed, which was just addressed by the Senator from New Jersey. Then I think Senator SPECTER has another amendment which he is in the process of clearing with Senator KENNEDY, Senator LONG, and Senator HATCH. There may be another amendment by Senator QUAYLE. I hope we can have consideration of these amendments and go to passage. I do not know if there is any request for a rollcall on passage, but if there is, I hope we can get to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). Who seeks recognition? The Senator from Michigan.

AMENDMENT NO. 2252

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the pending amendment was introduced last night. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. BRADLEY) be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, in a nutshell, this amendment keeps the extended benefit program alive. Without this amendment, our extended benefit program is going to die. Only two States presently benefit by it, the States of Louisiana and West Virginia. Even though there are other States that are in as desperate need, we do not qualify for the extended benefit program because of the way the benefit program is triggered and the manner in which it is now figured. States such as Michigan and Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Washington, Wisconsin—States with very, very high unemployment, long-term unemployment—do not qualify for the extended benefit program. This amendment would, at a State's option, make a State eligible for 10 weeks of extended benefits if that State's average insured unemployment rate since January of 1982 is 6 percent or above—in other words, long-term unemployment, still using the insured unemployment rate.

This would be exactly the same measure that the committee used in its bill to make sure that some States in need qualify for the highest tier of supplemental benefits.

Further, the amendment would provide 8 weeks of extended benefits if the State's average insured rate over that period is between 5 and 6 percent, and 6 weeks of benefits if the average insured rate is between 4 and 5 percent. Based on current data, this would affect 32 States.

Last night, we submitted for the RECORD a list of States which would benefit by the survival of the extended benefit program.

This is a targeted amendment. It is not subject to the criticism that was leveled against the last amendment, that it applied in every State. This looks at the States with the longest term unemployment.

I see my friend from Rhode Island is in the Chamber, presiding. Rhode Island has had long-term unemployment of almost 6 percent since the beginning of last year. Yet, it is not eligible for the extended benefit program the way it is now triggered.

This amendment, as I indicated last night, is a bipartisan amendment. Senator SPECTER is its principal cosponsor. It is an amemdment which I hope will receive the consideration of this body, because if nothing else, we should be loath to see the demise of the extended benefit program—when we still have, in this country, national unemployment of 9.5 percent.

The bill before us today would extend the Federal supplemental compensation system in a somewhat modified form. I support that extension, although I believe that the States which are still among the hardest hit in terms of unemployment should receive more weeks of benefits than the committee's bill provides.

The unemployed in this country deserve more than just the continuation of the Federal supplemental compensation program, known sometimes as FSC. They also deserve to have the extended benefit program continue in a realistic way, some way to keep the extended benefit program alive when we have 9½ percent unemployment nationally.

That program is supposed to provide 13 weeks of unemployment benefits to individuals in the high unemployment States.

For those States, the FSC program was originally designed to be an additional layer of benefits on top of the extended benefits program.

What we have seen with the exception of two States, Louisiana and West Virginia, is the effective atrophy, the elimination, the irrelevance of the extended benefits program because of the way its triggering mechanism has been modified.

The way this program is worked out, the FSC program for almost every high unemployment State is now a replacement for the extended benefits and not in addition to, the way it was originally intended.

As I have indicated, only two States now qualify for extended benefits. My home State of Michigan with 14.3 percent unemployment, Illinois with 11.7 percent unemployment, Pennsylvania with 11.5 percent, Ohio with 11.1 percent, just to mention some of the most outrageous examples, do not qualify for extended benefits.

This situation does not only fly in the face of commonsense, it flies in the face of the clear intent of the extended benefits program when it was originally enacted and in the face of the intent behind recent changes to that program.

On August 7, 1970, when Senator LONG was the floor manager of the legislation which established the extended benefit program, he stated, "The Committee bill, like the House bill, would establish a new permanent program to pay extended benefits during periods of high unemployment to workers who exhaust their basic entitlement." Certainly that test is applicable now. Further, in a statement by the Office of Management and Budget in April of 1981, in which it described its proposed changes to the extended benefit program, it was stated, "The proposed shift to State triggers at modestly higher threshold levels will redirect benefits to areas where they are needed."

Who, I ask, would say that States which have unemployment in the range of 11 percent or above are not States experiencing "periods of high unemployment" or are not "areas where they—extended benefits—are needed?" I do not think that anybody in this Chamber would try to say that today. And if no one can deny that States like Michigan, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois are areas of high unemployment, then the only other possible reason why they are not eligible for extended benefits is that the measure which determines eligibility is no longer a valid indicator of a State's economic distress. Furthermore, if the measure is no longer valid as evidenced by the absurd results it produces, then it is incumbent upon the Congress to modify or offer an alternative to that measure.

I am all too familiar with the absurd results which require us to make a change. In my own State of Michigan, the unemployment rate in May was 14.9 percent and Michigan was eligible for 53 weeks of unemployment benefits. By August, unemployment had dropped only by half a percentage point, but the maximum number of weeks of eligibility for unemployment benefits had precipitiously dropped to 36 weeks. In other words, there was a 17-week drop in the number of weeks of unemployment compensation available in response to only a very modest decline in Michigan's unemployment rate. This dropoff in the number of weeks of benefits resulted from Michigan's triggering off in June from the 13-week extended benefit program and from the loss of 4 weeks of Federal supplemental compensation. The decline in benefits was mandated by a decline in Michigan's insured unemployment rate.

Of course, that differs from the actual rate, the total unemployment rate, which focuses on the people who are unemployed and looking for work, and that is the most commonly reported unemployment statistic and the one which makes the most sense, since people who have exhausted their benefits but are still unemployed are not even counted for the insured employment rate. So, clearly, any program which relies solely on the IUR as a measure of the need for unemployment benefits beyond the basic 26 weeks of State benefits, is relying on an indicator which does not adequately measure economic distress. But the problem, as has already been discussed today, is that the TUR outside of the 10 most populous States may also be of dubious reliability on a month-to-month basis.

However, we are not elected by the people to throw our hands up in the face of difficulty or at a time of need. They expect us to deal with the anomaly that most States are eligible for only slightly more than half the weeks of unemployment benefits in 1983 than they were in 1975 even though the nationwide unemployment rate then was significantly lower than it is today.

I know that the Finance Committee under the leadership of its distinguished chairman has recognized this problem and has indicated its willingness to try an innovative approach to deal with it on a limited basis. The bill before us today includes a safeguard to make sure that States which have been paying out unemployment benefits at a high rate for a prolonged period of time qualify for the maximum number of weeks of FSC benefits. The presumption is that these States have the greatest need for additional weeks of benefits because they are the most likely to have a relatively high percentage of unemployed who have exhausted all 26 weeks of State benefits. I appreciate the committee's application of this measure to the FSC program and its positive impact on the State of Michigan.

I want the chairman to know personally that I do appreciate his efforts to make the FSC program more relevant to areas of long-term unemployment. While I believe we should keep the extended benefit program alive in more than just two States, while I believe we should have as many weeks of unemployment benefits now as we did in the middle seventies, and while we may disagree on that issue, I still am, indeed, grateful and appreciative to the chairman for the kind of effort he, Senator LONG and others have made in the Finance Committee to make the FSC program relevant to areas of long-term unemployment who have that long-term IUR. I hope that in the conference the chairman would see fit to continue to apply that same sensitivity on the long-term IUR to whatever level of FSC benefits are finally arrived at.

It seems to me that if that long-term uninsured measure is good enough for the FSC program, we ought to use it as well as an alternative measure on the extended benefits program.

Both programs have the goals of providing unemployment benefits to people who have exhausted their State benefits. Our amendment would simply apply the concept embodied in the Finance Committee bill to the extended benefit program. The Levin-Specter amendment would not repeal any of the current provisions of the extended benefit program. Therefore, any State which would receive 13 weeks of benefits under the law's current criteria would still be eligible for those benefits. Our amendment would provide an alternate means for a State to qualify for extended benefits.

At the same time it would recognize that there are degrees of distress and of need for additional weeks of benefits. In that sense it is like the committee's FSC bill which provides for four basic tiers of benefits, depending on a State's IUR.

Our amendment will revitalize the extended benefit program. It does it in a targeted manner. It utilizes a measure of need that even the committee recognizes is an innovative approach worthwhile pursuing.

Specifically, this amendment would, at a State's option, make a State eligible for 10 weeks of extended benefits if that State's average IUR from January of 1982 is 6 percent or above. This would be exactly the same measure that the committee used to make sure that some States in need qualified for the highest tier of FSC. Further, the amendment would provide 8 weeks of extended benefits if the State's average IUR over that period is between 5 percent and 6 percent; and 6 weeks of benefits if the average IUR is between 4 percent and 5 percent. Based on current data, this could affect 32 States, and I ask unanimous consent that a list of those States be included in the RECORD following my statement.

This amendment would, thus revitalize the extended benefit program in a targeted manner utilizing a measure of need that even the committee recognizes as an innovative approach worthwhile pursuing on a temporary basis.

I do not believe that either the original authors of the extended benefit program or those who succeeded in making modifications in 1981 intended that it be a nullity when national unemployment was 9.5 percent and is exceeding 11 percent in many of our States. That is what the extended benefit program has become. It has become a nullity for all of us, except those who happen to live in Louisiana or West Virginia. It has become a nullity for us in States that have unemployment as high as Louisiana has. The extended benefit program has become a nullity for us even though we have actual unemployment in some of our States in the area of 14 percent—14.3 percent unemployment in Michigan; yet we have triggered off the 13-week extended benefit program.

I hope all of us can support this bipartisan amendment. It costs $1.6 billion. That is a significant amount of money. The principal we are talking about is a significant principal.

The issue really is this: Is it worth $1.6 billion to preserve the extended benefit program? That is the issue. If we want the extended benefit program to die, if we are willing to see it die, then we will do nothing. If we want to keep that 13-week period alive, a period that has always been available in times of high unemployment, then we must make this investment in this $1.6 billion.

Mr. President, I thank my friend from Pennsylvania, who has been active in the cosponsorship of this amendment. I express my appreciation to him.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), and I congratulate him on his leadership with respect to this amendment. He has been a leader in the field of unemployment benefits generally.

In supporting the amendment, I do so fully mindful of the fact that unemployment compensation benefits are very expensive and that we live in a time of an escalating Federal deficit which is very troublesome for the promotion of the country's economic recovery.

Nevertheless, it is my judgment that this amendment is necessary. I say this based upon the findings I have made on extensive travels throughout the State of Pennsylvania, where the unemployment currently is 10.8 percent; and in some counties in Pennsylvania, such as Cameron County, the unemployment rate is 29 percent. Among the 620,000 Pennsylvanians who are unemployed, it is really a national emergency and a national disaster.

During the August recess, I had occasion to visit unemployment offices in Pittsburgh, Wilkes-Barre, and Scranton. I stood in a line in Pittsburgh during the week of August 8—I believe it was Wednesday, August 10—and saw the people coming to apply for unemployment benefits and face the disappointment of finding that their benefits had expired.

Oddly enough, on the triggering factor, on August 6, Pennsylvania fell one-twentieth of 1 percentage point below the average to qualify for the extended benefits program. Because of that triggering off, some 25,000 Pennsylvanians and their families lost unemployment compensation benefits.

So it is my judgment that it is our responsibility to move in this field, and that is why I joined the distinguished Senator from Michigan in cosponsoring this amendment and in urging that, notwithstanding the costs involved and the problems of deficit, this is a basic necessity and one which should be adopted by this body, by Congress, and signed by the President.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. As I understand his amendment, it would provide an optional trigger for the extended benefits (EB) program. The Senator is to be commended for his persistence and for his creativity in this area. This is a battle which has been fought several times in this Chamber, and I know that it will occur again. However, I do believe that this is the wrong time for an amendment of this kind.

We are presently debating an important bill which must be acted on by midnight tonight. It is a bill which provides necessary benefits for about 700,000 long-term unemployed workers at the present time and for many more in the next 18 months. In fact, the Department of Labor estimates that approximately 3.8 million people will receive FSC benefits by the end of March 1985.

Aside from the continuation of FSC benefits, S. 1887 contains other time-sensitive provisions. First, S. 1887 extends for 1 year a provision of the foster care program which permits Federal matching of funds used to support children placed in foster care without the benefit of a judicial determination. This is an important provision which insures protection for children who must be removed from their homes as a result of child neglect and validated reports of child abuse.

Second, the bill contains an amendment which increases the entitlement level for the title XX, social services block grant, by $200 million. This increase is effective for fiscal year 1984. I know that my colleagues are aware that title XX has considerable support in every State and community.

I remind my colleagues that just yesterday, this body approved an amendment to extend an important disability provision which would otherwise expire tonight. This extension is important to thousands of social security disability beneficiaries.

Aside from time problems, I am opposed to the Senator's amendment on the basis of substance. It is my view that changes to the extended benefits program are neither necessary nor desirable. Such changes are costly both to the Federal taxpayers and to State taxpayers since the benefits are financed equally by the Federal Government and the State governments.

My colleague from Michigan is very well aware of the serious financial problems many of the State unemployment trust funds are experiencing. Twenty-five States and three territories have borrowed a total of over $13 billion from the Federal Government to continue paying benefits; 16 of those 28 have defaulted on their loans, triggering escalating increases in the UC tax for employers in those States.

Interest is now charged on Federal loans and this has forced a number of States to increase the State payroll taxes and to tighten and otherwise limit UC benefits.

I also point out the fact that Michigan has tried to face up to some of these programs at the State level. Michigan is an excellent example of a State which was forced to enact massive changes in its UC program to avoid continued bankruptcy. I know the author of the amendment would argue that his proposal would not require a State to opt for the alternative trigger, but I think he must be aware that the Governors and legislatures in many States would feel irresistible pressure to select the alternative. This could only add to the financial woes I have already mentioned.

I might say, as an aside, that this is a program that is paid for on a 50-50 basis. It has been whispered—I do not think Governors will tell you openly—that they are not so anxious to have the program. They do not know where they are going to get their 50 of the 50-50.

It seems to me that we have a vehicle that has been introduced on the Senate side, the Byrd-Heinz proposal, to have a comprehensive change in unemployment compensation. Maybe that is the answer; maybe it is not; maybe there is another answer. Maybe we will end up doing what we do now, after extensive hearings.

I must oppose the amendment, and I hope it will be defeated, for the reasons I have given.

The Finance Committee has not been unresponsive on the issue of the EB program. On August 1 of this year, a hearing was held by Senator ARMSTRONG'S Social Security and Income Maintenance Subcommittee, on the subject of the EB program. I do not believe a convincing case was made in support of EB changes.

Finally, I remind the Senator that the Department of Labor projects Michigan triggering on the EB program in the second quarter of fiscal year 1984. At that time, the additional 13 weeks of benefits will become available—not only in Michigan, but in 9 additional States as well. Until that time, the FSC program benefits will be available—financed 100 percent by the Federal Government.

Senator LEVIN'S amendment has a potential cost of $1.65 billion in fiscal year 1984. We just cannot afford it—nor can the States. We have the FSC program in place to provide benefits for the long-term unemployed. This amendment is not needed.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment and let us move on to final passage on this important measure.

Mr. President, I have listened carefully to the statement of the Senator from Michigan and, as usual, it is thoughtful and reasoned.

He made the point that this is a costly amendment—$1.65 billion, more or less—but there is also a matter of great principle involved.

We hope we have made the right decisions in the Senate Finance Committee. There is no doubt in my mind that if we go to conference, certain adjustments will be made. The House bill is substantially different. It is a 45-day extension. There is the TUR. There are a number of things not contained in the Senate version.

I oppose the amendment because I am certain that if it were adopted and we added that much cost to the total program for the total package, it would probably be vetoed. But that does not indicate that I disagree with either Senator SPECTER or Senator LEVIN in raising the issue. Their States have problems that we do not experience in other States. As pointed out by the Senator from Michigan, we have attempted to address some of those concerns from time to time, whether interest or loans, in trying to figure out some way to address the concerns of the hard core, long-term unemployed in some States, such as Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, and a number of others.

S. 1887 contains some very time-sensitive provisions. It extends for 1 year the provision of the foster care program.

I am also advised that in the second quarter, a number of States will trigger on EB—Alaska, Idaho, Michigan, Mississippi, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. They are coming back on in January of this coming year.

I hope this amendment is defeated, for the reasons I have outlined.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the remarks that have just been made by the Senator from Kansas.

The news that came out this morning, that unemployment claims have started going up once again, indicates clearly that we are a long way from being out of the woods with regard to the desperate unemployment situation that still plagues many sections of our great country.

It seems to me that the sponsors of this amendment should look at the fact that, as the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Kansas, has just pointed out, there is plenty of leeway to work out something in conference with the House of Representatives that would not be too expensive.

Therefore, it seems to me that if this resolution is put to a vote I think that there is a high degree of likelihood, based on the other votes that we have had on this measure, that it would be defeated. Going to conference with a defeat by the Senate likely would not strengthen the hand of the Senate conferees on coming to some kind of an agreement.

I, therefore, suggest that in this case discretion might be the better part of valor, and if we do want to do something for these people that are being hurt very badly because of the deep recession and high unemployment a defeated rollcall vote on this issue might not be in the best interests of the very worthy and very thoughtful proponents of the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I can appreciate what the Senator from Michigan is attempting to do in his amendment. He would like to make Michigan and additional States eligible for extended unemployment benefits.

There are only two States, Louisiana and West Virginia, whose insured unemployment rates are currently high enough for them to qualify for 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits funded from State and Federal payroll taxes on employers. In most States, the new Federal supplemental compensation benefits have, to a large extent, taken over the function that extended benefits have served in the past, and the new benefits are 100 percent federally funded.

The pending amendment would allow States that have had sustained high insured unemployment since January 1982 to qualify for extended benefits, with the duration depending on the degree of unemployment.

Mr. President, I regret that I cannot support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. The Labor Department estimates that it would cost $1.65 billion over the next 12 months.

However, I do want to compliment the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) on his efforts on behalf of unemployed workers in Michigan. The committee bill contains a provision which allows a longer duration of Federal supplemental benefits in States like Michigan with sustained high insured unemployment rates. This provision is directly due to the efforts of the Senator from Michigan. He first educated us and then persuaded us that States in Michigan's situation had a good case for specific treatment.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) for his gracious comments and for the leadership he has so ably demonstrated.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. HUMPHREY), and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. NICKLES) are necessarily absent.

Mr. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEPSEN). Is there any other Senator in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 64, as follows:

So Mr. LEVIN's amendment (No. 2252) was rejected.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Pennsylvania has an amendment that I have just discussed with Senator HATCH and Senator KENNEDY. They have no objection to the amendment. I have no objection to the amendment. I do not think Senator LONG has objection.

The amendment deals with the railroad retirement, money that has been appropriated but not spent. Then there will be a colloquy with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I hope there are no other amendments after that. Senator QUAYLE has one that he may offer, though I hope he does not.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment to this bill, but will not do so under the pressure of circumstances which demand speedy action. However, I am deeply concerned that these stop gap measures, such as extension of emergency supplemental compensation, do not reach the heart of the problem for many Americans.

There are in this country many small communities which are victims of the economic recession, whose most solid citizens have been devastated by termination of their lifelong employment in mining or mine-related industries. Our tax policies have encouraged their employers to terminate production in the United States in favor of developing facilities abroad, or importing foreign raw material to the further imbalance of trade.

Aside from the negative economic impact of this practice, and aside from the obvious danger in the event of an international emergency which I fear will find the United States dangerously short of strategic metals, there is a human factor involved which we ignore repeatedly in our discussions of unemployment, compensation, job training, jobs bills and such worthwhile but inadequate proposals, at least as far as those I speak of today are affected.

There are untold numbers of workers who spent their entire adult lives working for the same company in the same small one-industry town—where as much as 25 percent of all workers were employed by the same employer.

The company, for whatever reason, closes down operations.

Those workers with enough years to accrue a partial pension take retirement benefits. Fair enough. But those with not enough retirement benefits are out. They draw unemployment until all benefits are exhausted. The younger ones may be picked up on a job training program such as the Joint Partnership Training Act provides. Fair enough, again.

But what about those too young to retire, too young for social security, too old to be deemed successful in JPTA programs. And their employment benefits stopped before the magic date of June 1, 1982(?), so they do not qualify for the provisions of the Emergency Supplemental Compensation Act, including the extension we are considering today.

Mr. President, these people are the third or fourth generation of their families to work in the mine or smelter. They have mortgage payments to meet on nearly paid-for homes. They have families to feed, clothe, and educate. They have no income. And they have no job prospects at this time locally or anywhere else. There are no buyers for their homes. Their neighbors are in the same boat. Outsiders are certainly not attracted to the communities which are hardly the garden spots of America. Generations of extraction of ore or processing thereof without regard to modern environmental safeguards have left unsightly scars on the landscape. And what do we offer them? Our sympathy and that is about all. Sympathy does not pay the mortgage, the doctor bill, or put food on the table. Sympathy does not provide a job.

Mr. President, my amendment, which I am not proposing at this time, would have provided additional unemployment benefits to workers whose benefits have expired before June 30, 1982 (and thus, not covered by S. 1887), who were employed for at least the last 5 years in a factory, mine or mining-related industry in a community where 10 percent or more of the working population were employed by a single employer in 1979. If you believe this describes the situation in Butte and Anaconda, Mont., you are right. But it also describes similar situations in many other States. Unfortunately, I have not been able to find out how many situations of this type exist, or how many families are in these dire straits. Thus, even a ball park figure on the amount of money involved is impossible to determine.

So, Mr. President, instead of proposing an amendment at this time, I have asked the Committee on Finance, in cooperation with the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, be aware of this problem for long-time workers in one-industry towns who are ineligible for any additional unemployment compensation and determine how Congress could deal with this problem in an orderly and constructive way.

Mr. President, I have no delusions that we can easily find an answer to the problem.

What we must face up to is the obvious need to provide jobs for people and at the same time repair the infrastructure of our country—our bridges, our highways, clean up of hazardous waste sites, stream pollution, and water and sewer needs.

If we demand, as we should, that our allies of Japan and NATO carry their fair share of the cost of defending themselves, we could well afford to invest, as we must, our own resources in restoring the infrastructure of the United States. I still hope we awake to that fact. In the meantime, we cannot tolerate the present circumstances in which we say to the Americans I speak for here: "Abandon hope—your country doesn't care."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

AMENDMENT NO. 2259

(Purpose: To extend the supplemental railroad unemployment benefits for one year)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. I offer the amendment on behalf of Senator HEINZ, Senator DIXON, Senator SASSER, and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SPECTER) for himself, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. SASSER, proposes an amendment numbered 2259.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

EXTENSION OF SUPPLEMENTAL RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

SEC. 9. (a) Section 17 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by inserting ", or the benefit year beginning July 1, 1983" after "July, 1983";

(2) in subsection (e), by striking out "June 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1984"; and

(3) by amending subsection (f) to read as follows:

"(f)(1) For purposes of this section the term 'period of eligibility' means, with respect to any employee for the benefit year beginning July 1, 1982, the period beginning with the later of—

"(A) the first day of unemployment following the day on which he exhausted his rights to unemployment benefits (as determined under subsection (b)) in such benefit year; or

"(B) March 10, 1983, and consisting of five consecutive registration periods 22 (without regard to benefit year); except that for purposes of this paragraph, any registration period beginning after June 30, 1983, and before the date of the enactment of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983, shall not be taken into account for purposes of payment of benefits, or in determining the consecutiveness of registration periods.

"(2) For purposes of this section the term 'period of eligibility' means, with respect to any employee for the benefit year beginning July 1, 1983, the period beginning with the later of—

"(A) the first day of unemployment following the day on which he exhausted his rights to unemployment benefits (as determined under subsection (b)) in such benefit year; or

"(B) the date of the enactment of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983, and consisting of five consecutive registration periods; except that no such period of eligibility shall include any registration period beginning after June 30, 1984.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to days of unemployment during any registration period beginning on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) Amounts appropriated under section 102(b) of Public Law 98-8 shall remain available without regard to fiscal year limitation for purposes of carrying out the amendments made by this section.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment will reinstate the program of supplemental benefits for railroad workers, which was authorized in the emergency jobs bill and expired on June 30, 1983. Those unemployed workers who exhausted all available benefits on June 30, or who were receiving supplemental benefits on that date, will now receive a full 10 weeks under this amendment made available by that provision.

This amendment is the same as S. 1717, which I had previously introduced on August 1, 1983, along with Senators SASSER and DIXON, entitled "The Unemployment Railroad Workers Supplemental Benefits Extension Act of 1983."

The Railroad Retirement Board estimates that the extension would provide assistance to some 50,000 individuals and cost $60 million to $65 million, with administrative costs running in the neighborhood of $800,000.

In the jobs bill, the Congress appropriated $125 million for the initial program of supplemental benefits, and some $83 million, as I understand it, remains in the special unemployment insurance trust fund at the Department of Labor.

An additional $80,000 remains from the original outlay of $750,000 for administration.

I have conferred with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Health and Human Services (Mr. HATCH), who has agreed with the provisions of this amendment, and I have conferred with the distinguished Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has thought well of this amendment and will speak for himself in just a moment.

An estimated 5,600 railroad workers, Mr. President, who live in Pennsylvania, would benefit from this provision, as well as some 5,000 in Illinois, 4,600 in Ohio, and 2,000 in Kentucky. Every State has railroad workers who qualify.

The Congress has repeatedly extended the program of Federal supplemental compensation for workers in the general economy, and railroaders ought to be in a comparable position. That is the reason for the offering of this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator FORD be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, last March, we were able to give railroad workers with less than 10 years of service an additional 10 weeks of unemployment compensation. As you recall, with the abolition of the national trigger, we inadvertently eliminated the mechanism by which these workers qualified for extended benefits.

That program expired on June 30, 1983, however, and many people were unable to collect the full 10 weeks.

There is ample money available from the March appropriation to cover this amendment, which is estimated to cost between $60 and $65 million.

Five thousand railroad workers in Illinois will benefit from this extension, which I introduced with Senators SPECTER and SASSER last month, as S. 1717.

The amendment will provide for 10 weeks of Federal supplemental compensation for railroad workers who have less than 10 years of service, and who lost their jobs after June 30, 1983. In addition, it would allow those who were eligible for the program prior to June 30, but who did not collect their full 10 weeks, to have that opportunity.●

RAIL WORKER AMENDMENT

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SPECTER), which provides relief in the form of supplemental unemployment benefits for those rail workers with less than 10 years of railroad service.

Earlier this year, Congress passed similar legislation as part of the emergency jobs bill. However, this particular legislation expired on June 30 leaving thousands of rail workers with less than 10 years of service in the lurch.

Mr. President, I am sure everyone here is very familiar with the problems our Nation's rail workers have experienced in the last few years. It has only been a little over a month since Congress passed legislation enabling the railroad retirement system to remain solvent and thereby avoid cuts in benefits for railroad retirees. These cuts became necessary in large part because of the severely reduced number of rail jobs and the subsequent loss of employee contributions which fund the railroad retirement system.

It has been estimated that between 30,000 to 50,000 rail workers with less than 10 years of service are no longer employed and are in need of financial assistance. This legislation extends benefits for those workers who have already received their initial 26 weeks of benefits an additional 10 weeks.

There are approximately 700 rail workers in my State that will qualify for these extended benefits and I know that they are very anxious to go back to work. It is my hope that my colleagues will provide them temporary financial assistance until those jobs are reestablished or new employment may be found.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has accurately described the amendment. I will say I discussed this with both Senator LONG and Senator KENNEDY, the ranking member of the Labor Committee. They have no objection.

Very quickly, as pointed out by Senator SPECTER, the emergency jobs bill in June of this year contained a provision appropriating $125 million to finance unemployment benefits for unemployed railroad workers. As I understand the situation, this amount has not been fully expended by the Railroad Retirement Board which administers the railroad unemployment insurance program.

Although as the Senator from Pennsylvania pointed out, we do not have jurisdiction in the committee on this matter, we have cleared it with the Labor Committee and they have no objection. It would be a good place to insert the amendment.

I am not certain what the attitude of the House will be because it will be going to the Ways and Means Committee where they may not have jurisdiction either.

Having cleared it with the principals, we have no objection to accepting the amendment. I think I can speak for the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Senator LONG, in this regard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion?

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2259) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2260

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SPECTER) proposes an amendment numbered 2260.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE —HEALTH CARE FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS GRANTS TO STATES

SEC. . (a) Title XX of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"HEALTH CARE FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

"SEC. 2008. (a)(1) Notwithstanding section 2005(a)(4) and any other provisions of this title, any State (as defined in paragraph (4)) may establish a program under this section for providing health care coverage for unemployed workers, subject to the provisions of this section.

"(2) The State may choose those groups of individuals (and their immediate families) who shall be covered under the program, the duration of such coverage, and the duration of the program, as the State determines to be appropriate, except that—

"(A) no coverage may be provided to any individual (or his immediate family) unless such individual (i) is receiving regular, extended, or Federal supplemental compensation, railroad unemployment compensation, or any other Federal unemployment compensation, or (ii) is unemployed and has exhausted his rights to such compensation (other than for cause) by reason of payment of all such compensation for which he is eligible, within the prior 6 months, or (iii) was eligible for such compensation within the prior 30 days but lost such eligibility on account of employment;

"(B) no coverage may be provided for the first 6 weeks during which an individual is eligible for compensation (referred to in subparagraph (A)) in a benefit year (as determined under the applicable unemployment compensation law);

"(C) no coverage may be provided to any individual unless such individual was enrolled in a group health plan of the employer by whom he was employed at the time he last became eligible for compensation described in subparagraph (A) (and in making a determination with respect to prior enrollment, and with respect to coverage described in subparagraphs (F) and (G), the State may use the broadest possible determination of proof);

"(D) no coverage may be provided with respect to any services provided prior to October 1, 1983, or services provided for an individual prior to the time such individual is determined to be eligible under such program, or inpatient services provided in a continuous period which began prior to such date or such eligibility;

"(E) no coverage may be provided for any individual who is otherwise eligible for medical assistance under the State plan under title XIX or who is eligible for benefits under title XVIII;

"(F) no coverage may be provided for any individual who is covered under a group health plan for which a contribution toward the cost of the plan is being made by an employer, former employer, union, or any entity other than the individual, or who could have been so covered if an election had been made and premiums had been paid on a timely basis;

"(G) no coverage may be provided for any individual who is covered under a group health plan of such individual's spouse for which a contribution toward the cost of the plan is being made by an employer, former employer, union, or any entity other than such spouse, or who could have been so covered if an election after the date of the enactment of this section had been made and premiums had been paid on a timely basis; and

"(H) no coverage may be provided for any individual whose family income exceeds an amount equal to 100 percent of the median family income in such State for a family of the same size as such individual's family (and in making a determination with respect to an individual's family income, the State shall determine the declaration or proof of income to be required, the type of income to be included, and the time period over which the income is to be measured).

"(3)(A) The Secretary may waive the requirements of paragraph (2)(H) to the extent that special circumstances permit presumptions about the family income of applicants which make it unnecessary to apply the means test described in such paragraph on a case-by-case basis.

"(B) the provisions of paragraph (2)(H) shall not preclude a State from imposing a means test that is more restrictive than the test described in such paragraph.

"(4) Notwithstanding section 1101(a)(1), for purposes of this section the term 'State' means the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

"(b)(1)(A) Services under the program established under this section may include only—

"(i) inpatient hospital services;

"(ii) emergency outpatient hospital services;

"(iii) routine and emergency physician services (including those provided in health clinics but not including those provided in nursing care or intermediate care facilities);

"(iv) prenatal, delivery, and post partum care;

"(v) laboratory and diagnostic X-ray services;

"(vi) X-ray, radium, and radioactive isotope therapy;

"(vii) services of a nurse midwife, described in section 1905(a)(17); and

"(viii) home health services in cases where the State determines that the coverage of such services is cost effective.

"(B) The State must include under the program some ambulatory and some institutional services.

"(C) No drugs or biologicals shall be included within the covered services described in subparagraph (A) unless provided as part of inpatient hospital services.

"(2) The State shall determine the amount, duration, and scope of the covered-services described in paragraph (1) which shall be included under the program, but in no event shall the amount, duration, or scope of such services under the program under this section exceed the amount, duration, or scope of such services included under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A).

"(3) Services may be provided through various arrangements made with providers by the State, but no such arrangement may provide services which are more generous than those provided under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A).

"(4) No cash payments may be made under the program to individuals participating in the program.

"(c)(1) The State may provide for a weekly contribution for any individual participating in the program under this section, without regard to whether such individual is receiving compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)), but no such contribution may exceed an amount equal to 8 percent of the amount of compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)) for which such individual is eligible for such week or for the last week for which he was eligible for such compensation. Such contributions may vary for individual coverage and family coverage and by provider arrangement.

"(2)(A) The State may require that deductibles and coinsurance amounts be imposed for users of services under the program. If the State chooses to require such deductibles and coinsurance amounts, they shall be at least the same amounts imposed under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10(A), subject to the limitations in this paragraph.

"(B) The estimated average monthly amount of such deductibles and coinsurance amounts for outpatient services may not exceed an amount equal to 5 percent of the average monthly benefit amount in such State for unemployment compensation referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A).

"(C) The amount of such deductibles and coinsurance amounts for inpatient services may not exceed the maximum amount of deductibles and coinsurance amounts which could be imposed by the State under its State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1905(a)(10(A) consistent with the provisions of title XIX, subject to the limitations in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of this paragraph.

"(D) No deductibles or coinsurance amounts may be imposed for prenatal, delivery, or post partum care.

"(E) No deductibles or coinsurance amounts may be imposed until after public hearings which provide adequate notice and opportunity for public participation have been held by the State with respect to such imposition.

"(F) Subject to the limitations specified in this paragraph, such deductibles and coinsurance amounts may vary with respect to different groupings of eligible individuals, and various coverage periods.

"(3) Any contribution amount imposed by the State must be used by the State to pay the State share of the cost of the program under this section, or to provide additional services or periods of coverage to individuals eligible for coverage under such program.

"(d)(1) Payment by the State for services provided to individuals eligible for the program under this section shall be made through the same administrative mechanisms through which payments are generally made under the State plan for medical assistance under title XIX; however, the State may provide for arrangements with carriers or providers which provide for cost effective financing and delivery systems, and may selectively make arrangements with a specific group or provide for capitation reimbursement, but no such arrangement may provide for services which are more generous than those provided under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A). Services provided through a prepaid capitation arrangement need not be provided through an organization meeting the requirements of section 1903(m).

"(2) Any limitations under the State plan for medical assistance on the amount that provider of services may charge the recipient of such services shall also apply to the program under this section, except that contributions, deductibles, and coinsurance may be charged in accordance with subsection (c).

"(e)(1) Determinations of qualification for coverage under the program under this section shall be made by the State agency administering the State's unemployment compensation law approved under section 3304 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The State may administer the services program under this section directly through the State agency administering the State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of this Act, or through arrangements with others.

"(2) Upon becoming eligible for compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)), an individual shall be informed of the eligibility criteria for coverage under the program established under this section and the benefits provided, and shall have four weeks in which to voluntarily enroll in such program. Such individual shall also be informed of the possibility that such individual may be eligible to enroll in a health plan of his spouse. If the individual declines the opportunity to enroll, or later voluntarily terminates his enrollment, he may not again enroll in such program unless he subsequently becomes eligible for compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)) for a new benefit year (as determined under the applicable unemployment compensation law).

"(3) In the case of any State which chooses to require the payment of a contributor, the State may deduct the amount of the contribution from the amount of such compensation paid to an individual enrolled in such program.

"(4) Any State which chooses to cover under its program individuals residing in such State who are or were receiving railroad unemployment compensation, may enter into an agreement with the Railroad Retirement Board under which—

"(A) the Railroad Retirement Board shall notify those unemployed railroad workers who may be eligible under the program of the availability of the program in accordance with paragraph (2);

"(B) the Board shall furnish the State agency making eligibility determinations with such information as the State agency may require in order to make eligibility determinations with respect to such unemployed railroad workers or shall, to the extent feasible, perform such determinations for the State agency;

"(C) the Board shall deduct contribution amounts from any railroad unemployment compensation payable to such unemployed railroad workers in the same amounts as if such workers were receiving unemployment compensation under the State unemployment compensation law, and transfer such amounts to the State; and

"(D) the State shall reimburse the Board for administrative costs incurred under such agreement, and such amounts shall be paid into the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund.

"(5) The Railroad Retirement Board is authorized to carry out those functions required of it under any agreement entered into under paragraph (4).

"(f)(1) Notwithstanding sections 2002 and 2003, payments to States having programs established under this section shall be made in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, but subject to subsection (g). Payments under this subsection are in addition to any amounts to which a State is entitled under section 2002, and payments made under section 2002 may not be used for purposes of this section. An amount, not to exceed the State's allotment determined under paragraph (2), equal to the Federal percentage (as determined under paragraph (6)) of the amount expended by such State for its program established under this section (excluding administrative costs) shall be paid to the State in the same manner as payments are made under section 1903(d).

"(2) The Secretary shall allot $750,000,000 to carry out this section for each of the fiscal years beginning on October 1, 1983, and October 1, 1984, among the States as follows:

"(A) One-half of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of insured unemployed individuals who reside in each State as compared to the total number of insured unemployed individuals in all the States.

"(B) One-half of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of individuals who have been unemployed for 26 weeks or more and who reside in each State as compared to the total number of such individuals in all the States.

"(3) Allotments shall be made on the basis of the most recent 12-month period, preceding the month in which the Secretary makes such allotments, for which adequate data is available.

"(4) Funds shall be allotted at the beginning of each fiscal year referred to in paragraph (2), but payment shall be made as described in paragraph (1). Amounts allotted for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1984, may be paid to States for expenses incurred in providing services under the program for individuals who are enrolled in the program on September 30, 1985, until their eligibility for such program terminates, or March 31, 1986, whichever is earlier.

"(5) Any funds allotted for a fiscal year to a State which did not establish a program under this section shall be reallotted to those States having a program, at the end of such fiscal year. Such funds may be expended in the same manner as described in paragraph (4).

"(6)(A) For purposes of this section, the Federal percentage is 100 percent with respect to services provided prior to April 1, 1984, and, with respect to services provided on or after April 1, 1984, is—

"(i) 95 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which State's rate of insured unemployment (as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970) for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 5 percent;

"(ii) 80 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 4 percent but is less than 5 percent;

"(iii) 65 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 3 percent but is less than 4 percent; and

"(iv) 50 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's insured unemployment rate for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is less than 3 percent.

"(B) The Federal percentage otherwise applicable under subparagraph (A) for any week beginning on or after April 1, 1984, shall be increased by 15 percentage points (but not to a percentage greater than 95 percent) with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 120 percent of the average of such rates for such State for the corresponding 52-week period ending in each of the preceding 2 calendar years.

"(C) Any State which qualifies for a particular matching percentage under clause (i), (ii), (iii), or (iv) of subparagraph (A), or under subparagraph (B), shall continue at such percentage for a period of not less than 6 months, unless it subsequently qualifies for a higher percentage under such provisions, beginning with the first week in which such State so qualifies, and may subsequently requalify for a particular higher matching percentage upon reaching the required rate of insured unemployment after the end of such 6-month period. No such period may extend beyond March 31, 1986. Notwithstanding the first sentence of this subparagraph, the matching percentage for each State with respect to services provided after September 30, 1985, and before April 1, 1986, shall be the matching percentage in effect for such States with respect to services provided on September 30, 1985.

"(7) The Secretary shall make payments for administrative costs incurred in carrying out the program established under this section, in a total amount not to exceed $150,000,000 for each of the fiscal years beginning on October 1, 1983, and October 1, 1984, $70,000,000 of such reimbursement for each fiscal year shall be made to the State agencies administering the services program under this section in accordance with the allotment formula in paragraph (2), and $80,000,000 of such reimbursement for each fiscal year shall be made to the Department of Labor for payment to the State agencies (of those States having a program under this section) administering the State's unemployment compensation law in accordance with the distribution formula used for purposes of title III of this Act. Payments under this paragraph may be made with respect to program costs incurred after March 31, 1986.

"(g)(1) Only a State having a rate of insured unemployment (as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970) for a period consisting of any week and the 51 preceding weeks, of 2 percent or more, may enroll new individuals in the program under this section during such week. If a State qualifies to enroll new individuals under the preceding sentence, such qualification shall continue for a period of not less than 6 months beginning with the first week in which such State so qualifies, and any State may subsequently requalify upon reaching the required rate of insured unemployment after the end of such 6-month period, but no such period may extend beyond March 31, 1986.

"(2) During a period in which a State may not enroll new individuals in its program by reason of paragraph (1), payment under this section may be made with respect to individuals previously enrolled in such program until their eligibility expires, or, if sooner, March 31, 1986.

"(h) Any State establishing a program under this section shall submit a report to the Secretary on August 1, 1984, on the program's implementation and impact. A final report shall be submitted in May 1986 by any State which carries out its program for any period after March 31, 1984, upon expiration of its program. The form and content of the reports required under this subsection shall be determined by the Secretary.

"(i) The State shall provide that the payment for any services received by an individual under the program shall be secondary to, and shall be reduced by the amount of, any other payment which is or could be made with respect to such services under any other health plan or public program, or from a third party, including any workmen's compensation law or plan, any automobile or liability insurance policy or plan (including a self-insured plan), and any no fault insurance. The State shall require each individual enrolled in the program to assign all rights to such payments as he may have to the State as a condition of enrolling in the program.

"(j)(1) No payment may be made under this section to any State unless such State provides, subject to paragraph (2), that any group health plan for employees of such State, provided by such State or to which such State makes a contribution, provides for open enrollment in accordance with section 4912(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the requirements of paragraph (1) shall apply to enrollment periods for employees whose spouses are involuntarily laid off or separated more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this section.

"(B) In the case of a group health plan which was subject to a collective bargaining agreement in effect on the date of the enactment of this section, the date on which such agreement expires (determined without regard to any extensions agreed to after such date of enactment) shall, if later, be substituted for the date (60 days after such date of enactment) referred to in paragraph (1).".

(b) Section 3304(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19), by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17), and by inserting after paragraph (17) the following:

"(18) if the State establishes a program under section 2008 of the Social Security Act, the State agency administering the State unemployment compensation law shall carry out the functions required of it under such section; and".

(c) Section 3304(a)(4)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and section 303(a)(5) of the Social Security Act are each amended by inserting "or health care" after "health insurance", and by inserting "or a contribution amount under section 2008 of the Social Security Act" after "program approved by the Secretary of Labor".

OPEN ENROLLMENT REQUIRED FOR EMPLOYERS HAVING UNEMPLOYED SPOUSE

SEC. . (a) Chapter 41 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER B—HEALTH PLANS OF LARGE EMPLOYERS WHICH DO NOT MEET OPEN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS FOR SPOUSES OF THE UNEMPLOYED

"Sec. 4912. Tax on health plans of large employers which do not meet open enrollment requirements for spouses of the unemployed.

"SEC. 4912. TAX ON HEALTH PLANS OF LARGE EMPLOYERS WHICH DO NOT MEET OPEN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS FOR SPOUSES OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

"(a) TAX IMPOSED.—In the case of a large employer, there is hereby imposed for each taxable year a tax equal to—

"(1) $500, multiplied by

"(2) the aggregate number of failures to meet the requirements of subsection (b) during such taxable year under any group health plans offered by such employer.

"(b) OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A group health plan meets the requirements of this subsection only if it provides a qualified open enrollment period for each married employee—

"(A) who is (or at a previous time was) eligible to enroll or is enrolled under the plan, and

"(B) whose spouse loses eligibility for coverage under a group health plan due to the involuntary layoff or involuntary separation (other than for cause or mandatory retirement) from the spouse's employment.

"(2) TERMS AND CONDITIONS SAME AS FOR ENROLLMENTS FOR NEW EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The terms and conditions of an enrollment during a qualified open enrollment period shall be the same as the terms and conditions which would be offered by the group health plan to the married employee described in paragraph (1) if such employee began employment for the employer on the first day of such period.

"(B) EMPLOYEES ALREADY COVERED MAY NOT INCREASE LEVEL OF BENEFITS.—In the case of an employee who is covered under group health plan before the qualified enrollment period, subparagraph (A) shall not require a group health plan to allow such individual to elect a higher level of benefits than that provided by such coverage.

"(C) COMMENCEMENT OF COVERAGE.—Any enrollment during a qualified open enrollment period need not take effect before the date on which the loss of coverage described in paragraph (1)(B) takes effect.

"(c) DEFINITIONS; NONTAXABLE ENTITIES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified open enrollment period' means the 30-day period beginning on the day on which an appropriate State agency notifies the spouse of a married employee described in subsection (b)(1) that such spouse has become eligible for receipt of unemployment compensation under any Federal or State law by reason of the separation or layoff described in subsection (b)(1)(B).

"(2) LARGE EMPLOYER.—The term 'large employer' means an employer who, on each of some 20 days during the calendar year or the preceding calendar year, each day being in a different calendar week, employed for some portion of the day 10 or more individuals.

"(3) EMPLOYER.—The term 'employer' does not include the Government of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia or any territory or possession of the United States, a State or any political subdivision therof, or any agency or instrumentality (including the United States Postal Service and Postal Rate Commission) of any of the foregoing, except that such term includes nonappropriated fund instrumentalities of the Government of the United States.

"(4) Group health plan.—The term 'group health plan' has the meaning given such term by section 162(i)(2).

"(5) Nontaxable entities.—In the case of a large employer who is not subject to tax under this title, the calendar year shall be treated as such employer's taxable year.

"(d) Cross References.—

"(1) For provision denying deduction for tax imposed by this section, see section 275(a)(6).

"(2) For provisions making deficiency procedures applicable to tax imposed by this section, see section 6211 et seq.".

(b)(1) Chapter 41 of such Code is amended by striking out the chapter heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"CHAPTER 41—PUBLIC CHARITIES; CERTAIN HEALTH PLANS OF LARGE EMPLOYERS

"Subchapter A. Public charities.
"Subchapter B. Health plans of large employers which do not meet open enrollment requirements for spouses of the unemployed.

"Subchapter A—Public Charities".

(2) The table of chapters for subtitle D of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to chapter 41 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Chapter 41. Public charities; certain health plans of large employers.".

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 6104(c)(1) of such Code is amended by striking out "or chapter 41 or 42" and inserting in lieu thereof ", subchapter A of chapter 41, or chapter 42".

(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to enrollment periods for employees whose spouses are involuntarily laid off or separated more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, in taxable years ending after such date.

(2) In the case of a group health plan which was subject to a collective-bargaining agreement in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, the date on which such agreement expires (determined without regard to any extensions agreed to after the date of enactment of this joint resolution) shall, if later, be substituted for the date provided by paragraph (1).

STUDY OF PRIVATE SECTOR HEALTH CARE COVERAGE FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

SEC. . The Secretary of Health and Human Services is directed to conduct a study of changes which might be made in employer-provided health care coverage which would provide adequate continuing health care coverage and conversion privileges for employers who are involuntarily terminated from employment. Such study shall include estimates of the costs which would be incurred by employers in providing continuing health care coverage of various durations, and at various contribution levels by the former employee (including a zero contribution level). The Secretary shall report the results of the study to Congress not later than January 1, 1985, and shall include any recommendations for legislation which would provide for such continuing coverage.

TITLE —INCOME AVERAGING

SEC. . Percentage by Which Income Must Exceed Base Income Increased from 120 to 140

(a) INCREASE MUST EXCEED 140 PERCENT OF AVERAGE BASE PERIOD INCOME.—Sections 1301 and 1302(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to income averaging) are each amended by striking out "120 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "140 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1983.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment would provide for health insurance coverage for the unemployed and is being offered at this time to generate a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee. I intend to withdraw the amendment after my presentation and that colloquy.

Mr. President, by way of a brief explanation, health insurance for the unemployed is a measure which has attracted considerable attention from the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee (Mr. DOLE); from my colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ); from the chairman of the Health Subcommittee of Finance (Mr. DURENBERGER); by the chairman of Labor and Human Resources (Mr. HATCH); by the chairman of the Employment and Productivity Subcommittee of the Labor and Human Resources Committee (Mr. QUAYLE), as well as many other Senators and Members of the House of Representatives.

This matter first came to my personal attention during an open house which Senator HEINZ and I attended in Midland, Pa., on March 5 of this year. The residents of that community, which had been decimated when the sole employer of the community, Crucible Steel closed, made the point that health insurance for the unemployed was the most pressing item on the agenda. Following that, Senator HEINZ and I introduced legislation which has gone through an elaborate period of consideration. It was considered by the President when Senator HEINZ, Governor Thornburgh of Pennsylvania, and I had occasion to bring it to his attention and it received his personal interest and later the blessing of the administration, as evidenced by the Director of OMB, David Stockman.

There have been extensive deliberations on this matter, where leadership has been provided by Senators DOLE, HEINZ, DURENBERGER, HATCH, and QUAYLE.

We have worked out, I think, the mechanism for paying for this program, which will be a 2-year block grant to the States, at a cost of some $1.8 billion. I believe there has been an agreement that the measure would be paid for by modifying income averaging, which would provide for full payment for this bill.

I have discussed the matter, as has Senator HEINZ, with Senator DOLE prior to submission, with the goal being to find a date certain when this body can take up this bill. I am aware that it is considered a fast track to have a major piece of legislation like this acted on within 1 year, but for those people who are unemployed and not covered by health insurance, this risk weighs very heavily on them. Those who have needed immediate care and not had it are, of course, very much in need of action by the Congress and the signature of the President. That is the reason for its submission at this time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor to my colleague and distinguished senior Senator (Mr. HEINZ).

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding. I want to commend my colleague for offering this amendment and in view of the discussion, indeed the announcement, that Senator DOLE made to the Finance Committee on Friday, I am optimistic that we can make progress on not only having legislation that will meet the needs for health care of people who are unemployed, but will do so in a responsible way by paying for it, as my colleague (Mr. SPECTER) has outlined.

I also simply want to say that the Senator from Kansas, the distinguished chairman of our committee (Mr. DOLE) has been extraordinarily helpful at every twist and turn of what seems to many as perhaps an unduly long road. If my constitutents were represented by the Senator from Kansas, they would be fortunate, indeed, because at every opportunity, he has tried to work out differences in approach to avoid problems that might be caused by the House to find an acceptable means of paying for it and even he, in all his efforts, which have been considerable, has not been able to achieve total unanimity. We do know the administration still wants to have its tax cap instead of income averaging. The tax cap simply is not going to happen this year, as far as this Senator can tell. Senator DOLE is not only a man of commitment to his principle; he has been very realistic in what can and cannot be achieved. I would be remiss, Mr. President, if I did not thank him and commend him most sincerely for it.

Let me say, in just 60 seconds, again I think I speak for Senator SPECTER as well as myself, that it is true that economic recovery is continuing. It is also true that in some States, like Pennsylvania, it is pretty hard to find it. We have too many towns with 10-, 15-, 20-percent unemployment—Johnstown, Lock Haven—many communities in the Mahoning Valley, many in Beaver County.

We have terrible problems in our State, and we hope that we can quite promptly lock into an appropriate time to address the issue in full. Obviously, the FSB program needs to be extended today. I think that Senator SPECTER and I shall understand that. We look forward to discussing this and having a colloquy here with Senator DOLE.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there are three good reasons we should not act on this matter at this time. First, because a process is underway which will result in the presentation of a better program of health benefits for the unemployed; second, because the program should be financed; and third, because we need to move ahead with the FSC extension.

Currently, there are two bills on the Senate calendar which would provide health care benefits for the unemployed. Both S. 951 and S. 242 address the urgent needs of the unemployed and their families for health benefit protection during a period of economic difficulty. Although the bills address the problem somewhat differently, we have been working to resolve those differences.

That process is almost complete. As a result, we will have put together features from both bills so that the program we will then propose is better defined and provides a better basis for administration and service delivery.

The health benefits for the unemployed we seek to provide must be financed. Both the Finance Committee and the Labor and Human Resources Committee have recognized that funds need to be made available to meet this commitment. A spending program such as this should not be created simply by raising the deficit. The committees agree and the administration agrees on this point. The Finance Committee meets next week to take up possible revenue-raising provisions which can be used to pay for this program.

I am led to believe that this amendment is needed because without it there will be no health benefits program for the unemployed. That is just not so. The Senate will have plenty of opportunity to move on this matter. What is important here is the extension of the FSC program. This amendment can slow down and complicate the extension of this needed program. Unless the FSC program is acted on by September 30, there will be a loss of cash benefits for many unemployed workers in this Nation.

There are a number of measures which will be coming out of the Finance Committee—several of which can be used as the vehicle to move on health benefits for the unemployed. I am committed to seeing that we so move on this important program and give you my assurance that the matter will come to the floor for our consideration.

I am not certain I can give a date certain, because I have checked with the majority leader and it is very difficult to do. We have been negotiating, as Senator HEINZ pointed out, Senator SPECTER and others who have an interest in this, with the Labor Committee and the Finance Committee. As I understand it, nearly every issue has been resolved. There is one question of jurisdiction, which is rather important. But I think that may be resolved.

I think the one area we agree on is if we are going to pass this bill, we ought to find a way to pay for it, not just do as the House did, pass out a program without a means of financing it.

We did provide some means in our committee to pay for it, but that was not satisfactory to the administration. Now we are looking for some other way to pay for it, from revenue, that is satisfactory to the administration.

There has been one administration request, I think a proper one, that we not pass a bill out here that just creates a program without proper financing. I think on a bipartisan basis we can agree to do that, or this program is never going to come into fruition.

I know that Senator HEINZ of Pennsylvania has a matter he wants to bring up the first week we are back, the Export Administration Act. There is going to be a farm bill pending, I assume, about that time. But it seems to me that in the second week—I cannot say for certain—but the second week after we return, which would be the week of the 24th, we ought to be able to bring this matter to the floor.

Mr. HEINZ. If the Senator will yield for a question, we anticipate that we shall act on this matter before we act on the debt ceiling.

Mr. DOLE. Knowing what would happen if we did not, I would say yes, because someone is going to offer it on the debt ceiling. I would like to act on it on its own. I think it has merit and ought to be done. I think we can do it before that.

Mr. HEINZ. I thank the Senator. I think he understands the situation better than anybody else except maybe the Senators from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Would the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. DOLE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. SPECTER. Assuming it is acted on in the week of the 24th, what kind of chronology does the Senator from Kansas anticipate with respect to the other body? My concern is that we move through to final passage and submission to the President before we adjourn, which is now, apparently, set for mid-November, before Thanksgiving. That has been the announcement of the majority leader, that he and the Speaker have come to that understanding.

I know the concern Senator HEINZ shares with me is that we act on it early enough to go to conference, iron it out, and submit it to the President so we do not have this matter as pending business when we come back on January 23, which the majority leader has announced is our date of return.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would like to say yes, that we are going to make certain the President signs it. I think I can assure both Senators from Pennsylvania that we are going to bring it up on the Senate floor, we are going to dispose of it on the Senate floor, I hope favorably. But there are some Members who are opposed to anything at this time.

As I have indicated, the majority leader is just not able to say we are going to bring it up on the 17th, the 18th, or the 22d, but generally it seems to me that we can do it in the second week.

I hope that will satisfy the Senator.

Mr. SPECTER. What kind of timetable does the Senator anticipate?

Mr. DOLE. I should not think it would take too long. We would have to work out our differences with the committee, any amendments that might be offered, and we should be able to dispose of it in a couple of days.

Mr. SPECTER. I realize the chairman of the Finance Committee cannot make any assurances as to what the President is going to do by way of signature, but is it his expectation that we would be able to conclude the matter before we adjourn in mid-November?

Mr. DOLE. That is my expectation, yes.

Mr. SPECTER. With that assurance, I thank the Senator from Kansas. I thank him for his leadership on this important matter.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank both Senators from Pennsylvania.

As far as I know, the only other amendment is an amendment that may be offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further debate? That amendment has not been withdrawn.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I announced my intention to withdraw the amendment, and I do withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Indiana could resolve a serious problem he has in his State in the conference rather than through the amendment route. We need to go to conference yet this afternoon and report back to the Senate either today or tomorrow. I would like to do it today. I know other Senators would like to leave.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, it is imperative that we act today to extend the Federal supplemental compensation (FSC) program, which is scheduled to expire tomorrow night. This emergency supplemental program has provided needed benefits for hundreds of thousands of unemployed who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own. Congress enacted this program on a temporary basis a little over a year ago to address the problem of disastrously high levels of unemployment. The disastrous 9.8-percent rate that existed then does not differ much from the 9.5-percent rate reported last month. Clearly, the need for this program exists today as it did 1 year ago.

The continuing need for a supplemental program in my State of Michigan is also evident. The 14.5-percent unemployment rate that plagued Michigan when Congress enacted the FSC program is virtually the same as the 14.3-percent rate that Michigan reported last month. Nearly 30,000 Michigan unemployed currently receive FSC benefits and they will find these benefits cut off abruptly if the program is not extended. Another 95,000 currently receive regular benefits and many of them will be left without benefits this winter should they remain unemployed and without a FSC program. While the slight upsurge in the number of employed in Michigan in the past few months is heartening, we must recognize that a large group of unemployed will be unable to secure employment in the next few months. Since Michigan and virtually all other States cannot qualify for the extended benefits program because of the unfair and irrational eligibility requirements, a FSC program is absolutely essential.

I believe that most of my colleagues in this body support the extension of this important program. The substance of the program that we extend, however, is the real issue to be addressed today. We in Congress cannot pat overselves on the back for supporting a FSC extension if the program we extend lacks certain necessary elements. The long-term unemployed, who have already suffered through endless weeks of fruitless job searches, depend on us to construct a fair and complete program to aid them through this difficult period.

I believe that the FSC program that we extend must contain certain provisions to address the problems of the long-term unemployed. While the bill reported out by the Finance Committee contains some of these provisions, I am cosponsoring certain amendments today to rectify some of the bill's deficiencies. Let me outline what I believe this FSC program must include.

SUFFICIENT WEEKS OF BENEFITS

Mr. President, providing a sufficient amount of protection to aid unemployed individuals' survival during their temporary period of unemployment constitutes the basic reason for having an unemployment insurance system. During long recessionary periods, such as the one we have suffered through during the past 3 years, a supplemental program is necessary because employment is that much more difficult to secure. When we extended the FSC program last winter, we felt that 16 weeks of FSC benefits were needed to provide sufficient protection for the unemployed in high unemployment States such as Michigan. When the program was extended last spring, 14 weeks constituted the maximum entitlement for the unemployed in high unemployment States. The bill reported by the Finance Committee before us advocates a maximum of 12 weeks of basic FSC benefits. While Michigan qualifies for the maximum in contrast to the original administration proposal under which Michigan was delegated to the minimum tier despite having the second highest unemployment rate in the Nation, the 12-week maximum is not acceptable.

As I have stated earlier, Michigan's unemployment rate remains nearly as high as when the FSC program was enacted. Furthermore, because of the misplaced reliance on the insured unemployment rate to determine the number of benefit weeks, Michigan unemployed have lost a significant amount of needed protection during the past few months. An unemployed worker in Michigan today can qualify for a maximum of 10 weeks of benefits beyond the regular program compared to a maximum of 29 weeks as recently as last March. At the very least, the long-term unemployed today deserve the maximum of 14 FSC weeks that was provided in last spring's extension. Consequently, I am supporting efforts on the floor today to increase the number of weeks provided.

REACH-BACK PROVISION

Mr. President, as Michigan has suffered through 44 consecutive months of double-digit unemployment, thousands of unemployed have exhausted their unemployment benefits without being able to find a job. In fact, estimates indicate that nearly 100,000 unemployed in Michigan have exhausted their FSC benefits. These unemployed need our support as much today as they did a few months ago. While I agree that we must increase our efforts to retrain many of these workers and to increase the number of local job opportunities, these efforts will take time. We cannot simply withdraw our support and delegate many of these proud workers to the welfare rolls when they cannot find jobs in their communities today. Yet, that is exactly what the administration advocates by opposing a reach-back provision that provides additional weeks of benefits to FSC exhaustees.

The bill before us today does not include a reach-back provision. With nearly 100,000 FSC exhaustees in my State alone depending on further assistance, I find this omission unconscionable. I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in supporting those amendments that provide for a reach-back provision. We cannot turn our backs when jobs remain difficult to find.

TOTAL UNEMPLOYMENT RATE (TUR) OPTION

The number of FSC weeks for which a State qualifies depends on its insured unemployment rate (IUR). As I have noted in my bill (S. 1663) to extend the FSC program and in several statements, reliance on the IUR to determine eligibility is unfair. The IUR, which excludes FSC recipients and exhaustees, gives an inaccurate picture of many States' unemployment problems. This is certainly true in Michigan where the gap between the most recent IUR—3.54 percent—and the seasonally adjusted TUR—14.3 percent—is nearly 11 percent. I have advocated the use of the TUR as a State option in addition to the IUR. While the use of the TUR also poses some problems, I would support its use as an option until a better indicator than it or the IUR can be found.

The Finance Committee has agreed with us that the use of the IUR is often unwarranted. In fact, the report that accompanies the bill before us states that:

When a State experiences a prolonged period of extremely high unemployment, the validity of the current insured unemployment rate as an indicator of its relative unemployment situation compared with other States is weakened • • •

In order to correct this problem, the committee bill includes a special provision that grants a State the maximum FSC benefits if the State's average IUR over the period since January 1982 exceeds 6 percent. This alternative insured unemployment measure takes account of the many unemployed who have exhausted their regular benefits and who, therefore, are not included in the IUR. Since this answers many of the problems associated with the use of the IUR, I can support that provision.

Since the committee admits that the use of the IUR is often flawed, logic dictates that its use to determine eligibility for the extended benefits (EB) program is similarly flawed. Reliance on the IUR caused nearly 57,000 unemployed Michigan workers to trigger off the EB program this June even though Michigan had the second highest rate of unemployment in the Nation. No good reason exists to require that all States rely on this flawed measure to be eligible for the EB program. Consequently, I believe that the special provisions included in the committee bill should apply at each State's option to determine eligibility for the EB program.

LENGTH OF EXTENSION

Mr. President, it is time that we address the problems associated with the Federal unemployment insurance programs. We should consider the Byrd-Heinz proposal to combine the EB and FSC programs into a permanent program. We need to find a better measure than the IUR to determine eligibility for these benefits. These are problems that this Congress should address. Frankly, I am fearful that an 18-month extension of the FSC program will remove the incentive for this Congress to act.

Consequently, I support a 9-month extension of a more complete FSC program than the Finance Committee has proposed. In this way, this Congress will have to address the problems facing the EB and FSC programs without letting the FSC program expire. Moreover, we will not lock the long-term unemployed into a deficient program for 18 months.

Mr. President, we must extend the FSC program to aid the millions of Americans who remain unemployed today. We must also extend a FSC program that will truly address the problems of the long-term unemployed. Consequently, I urge my colleagues to support those amendments to the committee bill that address the problems that I have noted.

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for S. 1887, the Federal supplemental compensation amendments of 1983. This bill will extend the FSC program for an additional 18 months through March 31, 1985. Without this extension FSC will expire at midnight tomorrow.

Mr. President, the FSC program was enacted in 1982 as we recognized the severity of the unemployment problem and the inadequacies of the existing unemployment compensation program.

Since then, we have extended FSC twice, once in December 1982 and then again in March 1983. Now, once again we face the termination of the program.

I firmly believe that we should extend FSC—given that the extended benefit program has been so ineffectual. Thus, I am very pleased to see that the administration and the Finance Committee moved so quickly to push this extension along.

We need to take a good look at the overall unemployment compensation program—however, until this occurs we need something to fill the gap.

This is why the continuation of FSC is so important. FSC has assisted over 41,000 Minnesotans in the past year alone, and without this extension, thousands of Minnesotans will face falling off the unemployment compensation rolls.

The economy is clearly in the midst of a recovery. Unemployment is dropping. In fact, the unemployment rate in Minnesota has fallen over 3 full percentage points in the last 9 months. Also, optimism about next year and employment opportunities is increasing.

But because unemployment is a lag indicator, there still are many people—like those on Minnesota's iron range—who are not able to find work. And unfortunately for those on the range, until the steel industry picks up, this problem will persist. It is people in this position who need FSC.

I urge my colleagues to speedily pass this important legislation.●

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as far as the manager of the bill knows, there are no further amendments, and I suggest we go to third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was orderd to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to H.R. 3929, Calendar Order No. 440.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3929) to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed immediately to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that all after the enacting clause be stricken and the language of S. 1887, as amended, be substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Kansas (Mrs. KASSEBAUM), and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. NICKLES) are necessarily absent.

Mr. BYRD. I announced that the Senator from Califorina (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. EXON), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. LAUTENBERG), and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. ZORINSKY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. LAUTENBERG) would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 278 Leg.]

So the bill (H.R. 3929), as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and appoint conferees.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. DOLE, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. ROTH, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. LONG, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. BOREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that S. 1887 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have sought recognition and received it for the purpose of asking the distinguished majority leader what the program is for the rest of today and for next week, insofar as he can at this point tell us.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader.

First of all, Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the chairman of the Finance Committee and the ranking minority member for managing a difficult bill in good time and bringing it to a unanimous conclusion.

Mr. BYRD. In good will and good humor.

Mr. BAKER. In good will and good humor.

I hope they can complete the conference report in the same spirit and do so promptly because I would like to get this thing back and out of the way in the next couple of hours, if we can.

PROGRAM

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I just talked to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. The conference on the continuing resolution is completed. The House must act first. Our best estimate is that we will have the conference report here about 4 o'clock.

I hope that we can do the conference report on this bill about the same time, in which event, except for a few other things that may be available, I would ask the Senate to go out then until Monday.

There will be no session tomorrow unless—and I do not mean this as a threat, but just to stay honest—unless there is a hitch in this conference or in the passage of the CR conference report in one or the other of the houses. But I think that is a tiny possibility. So I think Senators are safe in assuming that we will not be in on Saturday.

On Monday, October 3, Mr. President, I previously announced that it will be the intention of the leadership on this side to try to go to the Martin Luther King holiday bill. That was postponed, as Members will recall, through a variety of requests by the sponsors of the resolution and the concurrence of all Senators who had noted their particular and special interests on our calendar and I believe on the other side.

Mr. BYRD. And people on the outside.

Mr. BAKER. And people on the outside. Indeed, I announced at the time that a number of civil rights groups that were vitally interested in this, including the Black Leadership Roundtable, had urged that the matter be postponed until the 3d of October because of the absence of several Senators, I think on both sides of the aisle, who wanted to be here at the time the measure was brought up.

Mr. President, next week is going to be a busy week. With the Martin Luther King holiday bill, we also have the Labor-HHS appropriations bill to be done. We have perhaps an agriculture bill to deal with target prices, dairy and tobacco. I hope that can be worked out so it will take a minimum of time. We also have the State-Justice-Commerce appropriations bill.

We have three authorization bills that are here. We have the intelligence authorization bill, the FTC authorization bill, and the defense production authorization bill. It looks like we are going to have about 2 hours this afternoon and maybe we can do one or two of those authorization bills today. But we ought to try to do those next week if we can. And, of course, we have the State authorization bill, which is the unfinished business.

Mr. President, that, I expect, will be up next week, also. It may not be, depending on other circumstances, because there may be emergencies to be dealt with or there may be a rule XXII situation to be dealt with. But it must be added to the list of those things that may be up during the coming week.

Mr. President, in addition to that, we have the Export Administration bill which expires at midnight tonight. It is my hope that something can be worked out to get that bill up and passed today. That is not yet fully worked out, but I will have a further report for the minority leader and other Senators a little later in the day.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how many rollcalls, if any—I am asking the majority leader now the $64 question—how many rollcalls would he expect might occur or are likely to occur today?

Mr. BAKER. I hope there will be no more rollcalls today. I would say there is about a 50-50 chance of that. Of course, there is a possibility of a rollcall on the CR conference report or on the conference report on the bill we have just finished.

Mr. BYRD. How about Export Administration?

Mr. BAKER. Export Administration, perhaps; although I hope we can avoid that. I really do not know how to do it much better than that. I cannot guarantee us against a rollcall this afternoon. I would say the chances are about 50-50.

Mr. BYRD. About 50-50; or does that mean 60-40 in favor of a rollcall?

Mr. BAKER. Probably. Let me put it this way: if I were listening to that advice, I would stay.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the majority leader yield for a question.

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Do I understand we will complete the CR and the unemployment bill today?

Mr. BAKER. Both of them expire tonight and we have to do that.

Mr. SARBANES. And it is on those two measures that there is a 50-50 chance of a vote?

Mr. BAKER. Yes; and the export bill. I do not expect to do that, but it is possible.

Mr. President, I might also announce I plan to ask the Senate to come in at noon on Monday. I expect to adjourn today. I have not presented a unanimous-consent request in that connection, but I expect to do so. I expect we will adjourn at the close of business today.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the majority leader indicate on Monday, when we come in at noon, what will be the possible hour for the first rollcall?

Mr. BAKER. It is hard to say. My information is not firm, but I understand there may not be opposition to a motion to proceed to the Martin Luther King holiday bill on Monday. I expect the first vote may occur on a motion to commit that bill to the Judiciary Committee. That could come as early as 2 or 3 o'clock. But if we come in at noon and go through the usual formalities plus an hour for morning business, I would say the chances are that it would be 2 p.m. before the first vote.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BAKER. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we would now like to move to consider the extension of the Coffee Agreement. We have a House bill which is a 2-year extension and the Senate bill which is a 6-year extension. We have agreed informally to take a 3-year extension that the House will accept. There will be one amendment offered to the Coffee Agreement, and that will be the extension of the trade adjustment assistance, $95 million the first year and $98 million the second year.

We are also advised by the House that if that amendment is agreed to in the Senate, they will accept that amendment. I might say that we met on this yesterday. Senator DANFORTH offered the amendment and discussed the amendment. If there is no objection, I would like to move that now.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum while we check our cloakrooms?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ECONOMIC POLICY

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate Finance Committee agreed to a sense-of-the-Senate resolution which was a major statement on economic policy. The sense-of-the-Senate resolution was offered by Senator WALLOP, Senator BOREN, and myself. We had originally intended to press for a vote on the so-called CPI minus 3 proposition. CPI minus 3 is a concept of reducing the Federal deficit by approximately $120 billion in the years 1985 through 1988 by adjusting indexing formulas for both tax and spending purposes downward by 3 percent.

We made the decision not to press that to a vote because we have no illusions that it would be adopted at an early date. We do plan to keep pressing that issue.

But the sense-of-the-Senate resolution reads as follows:

It is the sense of the Senate that:

(1) The Federal budget deficits now expected to occur in the 1980s pose a serious threat to America's economic future;

(2) The deficits cannot be expected to be brought under reasonable control solely by a strong economic recovery, a reduction in defense spending, and reduced spending for discretionary domestic spending programs; and

(3) The goal of reducing Federal deficits to levels that do not threaten America's economic future will require some reduction in the growth of Federal non means-based entitlement programs and some increase in Federal revenues.

(4) The staffs of the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Senate Committee on Finance are hereby instructed to identify measures for increasing tax revenues and reducing the growth in non means-based entitlement programs. This analysis shall include such options as temporary modification of the "indexing" that both increases spending on entitlements and foregoes the growth in revenues that would otherwise occur in response to inflation; consumption taxes; improvements in tax compliance; elimination or modification of unjustified tax preferences; restricting tax shelters; measures to broaden the tax base; correcting inequities in the distribution of benefits under Federal entitlement programs, including Medicare; and improvements in the administration of such entitlement programs.

(5) For each measure so identified, the impact on low-income persons shall be considered. The staffs are instructed to report to the Committee on Finance on or before March 15, 1984.

Mr. President, there are several significant items in this resolution which was passed overwhelmingly by the Senate Finance Committee yesterday.

The first matter that should be highlighted is that the Finance Committee, on a bipartisan basis, stated: "The Federal budget deficits now expected to occur in the 1980's pose a serious threat to America's economic future."

Now there has been a debate on that question, Mr. President, a debate between the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Regan, and the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, Mr. Feldstein.

Secretary Regan claims the deficits really do not matter that much; that we can accommodate them. Mr. Feldstein does not agree with the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Senate Finance Committee yesterday by an overwhelming margin weighed in in favor of Mr. Feldstein and stated its adamant position that Secretary Regan is incorrect and that the position that he takes poses a major threat, a serious threat, to America's economic future; not just the short range of America's economy, but economic future for years to come.

Further, another point of notable interest in this resolution is the finding of the Finance Committee that deficits cannot be expected to be brought under reasonable control solely by a strong economic recovery. Now the point has been made that the economy is on the mend and that as the economy mends itself the deficit will be reduced.

Well, the point was made yesterday that no matter how strong the economic recovery, under even the most optimistic projections of what will happen in the economy, the deficit will still be in the neighborhood of $150 billion to $200 billion. Therefore, not only will the economic recovery not lower the deficits to a manageable level but in fact the high deficits will stunt the economic recovery.

Further, it was pointed out in the resolution that the deficits cannot be brought under reasonable control solely by a reduction in defense spending.

A lot of people feel that defense spending should be stretched out and that the President should not get everything he wants in defense spending. But even under the lowest projections of defense spending, even within the view of those who believe that defense spending should be held to the minimum level, still we are going to face deficits in the $150 billion to $200 billion level.

It was also said in the resolution that the deficits cannot be brought under reasonable control by reduced spending for discretionary domestic spending programs. This is what we have been trying for the last 2 years. We did do some good in trying to trim the budget in a whole series of specified areas. However, this business of creating laundry lists and trying to attack one spending program after another is not sufficient. Therefore, we must try a broader-based approach to reducing the size of the deficit.

And so the Finance Committee agreed yesterday that: "The goal of reducing Federal deficits to levels that do not threaten America's economic future will require some reduction in the growth of Federal nonmeans-based entitlement programs and some increase in Federal revenues."

Mr. President, nobody likes to hear those words. Everyone would like to believe that we do not have to either check the growth rate of nonmeans-based entitlements nor do we have to increase Federal revenues. The Finance Committee said yesterday that we have to do both. And I think that this resolution, therefore, points the way to a new realism in economic policy for our country.

I do not have any illusions that between now and the next election we will take responsible action. I believe that we should. I think that the American people are ahead of their politicians. I believe that the American people are willing to take the steps necessary to bring the deficit under reasonable control.

But we are so timid here in Washington that we seem unwilling to do that.

In the Finance Committee yesterday, we at least stated the fact that it is not going to be possible to have deficits at a reasonable level unless we check the growth rate of entitlement programs and unless we increase Federal revenue, a major statement of policy by the Senate Committee on Finance, a major statement of policy at odds with the position taken by the President, at odds with the position taken by the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is the opinion of the Senator from Missouri the sooner we get to work on the budget deficit, the healthier will be the economic future of our country.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 425, H.R. 3813.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3813) to amend the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, we have cleared this matter with Members on this side the best we know how. We have gone through our Cloakroom lines. It is a matter that can be taken care of expeditiously. There is no objection on this side.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we have also gone through the same clearance process on this side.

Mr. President, I will let the Senator from Missouri explain in detail the amendment he intends to offer.

The International Coffee Agreement expires at midnight tonight and the trade adjustment assistance has the same expiration date. We have been assured by our House colleagues that if, in fact, we extend the coffee agreement for 3 years and add an extension of trade adjustment assistance, as Senator DANFORTH will explain momentarily, as amended by an amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, Senator LONG, they might accept that package.

Mr. President, I hope that we can move quickly to resolve this matter, so that we can meet the midnight deadline.

Mr. President, the Committee on Finance yesterday approved and ordered favorably reported H.R. 3391, as amended, a bill to reauthorize for 2 years trade adjustment assistance programs for workers and firms. As the current authorization for these programs expires today, it is important for the Senate to act without delay to approve the committee's action.

I will offer this reauthorization, however, with Senator DANFORTH as a committee amendment to H.R. 3813, the House-passed enabling legislation for the 1983 International Coffee Agreement. The President's authority to carry out U.S. obligations under the current coffee agreement also expires today. The Finance Committee favorably reported S. 1847, enabling legislation for the agreement, on September 27. Thus, it is my intention to combine the two reauthorizations that have passed the House and our committee.

The committee vote to reauthorize the programs represents a compromise between the House-passed version of H.R. 3391, which would have greatly expanded the scope and cost of the worker program, and those of us who agreed with the administration that the programs should not be reauthorized at all. Members will recall that in the 1981 Budget Reconciliation Act, the Congress enacted a number of measures in an effort to reduce the spiraling costs of the programs and to render them more effective in accomplishing their intended purposes—adjustment of workers and firms. Between 1975 and 1980, the costs of the worker program alone rose from $25 million to well over $2 billion. The 1981 changes wrought significant discipline in the program; nevertheless, the worker and firm programs together continue to cost over $100 million per fiscal year. According to administration estimates, a simple reauthorization of both programs, as the committee has voted to do, will cost about $128 million in both of the next 2 fiscal years.

Mr. President, in my opinion there have been few Government programs ever that promised so much but delivered so little to so few. TAA programs have not adjusted either many workers or firms, while being enormously costly. Worse, they are patently unfair in their arbitrary distinctions among beneficiaries of Government assistance: who can justify providing one group of workers with extra Federal assistance because of their poor competitive position, while at the same time denying this largess to very similarly situated groups who unfortunately cannot demonstrate a tenuous connection of job loss to import competition? In the firm program too, the Government is forced by this program to offer a very few firms cash and technical assistance that is not available to the vast majority of businesses that share the same problems. I am attaching to this statement a list of worker program benefits that shows by State how few areas benefit from the program. I am also including a breakdown of the firm program that shows its own dismal history of operation for the benefit of a very few.

I must also note that there are numerous Government programs that render TAA programs redundant, and are much better administered. Title III of the Jobs Training Partnership Act provides worker training benefits to all workers, regardless of the connection of their job loss with import competition. The Small Business Administration and the Commerce Department offer numerous technical assistance programs and financial assistance programs that also are not discriminatory in their availability. In my opinion, they provide more than an adequate substitute for the empty symbolism of TAA programs.

Nevertheless, the committee as a whole believes that it is important to continue the TAA programs in their current form, and I am committed to accomplishing that goal. The programs are operating at levels significantly below their pre-1981 levels, and seem to be much better managed in this administration. I am hopeful that the House and the President will accept the committee's compromise. If so, we will continue to operate TAA as is the case now, while taking a long look at whether to fold them into other programs, or make other improvements in them.

Mr. President, the second part of this committee amendment would authorize the President to carry out and to enforce U.S. obligations under the 1983 international coffee agreement—ICA. That agreement comes into force on October 1, 1983, and will be the fifth in a series of such agreements dating back to 1963. The Senate unanimously gave its advice and consent to ratification of the new agreement last July 27. Current authority to carry out the 1976 ICA expires today; the President needs authority to carryout the obligations of the new agreement.

The ICA establishes a system of export quotas among the coffee producing nations to stabilize prices within an agreed range. If prices rise above the ceiling, quotas are suspended. The committee is satisfied that the ICA generally has worked in a satisfactory way, to the benefit of U.S. consumers and to the stability in world markets that is so important to the developing countries dependent on coffee exports for earnings of foreign exchange. The National Coffee Association and the consumer advisers to the U.S. negotiating team support the agreement and this enabling legislation. I am attaching a letter from Ambassador Brock expressing the administration's strong support.

Finally, I am supplementing this statement with the text of the committee report that would have accompanied H.R. 3391, the committee's bill to reauthorize TAA. Because we are asking the Senate to reauthorize these programs on a different vehicle, there will be no report. I therefore include this report in this form.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to approve reauthorization of both the trade adjustment assistance programs and the coffee agreement enabling legislation as proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the items to which I have referred in my statement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, D.C., September 21, 1983.
Hon. ROBERT J. DOLE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: I am writing in regard to S. 1847, legislation currently pending before the Senate Finance Committee which would continue U.S. participation in the International Coffee Agreement (ICA).

The Senate unanimously ratified the International Coffee Agreement on July 27, 1983. In order for the United States to comply with its obligations under the treaty, implementing legislation amending the 1980 Coffee Agreement Act must be passed by October 1, 1983. If not, our authority to implement the Agreement and comply with our treaty obligations will expire and U.S. Customs will no longer be able to monitor imports of coffee.

International Coffee Agreements have aimed at balancing the economic interests of producers and consumers, and each has been an improvement over the predecessor in this regard. Like the previous Agreements, the 1983 Agreement is intended to stabilize coffee prices for short-run periods along long-term market trends. The Agreement itself contains no fixed price objective; rather, each year the members of the Agreement will establish a price range based on current production and consumption trends, inventory levels, and other factors that influence the market.

Failure to pass the legislation by September 30 would have adverse consequences not only for the world market but the operation of the domestic coffee industry. Most U.S. roasters, brokers, and importers have concluded business deals on the assumption that the United States would continue to implement the Agreement. The failure of the United States to extend its participation in the Coffee Agreement would also have catastrophic economic effects on coffee-producing countries. Many developing countries depend on coffee exports for the greater share of foreign exchange revenue. The collapse of the Coffee Agreement which could occur as a result of U.S. nonparticipation in the Agreement could trigger economic collapse in these countries. Coffee export earnings are valued at $3 billion per year, and three-quarters of this amount goes to Caribbean, Central and South America countries.

Pending Congressional approval of the implementing legislation, U.S. participation in the new Agreement becomes effective for 6 years on October 1, 1983. The 1983 Agreement, negotiated by 71 countries, is similar to that of the 1976 Agreement. It contains the following major elements:

Its objective is to stabilize the price of coffee within a range that is acceptable to both consumers and producers.

The principal economic provision is a system of country export quotas which are decreased when prices are declining and increased when prices are rising in order to keep the price of coffee within an agreed range. In periods of high prices, quotas are suspended altogether in order to encourage maximum exports. The quota system is enforced by the importing members.

The ICA promotes the maintenance of adequate coffee stock levels by making each producing country's export quota partially dependent on its level of stocks. These stocks can be released in a period of high prices to put immediate downward pressure on the market.

The Coffee Agreement does not harm U.S. consumers. The ICA has had some effect in supporting world prices, but coffee prices over the past two years—since export quotas have been put into effect—have been well below price levels in the immediately preceding years. U.S. delegations have been vigilant in ensuring that the Agreement does not adversely affect U.S. consumers and/or consuming industries. Indeed the delegations have included representatives of consumer organizations. These representatives have stated their support for the ICA.

We consider it critical that legislation be approved in time to allow the United States to fulfill its obligation under the new International Coffee Agreement, and I urge your support for swift Committee approval.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.

REAUTHORIZATION OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

I. SUMMARY

The Committee bill would: (1) authorize the present trade adjustment assistance programs for workers and firms for fiscal years 1984 and 1985; (2) make permanent the standard of causation by which the Secretary of Labor determines whether particular groups of workers are eligible to apply for adjustment assistance; and (3) include a preference, among certified, equally qualified firms applying for adjustment assistance, for firms proposing utilization of an employee stock ownership plan in their adjustment proposals.

II. GENERAL EXPLANATION

In order to authorize current trade adjustment assistance programs beyond their currently scheduled expiration date of September 30, 1983, the Committee approved H.R. 3391 with amendments.

Present law

Trade adjustment assistance (TAA) programs for workers and firms were originally authorized in the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. The programs are now authorized in Title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2271 et seq.), as substantially amended by the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981 (Pub. L. No. 97-35, 95 Stat. 357). The latter act provided that the programs would expire after September 30, 1983.

A. Worker Program.—The Secretary of Labor operates the TAA program for workers. Groups of workers are eligible for cash and training benefits if the Secretary determines—

(1) That a significant number or proportion of workers in the worker's firm or appropriate subdivision of the firm have been, or are threatened to be, totally or partially laid off;

(2) Sales and/or production of the firm or subdivision have decreased absolutely; and

(3) Increased imports of articles like or directly competitive with articles produced by the firm or subdivision "contributed importantly" to both the layoffs and the decline in sales and/or production.

The term "contributed importantly" means "a cause which is important but not necessarily more important than any other cause." Pursuant to section 404 of the 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act and Public Law 97-362, the standard "substantial cause" will apply after September 30, 1983.

Individual workers within approved groups are then certified for assistance within these groups. They are eligible for:

1. Weekly cash payment entitlement (trade readjustment allowances (TRA)) equal to the worker's most recent unemployment insurance (UI) weekly benefit amount and payable only for weeks of unemployment after a worker has exhausted his regular UI, extended UI benefits (EB), as well as Federal Supplemental Compensation (FSC) entitlements. A worker cannot receive more than 52 weeks of UI and TRA benefits combined, except workers in approved training may receive up to 26 additional weeks to complete training if application for benefits is made within certain time limits. Basic TRA benefits can be paid only during the 52-week period following the week in which the worker has exhausted regular UI; additional benefits while in training are payable only during the 26-week period following the last week of entitlement to basic TRA.

2. Approved training under other Federal programs under certain conditions.

3. Job search and relocation allowances.

All TAA benefits are authorized to be funded from general revenues through annual appropriations.

B. Firm Program.—The Secretary of Commerce, through his Department's International Trade Administration, is responsible for operating the firm trade adjustment assistance program.

Under the 1974 Trade Act, the Secretary certifies a firm as eligible to apply for assistance if he determines—

(1) That a significant number or proportion of the workers in the firm have been, or are threatened to be totally or partially laid off;

(2) Sales and/or production of the firm have decreased absolutely; and

(3) Increased imports of articles like or directly competitive with articles produced by the firm "contributed importantly" to both the layoffs and the decline in sales and/or production.

A firm's assistance application cannot be approved unless the Secretary determines that the firm—

(1) Has no reasonable access to private financing; and

(2) The proposal reasonably will materially contribute to adjustment, it adequately considers workers' interests, and shows reasonable self-help efforts.

Once certified, a firm is eligible for financial and technical assistance. Financial assistance consists of direct loans and loan guarantees; technical assistance includes developing and implementing a viable economic adjustment proposal.

The committee bill

Like the House bill, the Committee bill would reauthorize the current programs for both workers and firms for two years. The Committee bill, however, does not adopt the amendments to existing programs included in the House bill that would significantly expand the current program.

Besides extending the programs' authorization for two years, the Committee bill includes two amendments to existing law.

The first would restore permanently the "contribute importantly" standard by which the Secretary of Labor determines whether imports are a cause of the layoffs or threatened layoffs entitling workers to benefits. Pursuant to a change in the 1974 Trade Act made in the 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act, the standard "substantial cause" would otherwise have been applicable to determinations beginning October 1, 1983. The Committee amendment would eliminate this impending change, and continue the standard of current law.

The second amendment adopted by the Committee relates to the firm program.

Section 3 of the bill provides a preference among certified, equally qualified loan applicants for applicants that include in their adjustment plans proposed to the Secretary a provision to utilize an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) as the financing vehicle for repayment of 25 percent of the principal amount of the loan. Nothing in this provision requires the Secretary to grant any preference in certification or to make loans that are not otherwise economically sound. This preference for ESOP financing reflects a continuation of the ESOP preference originally established in the community assistance portion of the Trade Act of 1974. Some experience suggests that distressed companies with employee stock ownership have a higher likelihood of survival than more traditionally-owned companies. In addition, ESOP-type financing raises the likelihood that assisted companies will be able to repay the trade adjustment assistance loan because principal payments on an ESOP loan are tax deductible (up to 25 percent of payroll each year). Thus, the Committee felt that an ESOP preference would reflect the Committee's concern that this program be structured in such a way as to raise the likelihood that assisted companies will succeed and that these loans will be repaid. The Committee also felt that equity suggests that where taxpayer funds are used to assist a private company, there should be a preference for companies willing to share the benefit of that assistance with their employees.

This provision requires that the employee stock ownership portion of a company's adjustment plan must meet certain requirements before the Secretary may grant the preference. Those requirements are as follows:

Paragraph (1) would provide that 25 percent of any loan made to a corporation to provide firm adjustment assistance be made to a qualified trust established under an employee stock ownership plan. Repayment of such loans would be guaranteed by the firm receiving such assistance.

Paragraph (2) would require that the proceeds of such loans be used by qualified trusts for the purchase of employer securities and that annual employer contributions to the trust be utilized to repay the outstanding balance on these loans. It also would require that, as the qualified trust repays the loan, employer securities, once they are paid for, be allocated to the individual accounts of plan participants.

Paragraph (3) would impose specific requirements which employee stock ownership trusts must meet. The agreement establishing the rights and obligations of the employer maintaining the qualified trust, the lender and the qualified trust must be unconditionally enforceable by all parties to the agreement. The qualified trust is not to be required to make loan repayments in excess of the amount of required contributions made by the employer and actually received by the trust. This section would also require that funds transferred by the qualified trust for the acquisition of employer securities would be used for the same qualified purposes as are such other sums which are made available in the form of direct loans to the firm qualifying for such assistance.

In addition, the equity capital of a corporation receiving payment for its securities from a qualified trust may not be reduced for the one-year period beginning on the date of such purchase to insure that such funds are used solely for expansion and other legitimate corporate purposes rather than for refinancing existing debt obligations. The Committee has made the employee stock ownership provision a part of its trade adjustment assistance program to provide additional funds for current productive capital assets or other operating needs of the corporation and intends that no part of these funds should be "leaked" from the company to redeem its securities.

Finally, a corporation would be required to make such contributions to the qualified trust as are necessary for the repayment of the loan made to the trust for the acquisition of employer securities, whether or not the corporation may deduct such contributions for Federal income tax purposes and regardless of any other amounts that the corporation is obliged to contribute under any employee stock ownership plan in effect.

Paragraph (4) would require that there shall be allocated to the accounts of participating employees for each plan year their share of employer securities which are paid for and released for allocation. This allocation is based on the annual rate of compensation for that participant compared to total compensation paid all participants during that year. The intent of this provision is to insure that benefits under the employee stock ownershp plan are not in any way reduced or otherwise offset by benefits provided under Social Security (i.e., benefits under the plan are not to be "integrated" with Social Security benefits). However, this does not mean that allocations cannot be on a per capita or some other more equal basis under the plan.

Section (5) contains the following definitions: (A) "Employee stock ownership plan" means a technique of corporate finance that utilizes a stock bonus plan or a stock bonus plan in combination with a money purchase pension plan qualified under section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and which is designed to invest primarily in qualifying employer securities. In addition, the plan must meet such other requirements as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe by regulation.

(B) "Qualified trust" means a trust established under an employee stock ownership plan which meets the applicable requirements of the Internal Revenue Code and of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

(C) "Qualified employer securities" means common stock issued by a corporation receiving firm adjustment assistance under this Act or by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation. Such stock must have voting power and dividend rights no less favorable than the voting and dividend rights on other common stock issued by the issuing corporation. In addition, participants must be permitted to direct the voting of stock allocated to their accounts in the plan.

(D) "Equity capital" means in the case of a corporation receiving firm adjustment assistance the amount of its pre-existing invested capital and tangible assets (equal to the adjusted basis of such properly exclusive of depreciation on such pre-existing property during the year in which qualified employer securities are purchased by the trust) less the amount of that corporation's pre-existing liabilities.

III. BUDGETARY IMPACT OF THE BILL

In compliance with section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970, sections 308 and 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, and paragraph 11(a) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the following statement is made relative to the cost and budgetary impact of the bill. The Committee provides as its estimates the report of the Congressional Budget Office under section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act, as follows: (Letter follows.)

The Committee, however, further notes that the Administration provided the Committee with significantly higher cost estimates. The Department of Labor, based on its recent experience with higher rates of certifications for assistance in the worker program, estimates that the fiscal year 1984 cost of both programs will be $127 million, and in fiscal year 1985 will be $128 million.

IV. REGULATORY IMPACT OF THE BILL

In compliance with paragraph 11(b) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee states that the provisions of the Committee bill will not regulate any individuals or businesses, will not significantly impact on the personal privacy of individuals, and will result in no additional paperwork. The bill authorizes continued funding of two Government adjustment programs without substantially modifying the law governing their operations.

V. CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with paragraph 12 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the changes in existing law made by the bill are shown below (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman).

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., September 29, 1982.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Chairman, Committee on Finance,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to Section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for H.R. 3391, a bill to improve workers training under the Trade Act of 1974, and for other purposes, as ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Finance, September 29, 1983.

Should the Committee so desire, we would be pleased to provide further details on this estimate.

Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER,
Director.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

September 29, 1983.

1. Bill number: H.R. 3391.

2. Bill title: A bill to improve workers training under the Trade Act of 1974, and for other purposes.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Finance, September 29, 1983.

4. Bill purpose: This bill would reauthorize the cash benefit, training, and firm assistance parts of the Trade Adjustment Assistance (TAA) program through fiscal year 1985.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government: This bill would result in additional future liabilities through an extension of existing entitlements that would require subsequent appropriation action to provide the necessary budget authority. The figures shown as "Required Budget Authority" represent an estimate of the additional budget authority needed to cover the estimated outlays that would result from enactment of H.R. 3391.

[By fiscal year, in millions of dollars]

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Reauthorization of current program—cash benefits:
Required budget authority	40	40
Estimated outlays	40	40
Employment services:
Estimated authorization level	26	28
Estimated outlays	25	27
Firm assistance:
Estimated authorization level	29	30
Estimated outlays	24	29	2	−2	−2
Total:
Required budget authority/authorization level	95	98
Estimated outlays	89	96	2	−2	−2

The costs of this bill fall within budget functions 370, 500, and 600.

Basis of Estimate: The estimates of the costs of reauthorizing the current law cash benefit and training parts of the TAA program are consistent with the assumptions underlying the CBO baseline and the First Budget Resolution. Recently, there has been both a surge of certification approvals and the Federal Supplemental Compensation (FSC) program has passed the House of Representatives and is currently under consideration in the Senate. The net result of these two events would be to reduce the estimated cost of the cash benefit part of the program by $2 million in fiscal year 1984 and $6 million in fiscal year 1985.

For purposes of this cost estimate, the estimated authorization level for trade adjustment assistance to firms reflects CBO's baseline assumptions for this program, which is administered by the International Trade Administration (ITA) in the Department of Commerce. In fiscal years 1984 and 1985, it is assumed that approximately $13.1 million and $13.8 million, respectively, would be available for direct loans. The ITA share of the guarantee loan program is assumed to be an estimated $29.8 million in 1984 and $31.2 million in 1985. Outlays in each fiscal year reflect disbursements for direct loans and guarantee repurchases, offset by loan repayments.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: The Congressional Budget Office has determined that the budgets of state and local governments would not be affected directly by the enactment of this bill.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: On June 28, 1983, CBO prepared a cost estimate for H.R. 3391, as ordered reported by the House Committee on Ways and Means, June 23, 1983. The difference between that estimate and the present one reflects the fact that the House committee reported bill contains several additional provisions.

9. Estimate prepared by: Richard Hendrix (226-2820), Mary Maginniss (226-2860).

10. Estimate approved by: James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

Mr. DOLE. I have never known a program that promised so much and gave so little as the trade adjustment program. But there is a great deal of interest in it by Senator DANFORTH and other members of our committee. We were able, in a meeting yesterday of the Senate Finance Committee, to agree on a more conservative version of trade adjustment assistance than the House-passed bill, and this compromise was supported by the committee by a vote of 17 to 0.

AMENDMENT NO. 2261

(Purpose: To amend the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980, to reauthorize trade adjustment assistance for workers and firms, and for the other purposes)

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH) proposes an amendment numbered 2261:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY INVOLVING THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT, 1983

SECTION 1. The International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980 (19 U.S.C. 1356k, et seq.) is amended—

(2) by striking out "for such period prior to October 1, 1983 as the agreement remains in effect" in section 2, and inserting in lieu thereof "before October 1, 1986".

REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS FOR WORKERS AND FIRMS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 245 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2317) is amended by striking out "each of fiscal years 1982 and 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years 1982 through 1985".

(b) Section 285 of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1985".

"CONTRIBUTED IMPORTANTLY" TEST FOR GROUP ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 3. (a) Section 222 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2272) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking out "were a substantial cause of such total or partial separation, or threat thereof, and of such decline" and inserting in lieu thereof "contributed importantly to such total or partial separation, or threat thereof, and to such decline"; and

(2) by amending the last sentence to read as follows: "For purposes of paragraph (3), the term 'contributed importantly' means a cause which is important, but not necessarily more important than any other cause.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to petitions for certification filed under section 221 of the Trade Act of 1974 on or after October 1, 1983.

PREFERENCE FOR FIRMS HAVING EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 255 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2345) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Preference for Firms Having Employee Stock Ownership Plans

"(i)(1) When considering whether to grant a direct loan or to guarantee a loan to a corporation which is otherwise certified under section 251, the Secretary shall give preference to a corporation which agrees with respect to such loan to fulfill the following requirements—

"(A) 25 percent of the principal amount of the loan is paid by the lender to a qualified trust established under an employee stock ownership plan established and maintained by the recipient corporation, by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation, or by several corporations including the recipient corporation,

"(B) the employee stock ownership plan meets the requirements of this subsection, and

"(C) the agreement among the recipient corporation, the lender, and the qualified trust relating to the loan meets the requirements of this section.

"(2) An employee stock ownership plan does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless the governing instrument of the plan provides that—

"(A) the amount of the loan paid under paragraph (1)(A) to the qualified trust will be used to purchase qualified employer securities,

"(B) the qualified trust will repay to the lender the amount of such loan, together with the interest thereon, out of amounts contributed to the trust by the recipient corporation, and

"(C) from time to time, as the qualified trust repays such amount, the trust will allocate qualified employer securities among the individual accounts of participants and their beneficiaries in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (4).

"(3) The agreement among the recipient corporation, the lender, and the qualified trust does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless—

"(A) it is unconditionally enforceable by any party against the others, jointly and severally,

"(B) it provides that the liability of the qualified trust to repay loan amounts paid to the qualified trust may not, at any time, exceed an amount equal to the amount of contributions required under paragraph (2)(B) which are actually received by such trust,

"(C) it provides that amounts received by the recipient corporation from the qualified trust for qualified employer securities purchased for the purpose of this subsection will be used exclusively by the recipient corporation for those purposes for which it may use that portion of the loan paid directly to it by the lender,

"(D) it provides that the recipient corporation may not reduce the amount of its equity capital during the one year period beginning on the date on which the qualified trust purchases qualified employer securities for purposes of this subsection, and

"(E) it provides that the recipient corporation will make contributions to the qualified trust of not less than such amounts as are necessary for such trust to meet its obligation to make repayments of principal and interest on the amount of the loan received by the trust without regard to whether such contributions are deductible by the corporation under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and without regard to any other amounts the recipient corporation is obligated under law to contribute to or under the employee stock ownership plan.

"(4) At the close of each plan year, an employee stock ownership plan shall allocate to the accounts of participating employees that portion of the qualified employer securities the cost of which bears substantially the same ratio to the cost of all the qualified employer securities purchased under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection as the amount of the loan principal and interest repaid by the qualified trust during that year bears to the total amount of the loan principal and interest payable by such trust during the term of such loan. Qualified employer securities allocated to the individual account of a participant during one plan year must bear substantially the same proportion to the amount of all such securities allocated to all participants in the plan as the amount of compensation paid to such participant bears to the total amount of compensation paid to all such participants during that year.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term—

"(A) 'employee stock ownership plan' means a plan described in section 4975(e)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

"(B) 'qualified trust' means a trust established under an employee stock ownership plan and meeting the requirements of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

"(C) 'qualified employer securities' means common stock issued by the recipient corporation or by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation with voting power and dividend rights no less favorable than the voting power and dividend rights on other common stock issued by the issuing corporation and with voting power being exercised by the participants in the employee stock ownership plan after it is allocated to their plan accounts, and

"(D) 'equity capital' means, with respect to the recipient corporation, the sum of its money and other property (in an amount equal to the adjusted basis of such property but disregarding adjustments made on account of depreciation or amortization made during the period described in paragraph (3)(D)), less the amount of its indebtedness.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this is an amendment in the nature of a substitute. It does two things.

First, in connection with the extension of the International Coffee Agreement, it would extend the coffee agreement by 3 years rather than 2 years as provided in the House bill.

Second, it would reauthorize the current trade adjustment assistance program for an additional 2 years.

Both programs will expire tonight unless reauthorized. This will accomplish the objective of keeping both alive. With respect to the trade adjustment assistance program, the Finance Committee met yesterday and agreed to a committee amendment which is incorporated in this amendment, to reauthorize the trade adjustment assistance program for an additional 2 years.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to comment on one aspect of the committee amendment to H.R. 3813 which is particularly important, the employee stock ownership plan. But first I would like to make two general comments, one about the coffee agreement and one about trade adjustment assistance in general.

COFFEE AGREEMENT

First with respect to the coffee agreement: Several Louisiana constituents have written to me to report that the agreement has resulted in stability in world coffee prices helping both consumers and processors of coffee. However, one of my constituents has expressed concern that provisions of the agreement are not being completely enforced to the disadvantage of U.S. brokers and buyers. I have addressed these concerns expressed by the International Coffee Corporation to our U.S. Trade Representative, Ambassador Bill Brock, who has responded by saying essentially he would expect International Coffee Agreement members to adopt strong measures to meet problems of such violations if they persist and expressing commitment of the administration to solving these problems.

Notwithstanding Ambassador Brock's letter, I continue to be concerned that the provisions of the coffee agreement be adhered to by producing countries. Such violations undermine the very stability that is the reason most Louisiana constituents who are concerned with this matter are in favor of the agreement. Therefore, I intend to monitor closely the operation of the agreement with this particular concern in mind.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE

Now with regard to the trade adjustment assistance program: Mr. President, I would have supported an expanded program along the lines of the bill as it passed the House. I believe Congress made an agreement with the American labor unions to maintain this program to compensate in part for our policy of reciprocal tariff reductions.

Mr. President, I do not suggest that trade adjustment assistance would make American workers happy with the world trading system. Those workers know that system is slanted against them, and that basic change in it is necessary. Eventually, we will need to revert to the original purposes of our open trade policy, mainly a renewal of the fundamental principle of reciprocity.

However, the trade adjustment assistance program as proposed by the Finance Committee, while paltry, nevertheless keeps alive the idea that it is possible to work out policies which make an open, reciprocal trading system both economically sound and politically acceptable.

EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PERFERENCE

Mr. President, there is one aspect of the extension of trade adjustment assistance that I would like to address for a moment in order to call it to the attention of Senators. The Finance Committee agreed to an amendment that I think could prove to be very helpful in making a success of that portion of this program dealing with the trade adjustment assistance provided to firms.

When the Trade Act of 1974 was enacted, the committee included in the community assistance portion of the bill a program of loan guarantees to help trade-impacted firms. In evaluating applications for loan guarantees under that section, the Secretary of Commerce was directed to give a preference to loan applicants willing to establish an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) meeting certain requirements.

The community assistance portion of the 1974 act expired in September 1982. However, this bill extends the direct loan and loan guarantee program of prior law as it applies to assistance to firms, and the amendment agreed to by the committee provides that the ESOP preference formerly provided under the community portion of the act will now be provided under the firm program.

I believe that we will find that this amendment results in an improvement in this program. The evidence indicates that distressed companies that adopt programs for employee ownership have a better survival rate than more traditionally owned companies. Researchers at the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University and at the National Center for Employee Ownership indicate that, to the knowledge of researchers in the field, more than 90 percent of companies that have been bought by the employees are still in operation.

This is not to suggest, Mr. President, that a company should propose an employee buyout as part of its application for trade adjustment assistance. It does suggest, however, that some degree of employee ownership can be a helpful factor to those firms attempting to make it through difficult times.

Mr. President, the Congress first began to encourage employee stock ownership plans 10 years ago when we were considering Government assistance to the distressed railroad industry. The resulting railroad, Conrail, was subsequently required to establish an ESOP as part of the additional financial assistance provided in 1978. The Congress also required that the Chrysler Corp. establish an ESOP as a condition of the loan guarantees granted to that trade-impacted company.

We would be well advised to continue this policy whenever Government assistance is provided to companies. Equity suggests that where taxpayer funds are used to assist a private company, there should be a preference for companies willing to share the benefit of that assistance with their employees.

In addition, by encouraging the use of employee stock ownership plans as the financing vehicle through which such loans are funded, we will be raising the likelihood that such loans will be repaid because principal payments on a company's ESOP loan may be deducted, up to 25 percent of payroll each year. Thus, distressed firms need not generate as much revenue to service their debt.

An ESOP operates as a technique of corporate finance that also serves as an employee benefit plan. The Tax Code provides incentives for ESOP's in order to encourage employers to finance their capital requirements in such a way that employees have an opportunity to earn a stake in the company for which they work.

Mr. President, although employee stock ownership plans have only been a part of the Internal Revenue Code since 1974, we now have enough evidence concerning their effect to say with confidence that they can be very advantageous to companies and to employees—and particularly to those companies and those employees attempting to make the changes necessary to respond to economic adversity.

Let me mention just three studies indicative of the experience we have had with employee ownership.

First, in 1977, five MBA candidates at UCLA conducted a survey of 180 companies with ESOP's and found that improved employee motivation was the most commonly cited benefit of establishing an ESOP.

Second, a 1977 Commerce Department-funded survey of companies with employee ownership found such companies to be 1.5 times more profitable than more conventionally owned firms, and the more stock held by the employees the better the company performed.

Third, a 1981 survey of 229 ESOP companies by the Journal of Corporation Law at the University of Iowa found that while other companies' productivity was declining during the 1975–79 period, the productivity of ESOP companies was increasing.

Mr. President, I want to assure Senators that this amendment that I offered in committee is in no way intended to suggest a model solution to the many complex problems facing firms that must compete in today's international environment. The evidence, however, indicates that companies with employee ownership outperform their competitors.

Just as the company with employee ownership will have an advantage over a more traditionally owned firm, so, too, should trade-impacted companies gain in competitive strength with an adjustment assistance policy that encourages employee stock ownership. A sense of ownership is crucial to the efficient and successful functioning of our private enterprise system—a system based on individual initiative and on sharing in the gains that one's efforts bring about.

Employee stock ownership provides a healthy new dimension to the trade adjustment process. It enables those affected to examine the issue in a different frame of reference, one in which the effect on them becomes much more real, and one in which they can realize how important their productive efforts are to that process.

In short, Mr. President, the coupling of trade adjustment assistance with employee ownership can help to provide an adjustment context in which such assistance is more likely to succeed and in which more people in the assisted firm have an opportunity to share in that success.

Mr. President, for the convenience of those interested in this particular portion of the bill, the following is the Finance Committee explanation of the ESOP preference provided under this portion of the bill:

PREFERENCE FOR LOAN APPLICANTS UTILIZING EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

Section 3 of the bill provides a preference among certified, equally qualified loan applicants for applicants that include in their adjustment plans proposed to the Secretary a provision to utilize an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) as the financing vehicle for repayment of 25 percent of the principal amount of the loan. Nothing in this provision requires the Secretary to grant any preference in certification or to make loans that are not otherwise economically sound. This preference for ESOP financing reflects a continuation of the ESOP preference originally established in the community assistance portion of the Trade Act of 1974. Some experience suggests that distressed companies with employee stock ownership have a higher likelihood of survival than more traditionally owned companies. In addition, ESOP-type financing raises the likelihood that assisted companies will be able to repay the trade adjustment assistance loan because principal payments on an ESOP loan are tax deductible, up to 25 percent of payroll each year. Thus, the committee felt that an ESOP preference would reflect the committee's concern that this program be structured in such a way as to raise the likelihood that assisted companies will succeed and that these loans will be repaid. The committee also felt that equity suggests that where taxpayer funds are used to assist a private company, there should be a preference for companies willing to share the benefit of that assistance with their employees.

This provision requires that the employee stock ownership portion of a company's adjustment plan must meet certain requirements before the Secretary may grant the preference. Those requirements are as follows:

Paragraph (1) would provide that 25 percent of any loan made to a corporation to provide firm adjustment assistance be made to a qualified trust established under an employee stock ownership plan. Repayment of such loans would be guaranteed by the firm receiving such assistance.

Paragraph (2) would require that the proceeds of such loans be used by qualified trusts for the purchase of employer securities and that annual employer contributions to the trust be utilized to repay the outstanding balance on these loans. It also would require that, as the qualified trust repays the loan, employer securities, once they are paid for, be allocated to the individual accounts of plan participants.

Paragraph (3) would impose specific requirements which employee stock ownership trusts must meet. The agreement establishing the rights and obligations of the employer maintaining the qualified trust, the lender and the qualified trust must be unconditionally enforceable by all parties to the agreement. The qualified trust is not to be required to make loan repayments in excess of the amount of required contributions made by the employer and actually received by the trust. This section would also require that funds transferred by the qualified trust for the acquisition of employer securities would be used for the same qualified purposes as are such other sums which are made available in the form of direct loans to the firm qualifying for such assistance.

In addition, the equity capital of a corporation receiving payment for its securities from a qualified trust may not be reduced for the 1-year period beginning on the date of such purchase to insure that such funds are used solely for expansion and other legitimate corporate purposes rather than for refinancing existing debt obligations. The committee has made the employee stock ownership provision a part of its trade adjustment assistance program to provide additional funds for current productive capital assets or other operating needs of the corporation and intends that no part of these funds should be "leaked" from the company to redeem its securities.

Finally, a corporation would be required to make such contributions to the qualified trust as are necessary for the repayment of the loan made to the trust for the acquisition of employer securities, whether or not the corporation may deduct such contributions for Federal income tax purposes and regardless of any other amounts that the corporation is obliged to contribute under any employee stock ownership plan in effect.

Paragraph (4) would require that there shall be allocated to the accounts of participating employees for each plan year their share of employer securities which are paid for and released for allocation. This allocation is based on the annual rate of compensation for that participant compared to total compensation paid all participants during that year. The intent of this provision is to insure that benefits under the employee stock ownership plan are not in any way reduced or otherwise offset by benefits provided under social security, that is, benefits under the plan are not to be "integrated" with social security benefits. However, this does not mean that allocations cannot be on a per capita or some other more equal basis under the plan.

Section (5) contains the following definitions: (A) "Employee stock ownership plan" means a technique of corporate finance that utilizes a stock bonus plan or a stock bonus plan in combination with a money purchase pension plan qualified under section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and which is designed to invest primarily in qualifying employer securities. In addition, the plan must meet such other requirements as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe by regulation.

(B) "Qualified trust" means a trust established under an employee stock ownership plan which meets the applicable requirements of the Internal Revenue Code and of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

(C) "Qualified employer securities" means common stock issued by a corporation receiving firm adjustment assistance under this act or by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation. Such stock must have voting power and dividend rights no less favorable than the voting and dividend rights on other common stock issued by the issuing corporation. In addition, participants must be permitted to direct the voting of stock allocated to their accounts in the plan.

(D) "Equity capital" means in the case of a corporation receiving firm adjustment assistance the amount of its preexisting invested capital and tangible assests—equal to the adjusted basis of such property exclusive of depreciation on such preexisting property during the year in which qualified employer securities are purchased by the trust—less the amount of that corporation's preexisting liabilities.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter to me from the U.S. Trade Representative concerning the International Coffee Agreement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, D.C., June 15, 1983.

Hon. RUSSELL B. LONG,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR RUSSELL: I appreciate receiving your letter of May 27, 1983, conveying the concerns of Mr. Alan V. Bories over continued U.S. participation in the International Coffee Agreement (ICA).

Mr. Bories makes four principal points regarding the ICA: that it is not in the interest of the U.S. consumer, that it adversely affects the U.S. trade balance, that nonmembers of the ICA enjoy advantages over ICA members, and that the quota system of the ICA violates U.S. free trade principles. I would like to address these issues in turn.

It is our view that the ICA provides substantial benefits to both consumers and producers who are members. The ICA attempts to ensure that producers receive remunerative prices for their coffee and that consumers are assured of a stable supply of coffee at reasonable prices. While it is true that ICA members are currently paying more for coffee than nonmembers, we are assured that in the future there will be a sufficient supply of coffee (both through maintenance of production levels and through the encouragement of stockholding) to moderate price increases brought about by an eventual price disruption. Our experience with extraordinarily high prices following the 1975 Brazil frost has impressed on all ICA members the importance of having sufficient stocks to make available to the market.

The U.S. coffee industry recognizes the significant contribution the ICA can make toward reducing coffee price instability. The National Coffee Association, which represents 90 percent of the U.S. coffee importing, roasting, and grinding industry, is on record as supporting the 1983 ICA. The consumer advisors who were accredited to the U.S. delegation which negotiated the new ICA also support the Agreement and have noted that it provides benefits to consumers.

It is difficult to assess how the ICA affects our balance of trade. To the extent that purchases by ICA member exporters of U.S. goods depend on their receiving remunerative prices for their coffee, I would conclude that the ICA has a positive effect on our balance of trade. Furthermore, since the ICA is designed to moderate price increases as well as price decreases, over time, our balance of trade vis-a-vis coffee-exporting countries should even out.

Given today's unusual coffee market situation characterized by an excess of supply over demand, producers are seeking markets for the coffee they cannot sell to ICA members. Some exporters have found markets in nonmember consuming countries. We understand that coffee being exported to nonmembers is for the most part being sold at a lower price than that paid by member countries. However, the amount of coffee being sold in this manner represents only 5 to 10 percent of the total amount of coffee traded in the world. As Mr. Bories points out, this situation is contrary to Article 2(3) of the ICA. Exporting and importing members are working together to address this problem. Measures have recently been taken to strengthen the control system which monitors the flow of coffee from members to nonmembers. This system is continually being reviewed and improved to increase its effectiveness. If the problem of nonmember sales persists, we expect ICA members to adopt even stronger measures when they next meet in plenary session in September 1983. The United States remains committed to finding an equitable solution to this problem.

Finally, Mr. Bories comments that quotas are contrary to free trade. To this I can reply that we consider coffee, along with several other commodities, to be a product which warrants the use of some sort of economic stabilization mechanism to attenuate extreme price fluctuations. Coffee production is subject to the vagaries of weather, disease, and civil strife, and therefore coffee prices often exhibit dramatic ups and downs. We believe that all those truly concerned about coffee (growers, exporters, importers, roasters, and consumers) agree that under these particular circumstances an ICA quota system which serves to dampen price movements is justified.

I hope this information will assist you in responding to Mr. Bories' letter.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am advised that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would like to be present before further action is taken on this matter. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Will the Senator withhold that for a moment?

Mr. DOLE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, it is a little known fact that Hawaii is the only State in the Union which produces coffee commerically. As the Senator from Hawaii, I rise in support of the Danforth amendment and of the bill itself and urge its passage.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support extending the trade adjustment assistance program for an additional 2 years. This program is essential to helping import-injured firms adjust to changing market conditions, as well as to aid workers laid off due to increased import competition.

I have long been a supporter of trade adjustment assistance, which has been of substantial benefit to hundreds of firms and workers in my State. To this extent, I cosponsored Senator MOYNIHAN'S legislation to extend the program and, along with Senator HEINZ, I wrote to the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on State, Justice and Commerce, Senator LAXALT, to protest a deferral of $20,100,000 for this program.

Mr. President, with 620,000 Pennsylvanians out of work, and an unemployment rate in my State of 10.9 percent, I feel that the attempts to "zero out" the trade adjustment assistance were ill-advised, and I commend this body for taking the necessary steps to extend its authorization for 2 more years at $95,000,000 per year.

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I support the Senate Finance Committee's amendment to reauthorize the current trade adjustment assistance program for the next 2 years.

Many of today's unemployed workers—and those threatened by layoffs in the future—will not be able to return to their old jobs. As a nation, we have an obligation to help these people who have been adversely affected by U.S. trade policies and a changing international economy. We must help give them the tools to fill the jobs of the eighties and beyond.

That is what the trade adjustment assistance program is designed to do. But, Mr. President, this program is set to expire at the close of business today.

We must not let this happen. We must move quickly to pass this amendment and subsequently enact an appropriations measure to prevent the demise of this important program. Otherwise, we will be causing more hardship for thousands of American workers who have lost their jobs because of imports and who depend on the assistance provided under this program.

The amendment before us is extremely modest. It is a simple reauthorization which will cost less than $100 million for each of the next 2 years. It does not expand, liberalize, or change the current program.

Quite frankly, I am sorry it does not. I believe more, not less, is urgently needed in this area.

More than 70 percent of all goods produced in this country must compete with foreign-made products. Unemployment has not dropped below 9 percent since February 1982. Unemployment in the U.S. steel and auto industries—two basic industries which have been extremely vulnerable to foreign competition—has been between 30 percent and 40 percent for the same period. Many of the jobs in these industries are simply gone forever.

Unlike the administration, however, I do not believe the Job Training Partnership Act can help all of these Americans.

As enacted last year, this program cannot possibly provide adequate funds to meet the demand for training and other types of assistance among employees who have lost their jobs because of imports.

CBO estimates that in early 1983 approximately 750,000 workers had lost their jobs as a result of imports. Other estimates go much higher. Yet the Job Training Partnership Act was only expected to help 31,500 workers in fiscal year 1983 and only 170,000 in fiscal year 1984.

So, Mr. President, while I and several of my colleagues would have liked to enact a greatly revamped trade adjustment program with more emphasis on training—and I introduced legislation to that end—we understand that such was not in the cards.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, we must not leave a void for the thousands of U.S. workers hurt by foreign imports. We must not let the current trade adjustment assistance program die. It is far too important. I urge adoption of the amendment before us.●

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for the trade adjustment assistance (TAA) program. The amendment we have before us would reauthorize TAA for an additional 2 years.

Trade adjustment assistance represents a commitment made to the American worker two decades ago at the time of the Kennedy round of multilateral trade negotiations. We recognized then that while a policy of free trade is essential to a healthy domestic economy, important segments of the work force are adversely affected by import competition. Trade adjustment assistance is for these workers. It helps them pay the bills while they are unemployed and it enables them to receive training for new jobs in different sectors of the economy.

I am pleased to note that my colleagues on the Finance Committee registered their continued support of TAA by voting on September 29 to extend the program for 2 more years. I expect that the full Senate will do the same.

Mr. President, the measure we are proposing reaffirms the commitment we made to working men and women 20 years ago. The premise upon which trade adjustment assistance was based—that some will suffer from a free trade policy and that they should be compensated—is as valid today as in 1962. We cannot renege on our commitment. We must not let TAA die.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to lend my full support to the extension of the trade adjustment assistance program—a program which has provided, and will now continue to provide, assistance for many troubled domestic firms and unemployed workers, hurt by foreign import competition.

The recent recession has resulted in an appalling level of unemployment throughout the country. The extension of this program will assure that assistance to injured firms and workers will be available in order that they may help themselves to deal with new economic realities by providing training and/or technical assistance. In this way, the unemployed who qualify for this program, as well as injured firms, can be enabled once again to contribute to the economic prosperity of the country.

In my home State of West Virginia, many industries have been severely injured by import competition. These range from footwear to glassware to steel. Many plants have been closed or have had to greatly reduce their production because they have been unable to deal successfully with the twin problems of import competition and recession.

Nationally, during the period of fiscal year 1978 through fiscal year 1982, 1.1 million workers have received aid from this program.

During the period of April 1975 through August 1983, 154 petitions have been filed by West Virginia firms, and 11,900 West Virginians have received assistance.

One innovation in this newly approved legislation which gives me particular encouragement is the amendment which gives preference to firms and workers who participate in employee stock ownership plans.

The 8,000 employees of Weirton Steel, located in Hancock County, W. Va., just recently approved overwhelmingly the establishment of an ESOP for the purpose of purchasing their plant from National Steel, which had earlier announced that it would sell or "harvest" the facility.

While this program has mainly benefited small firms in competition with imports, it is my hope that the Weirton plant and its employees will not only benefit from this amendment, but that Weirton's ESOP will set an example for others throughout the country to follow in remaining viable and in retaining jobs for our citizens. Hopefully this legislation will help.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I think we are ready to proceed with the vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2261) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask for third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 3813) was passed.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1847 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

11-059 O-87-30 (Pt. 19)

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 4:05 p.m., in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in my folder of items to be done routinely are a number of things. I wonder if the minority leader is prepared to consider them as I go through the folder at this time.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

The first is S. 1424, if there is no objection.

Mr. BYRD. That is one I see Mr. INOUYE is interested in, and that is clear on this side.

PACIFIC FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 276, S. 1424.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1424) to amend Public Law 92-444 to reflect the change in the name of the Pacific Tuna Development Foundation to the Pacific Fisheries Development Foundation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1424

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of the Central, Western, and South Pacific Fisheries Development Act (Public Law 92-444; 16 U.S.C. 758e) is amended by striking out "Pacific Tuna Development Foundation" and inserting in lieu thereof "Pacific Fisheries Development Foundation".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SUPPORT FOR THE NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the next item on my list is Senate Resolution 118. I inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to consider that matter at this time.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, we are prepared.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 118.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 118) to express the sense of the Senate in support of continued integrity of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I urge passage of Senate Resolution 118, which expresses the sense of this body in support of the continued integrity of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Back in April, when I introduced this resolution, I described the regrettable impact on NOAA of the administration's budget cutting and asked my colleagues to evaluate NOAA's budget in light of the fundamental requirements of this Nation's people and businesses. I urged consideration of the great expense that will be required in the future to rebuild the Federal Government's capacity to provide the important services proposed by the administration for elimination or major reduction. This resolution was offered to emphasize the many ways that NOAA touches our lives and to point out the need to maintain its standards of professional excellence.

Now, as we take up this resolution on the floor, I am gratified to note that the Senate Appropriations Committee has approved a Commerce-Justice-State bill which restores a substantial portion of the proposed reductions. The level of funding in the Senate bill would at least permit NOAA to limp along. It is my hope that my colleagues will see fit to support the committee's version of the appropriation bill.

The words of Senate Resolution 118 are just as true today as when it was introduced. NOAA has responsibility for a wide spectrum of important scientific services that the public depends on.

The truth has not yet registered on the administration. The fiscal year 1982 proposal by the administration included a number of reductions in key NOAA programs. The Congress restored most of these. For fiscal year 1983, the administration ignored the restorations by Congress and submitted a budget based on their fiscal year 1982 proposal, with additional cuts. The fiscal year 1984 budget submission followed a similar pattern—lower than the previous year's submission and bearing no relation to the annual congressional restorations of programs like sea grant and coastal zone management. Perhaps with this resolution we can send a message that will help induce the administration to submit more realistic budgets for NOAA.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S. RES. 118

Whereas the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is one of the foremost scientific agencies in the United States and throughout the world;

Whereas the oceanic and atmospheric research, weather services, environmental expertise, coastal management knowledge, and fishery conservation and management skills of National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration scientists, engineers, and technical experts benefit all Americans;

Whereas the administration has recommended the elimination of nearly one thousand six hundred National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration jobs for the next fiscal year and a reduction of well over $100,000,000 in annual funding for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration;

Whereas for the third consecutive year, the President has proposed termination of the highly successful coastal zone management and sea grant programs (including the very effective marine extension service), the closing of the top-rated Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory, and the elimination of the undersea research program;

Whereas the President's budget calls for deactivation of nearly half the oceanic research fleet, serious reductions in geodesy programs, and heavy reductions in ocean pollution and ocean dumping research;

Whereas the President proposes a 40 per centum cut in the National Marine Fisheries Service, including the termination of Saltonstall-Kennedy funding for development of our fishing industry, the closure of nineteen fish hatcheries on the Columbia River, cuts of almost 60 per centum in funding for the Regional Fishery Management Councils, elimination of State grant programs involving commercial and anadromous research, termination of nonhatchery aquaculture research, the undermining of fishery habitat work, and the deep cutback of data collection and analysis;

Whereas the President's budget recommends the elimination of agricultural weather services and the fruit frost program, a 50 per centum cut in fire weather services, and the elimination of the second polar-orbiting satellite;

Whereas the effectiveness of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's highly regarded, world-class laboratories is being impaired by funding cuts, reflected by the administration's proposal to reduce the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's research and development to $149,000,000 in fiscal year 1984, from a high of $204,000,000 in fiscal year 1980;

Whereas the administration has curtailed severely the weather modification research and development program in the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration that could some day save countless lives, avoid injuries, and save billions of dollars;

Whereas improvements in weather forecasting have been hindered and thereby public safety threatened because necessary research and development in advanced satellite sensing of the atmosphere and oceans has been curtailed;

Whereas the President has decided to transfer to the private sector the weather satellites essential to the productivity, health, and safety of our Nation, without having performed cost analyses or consulted with the Congress or experts in satellite meteorology;

Whereas the Department of Commerce has announced a review of three thousand five hundred jobs in the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to determine whether they can be eliminated and their duties shifted to private contractors;

Whereas the administration is conducting a contract study of the National Weather Service to determine how to pare back its full-time staff; and

Whereas the services and programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration exemplify the kind of public infrastructure that is essential for the well-being of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall be maintained as a scientifically sound, reliable, world-class Federal institution with adequate funding and personnel to provide the science and services necessary to safeguard the American people's interests and the Nation's future in the oceans and the atmosphere, so that—the production of protein desperately needed by this Nation and the world can be maintained for years to come through wise fisheries management and utilization;

the use of our coastal resources can be conserved for future generations and the Nation's economic development enhanced through balanced coastal zone management and through coastal and ocean research;

the lives and property of the American people can be safeguarded and economic losses reduced through the maintenance of a strong National Weather Service and meteorological satellite systems operated by the Government in the public interest;

the health of our ocean and atmospheric systems which provide the fundamentals of life on this planet can be maintained, through knowledge and understanding;

our research and protection systems for those intelligent life forms dependent on the seas can be furthered as a sign of our being a civilized and caring Nation; and the existing partnership between Federal, State, and private universities and research institutions can be enhanced to pool resources and knowledge of our coastal, ocean, and atmospheric resources for the greater good of the Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's institutional integrity be preserved and enhanced through comprehensive authorization legislation for all National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration responsibilities and through sufficient appropriations pursuant to such authorization legislation.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next are two items, the first of which is a budget waiver, and then the subject of the waiver, which is S. 1499. The budget waiver is Senate Resolution 214.

Mr. BYRD. There is no objection on this side.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 419, Senate Resolution 214, which is the budget waiver to accompany S. 1499.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 214) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 1499.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 214

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 1499. Such waiver is necessary because S. 1499 authorizes the exercise of new budget authority which would become available in fiscal year 1984 and such bill was not reported on or before May 15, 1983, as required in section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, for such authorizations.

The waiver of section 402(a) is necessary to provide for the settlement of Indian claims in the town of Ledyard, Connecticut.

S. 1499 provides an authorization of $900,000 for a fund to be known as the Mashantucket Pequot Settlement Fund which will be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the Settlement Act.

S. 1499 is a successor bill to S. 366 which was vetoed on April 5, 1983. The Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior has included funds in its fiscal 1984 markup for implementing the settlement authorized by S. 1499. The Appropriations Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives have, therefore, had adequate notice of this authorization. Thus, congressional consideration of this authorization will in no way interfere with or delay the appropriations process.

THE MASHANTUCKET PEQUOT INDIAN CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 1499, Calendar No. 369.

Mr. BYRD. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1499) to settle certain claims of the Mashantucket Pequot Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues in the Senate to again support the Mashantucket Pequot Land Claims Settlement Act.

A similar bill was passed by the Senate by unanimous consent on February 23. It was passed by the House of Representatives on March 22. However, the legislation was subsequently vetoed by the President on April 5.

With the assistance of the majority leader, extensive negotiations were entered into between Congress and the administration in order to reach an acceptable resolution of the Pequot land claim.

The bill under consideration today would settle this claim to 800 acres of land in eastern Connecticut. It would authorize the appropriation of $900,000 for the purchase of the land and extend Federal recognition to the Pequots as part of the settlement. It would also credit the State of Connecticut with a contribution of $450,000 based on the provision of past services to the tribe, a contribution of 20 acres of land, and extensive road work on the reservation by the Connecticut Department of Transportation. This latter provision represents a substantial increase in the State's contribution, which meets one of the objections the administration had to the original bill.

In addition to this increase in the State's contribution to the settlement, the Select Committee on Indian Affairs held a hearing on the bill to give the administration the opportunity to testify on several aspects of the legislation which were of particular interest to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

I understand that the administration now supports the bill. And I would also like to point out that S. 1499 has been, and continues to be, supported by the entire Connecticut delegation, the Mashantucket Pequot Tribe, the affected property owners, and the Connecticut State government.

I thank Senator BAKER and his staff for their assistance in reaching this agreement. I also extend my sincere thanks to Senator ANDREWS and the Select Committee on Indian Affairs for helping with the negotiations and conducting a second set of hearings on this bill.

It is my hope that my colleagues will assist the State of Connecticut in a final resolution of this land claim by supporting S. 1499.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1499

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Mashantucket Pequot Indian Claims Settlement Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(a) there is pending before the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut a civil action entitled "Western Pequot Tribe of Indians against Holdridge Enterprises Incorporated, et al., Civil Action Numbered H76-193 (D. Conn.)," which involves Indian claims to certain public and private lands within the town of Ledyard, Connecticut;

(b) the pendency of this lawsuit has placed a cloud on the titles to much of the land in the town of Ledyard, including lands not involved in the lawsuit, which has resulted in severe economic hardships for the residents of the town;

(c) the Congress shares with the State of Connecticut and the parties to the lawsuit a desire to remove all clouds on titles resulting from such Indian land claims;

(d) the parties to the lawsuit and others interested in the settlement of Indian land claims within the State of Connecticut have reached an agreement which requires implementing legislation by the Congress of the United States and the Legislature of the State of Connecticut;

(e) the Western Pequot Tribe, as represented as of the time of the passage of this Act by the Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Council, is the sole successor in interest to the aboriginal entity generally known as the Western Pequot Tribe which years ago claimed aboriginal title to certain lands in the State of Connecticut; and

(f) The State of Connecticut is contributing twenty acres of land owned by the State of Connecticut to fulfill this Act. The State of Connecticut will construct and repair three sections of paved or gravel roadways within the reservation of the Tribe. The State of Connecticut has provided special services to the members of the Western Pequot Tribe residing within its borders. The United States has provided few, if any, special services to the Western Pequot Tribe and has denied that it had jurisdiction over or responsibility for said Tribe. In view of the provision of land by the State of Connecticut, the provision of paved roadways by the State of Connecticut, and the provision of special services by the State of Connecticut without being required to do so by Federal law, it is the intent of Congress that the State of Connecticut not be required to otherwise contribute directly to this claims settlement.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Tribe" means the Mashantucket Pequot Tribe (also known as the Western Pequot Tribe) as identified by chapter 832 of the Connecticut General Statutes and all its predecessors and successors in interest. The Mashantucket Pequot Tribe is represented, as of the date of the enactment of this Act, by the Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Council.

(2) The term "land or natural resources" means any real property or natural resources, or any interest in or right involving any real property or natural resources, including without limitation minerals and mineral rights, timber and timber rights, water and water rights, and hunting and fishing rights.

(3) The term "private settlement lands" means—

(A) the eight hundred acres, more or less, of privately held land which are identified by a red outline on a map filed with the secretary of the State of Connecticut in accordance with the agreement referred to in section 2(d) of this Act, and

(B) the lands known as the Cedar Swamp which are adjacent to the Mashantucket Pequot Reservation as it exists on the date of the enactment of this Act. Within thirty days of the enactment of this Act, the secretary of the State of Connecticut shall transmit to the Secretary a certified copy of said map.

(4) The term "settlement lands" means—

(A) the lands described in sections 2(a) and 3 of the Act To Implement the Settlement of the Mashantucket Pequot Indian Land Claims as enacted by the State of Connecticut and approved on June 9, 1982, and

(B) the private settlement lands.

(5) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(6) The term "transfer" means any transaction involving, or any transaction the purpose of which was to effect, a change in title to or control of any land or natural resources, and any act, event, or circumstance that resulted in a change in title to, possession of, dominion over, or control of land or natural resources, including any sale, grant, lease, allotment, partition, or conveyance, whether pursuant to a treaty, compact, or statute of a State or otherwise.

(7) The term "reservation" means the existing reservation of the Tribe as defined by chapter 824 of the Connecticut General Statutes and any settlement lands taken in trust by the United States for the Tribe.

APPROVAL OF PRIOR TRANSFERS; EXTINGUISHMENT OF ABORIGINAL TITLES AND INDIAN CLAIMS

SEC. 4. (a) Any transfer before the date of enactment of this Act from, by, or on behalf of the Tribe or any of its members of land or natural resources located anywhere within the United States, and any transfer before the date of enactment of this Act from, by, or on behalf of any Indian, Indian nation, or tribe or band of Indians of land or natural resoruces located anywhere within the town of Ledyard, Connecticut, shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with the Constitution and all laws of the United States, including without limitation the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1790, Act of July 22, 1790 (ch. 33, sec. 4, 1 Stat. 137, 138), and all amendments thereto and all subsequent reenactments and versions thereof, and Congress hereby does approve and ratify any such transfer effective as of the date of said transfer.

(b) By virtue of the approval and ratification of a transfer of land or natural resources effected by subsection (a), any aboriginal title held by the Tribe or any member of the Tribe, or any other Indian, Indian nation, or tribe or band of Indians, to any land or natural resources the transfer of which was approved and ratified by subsection (a) shall be regarded as extinguished as of the date of such transfer.

(c) By virture of the approval and ratification of a transfer of land or natural resources effected by this section, or the extinguishment of aboriginal title effected thereby, any claim (including any claim for damages for trespass or for use and occupancy) by, or on behalf of, the Tribe or any member of the Tribe or by any other Indian, Indian nation, or tribe or band of Indians, against the United States, any State or subdivision thereof or any other person which is based on—

(1) any interest in or right involving any land or natural resources the transfer of which was approved and ratified by subsection (a), or

(2) any aboriginal title to land or natural resources the extinguishment of which was effected by subsection (b).

shall be regarded as extinguished as of the date of any such transfer.

(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect or eliminate the personal claim of any individual Indian (except for Federal common law fraud claim) which is pursued under any law of general applicability that protects non-Indians as well as Indians.

(e)(1) This section shall take effect upon the appropriation of $900,000 as authorized under section 5(e) of this Act.

(2) The Secretary shall publish notice of such appropriation in the Federal Register when the funds are deposited in the fund established under section 5(a) of this Act.

MASHANTUCKET PEQUOT SETTLEMENT FUND

SEC. 5. (a) There is hereby established in the United States Treasury an account to be known as the Mashantucket Peqout Settlement Fund (hereinafter referred to in this section as the "Fund"). The Fund shall be held in trust by the Secretary for the benefit of the Tribe and administered in accordance with this Act.

(b)(1) The Secretary is authorized and directed to expend, at the request of the Tribe, the Fund together with any and all income accruing to such Fund in accordance with this subsection.

(2) Not less than $600,000 of the Fund shall be available until January 1, 1985, for the acquisition by the Secretary of private settlement lands. Subsequent to January 1, 1985, the Secretary shall determine whether and to what extent an amount less than $600,000 has been expended to acquire private settlement lands and shall make that amount available to the Tribe to be used in accordance with the economic development plan approved pursuant to paragraph (3).

(3)(A) The Secretary shall disburse all or part of the Fund together with any and all income accruing to such Fund (excepting the amount reserved in paragraph (2)) according to a plan to promote the economic development of the Tribe.

(B) The Tribe shall submit an economic development plan to the Secretary and the Secretary shall approve such plan within sixty days of its submission if he finds that it is reasonably related to the economic development of the Tribe. If the Secretary does not approve such plan, he shall, at the time of his decision, set forth in writing and with particularity, the reasons for his disapproval.

(C) The Secretary may not agree to terms which provide for the investment of the Fund in a manner inconsistent with the first section of the Act of June 24, 1938 (52 Stat. 1037), unless the Tribe first submits a specific waiver of liability on the part of the United States for any loss which may result from such an investment.

(D) The Tribe may, with the approval of the Secretary, alter the economic development plan subject to the conditions set forth in subparagraph (B).

(4) Under no circumstances shall any part of the Fund be distributed to any member of the Tribe unless pursuant to the economic development plan approved by the Secretary under paragraph (3).

(5) As the Fund or any portion thereof is disbursed by the Secretary in accordance with this section, the United States shall have no further trust responsibility to the Tribe or its members with respect to the sums paid, any subsequent expenditures of these sums, or any property other than private settlement lands or services purchased with these sums.

(6) Until the Tribe has submitted and the Secretary has approved the terms of the use of the Fund, the Secretary shall fix the terms for the administration of the portion of the Fund as to which there is no agreement.

(7) Lands or natural resources acquired under this subsection which are located within the settlement lands shall be held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Tribe.

(8) Land or natural resources acquired under this subsection which are located outside of the settlement lands shall be held in fee by the Mashantucket Pequot Tribe, and the United States shall have no further trust responsibility with respect to such land and natural resources. Such land and natural resources shall not be subject to any restriction against alienation under the laws of the United States.

(9) Notwithstanding the provisions of the first section of the Act of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357, chapter 738), as amended, and the first section of the Act of February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421, chapter 307), the Secretary may acquire land or natural resources under this section from the ostensible owner of the land or natural resources only if the Secretary and the ostensible owner of the land or natural resources have agreed upon the identity of the land or natural resources to be sold and upon the purchase price and other terms of sale. Subject to the agreement required by the preceding sentence, the Secretary may institute condemnation proceedings in order to perfect title, satisfactory to the Attorney General, in the United States and condemn interests adverse to the ostensible owner.

(c) For the purpose of subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, any transfer of private settlement lands to which subsection (b) applies shall be deemed to be an involuntary conversion within the meaning of section 1033 of such Code.

(d) The Secretary may not expend on behalf of the Tribe any sums deposited in the Fund established pursuant to subsection (a) of this section unless and until he finds that authorized officials of the Tribe have executed appropriate documents relinquishing all claims to the extent provided by sections 4 and 10 of this Act, including stipulations to the final judicial dismissal with prejudice of its claims.

(e) There is authorized to be appropriated $900,000 to be deposited in the Fund.

JURISDICTION OVER RESERVATION

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding the provision relating to a special election in section 406 of the Act of April 11, 1968 (82 Stat. 80; 25 U.S.C. 1326), the reservation of the Tribe is declared to be Indian country subject to State jurisdiction to the maximum extent provided in title IV of such Act.

LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS: FEDERAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 7. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the constitutionality of this Act may not be drawn into question in any action unless such question has been raised in—

(1) a pleading contained in a complaint filed before the end of the one-hundred-and-eighty-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, or

(2) an answer contained in a reply to a complaint before the end of such period.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, exclusive jurisdiction of any action in which the constitutionality of this Act is drawn into question is vested in the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut.

(c) Any action to which subsection (a) applies and which is brought in the court of any State may be removed by the defendant to the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut.

(d) Except as provided in this Act, no provision of this Act shall be construed to constitute a jurisdictional act, to confer jurisdiction to sue, or to grant implied consent to any Indian, Indian nation, or tribe or band of Indians to sue the United States or any of its officers with respect to the claims extinguished by the operation of this Act.

RESTRICTION AGAINST ALIENATION

SEC. 8. (a) Subject to subsection (b), lands within the reservation which are held in trust by the Secretary for the benefit of the Tribe or which are subject to a Federal restraint against alienation at any time after the date of the enactment of this Act shall be subject to the laws of the United States relating to Indian lands, including section 2116 of the Revised Statutes (25 U.S.C. 177).

(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), the Tribe may lease lands for any term of years to the Mashantucket Pequot Housing Authority, or any successor in interest to such Authority.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL RECOGNITION AND PRIVILEGES

SEC. 9. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Federal recognition is extended to the Tribe. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, all laws and regulations of the United States of general application to Indians or Indian nation, tribes or bands of Indians which are not inconsistent with any specific provision of this Act shall be applicable to the Tribe.

(b) The Tribe shall file with the Secretary a copy of its organic governing document and any amendments thereto. Such instrument must be consistent with the terms of this Act and the Act to Implement the Settlement of the Mashantucket Pequot Indian Land Claim as enacted by the State of Connecticut and approved June 9, 1982.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Tribe and members of the Tribe shall be eligible for all Federal services and benefits furnished to federally recognized Indian tribes as of the date of enactment of this Act.

OTHER CLAIMS DISCHARGED BY THIS ACT

SEC. 10. Except as expressly provided herein, this Act shall constitute a general discharge and release of all obligations of the State of Connecticut and all of its political subdivisions, agencies, departments, and all of the officers or employees thereof arising from any treaty or agreement with, or on behalf of the Tribe or the United States as trustee therefor.

INSEPARABILITY

SEC. 11. In the event that any provision of section 4 of this Act is held invalid, it is the intent of Congress that the entire Act be invalidated. In the event that any other section or provision of this Act is held invalid, it is the intent of Congress that the remaining sections of this Act shall continue in full force and effect.

Mr BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONVEYANCE OF THE LIBERTY SHIP "JOHN W. BROWN"

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next is H.R. 1556 that I wish to proceed to if the minority leader is agreeable.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection on this side.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, then I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 407, H.R. 1556.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1556) to authorize the conveyance of the Liberty ship John W. Brown.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation with an amendment on page 3, line 4, insert:

SEC. 4. Section 202 of the Act of July 12, 1983 (Public Law 98-44), is amended by striking "July 1, 1983," and substituting "August 1, 1983,".

So as to make the bill read:

H.R. 1556

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Transportation (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") may convey, subject to such conditions he deems appropriate and subject to the conditions set forth in section 2, the right, title, and interest of the United States in the vessel John W. Brown to a nonprofit corporation (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "recipient") for use as a merchant marine memorial. If such a conveyance is made, the Secretary shall deliver the vessel to the recipient at the place where the vessel is located on the date of the enactment of this Act, in its present condition, without cost to the United States.

SEC. 2. The conveyance of the vessel John W. Brown under the first section of this Act shall be subject to the following conditions:

(1) The recipient shall use the vessel as a nonprofit merchant marine memorial museum and may not use it for commercial transportation purposes.

(2) If the United States has need for the vessel at a later date, the recipient, at the request of the Secretary, shall make the vessel available to the United States without cost to the United States.

(3) In the event the recipient no longer requires the vessel for use as a merchant marine memorial museum, the recipient shall, at the discretion of the Secretary, reconvey the vessel to the United States in as good a condition as when it was received from the United States, except for ordinary wear and tear, and shall deliver it to the United States at the place where the vessel was delivered to the recipient.

SEC. 3. Nothing in this Act shall require the Secretary to retain this vessel in the Reserve Fleet for a period longer than two years from the date of enactment.

SEC. 4. Section 202 of the Act of July 12, 1983 (Public Law 98-44), is amended by striking "July 1, 1983," and substituting "August 1, 1983,".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 1556) was passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL SCHOOL BUS SAFETY WEEK OF 1983

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 137, which is Calendar Order No. 426, is cleared on this side. I ask the minority leader if he is prepared to clear that item.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, that item has been cleared.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 137.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 137) authorizing and requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating the period from October 2, 1983, through October 8, 1983, as "National Schoolbus Safety Week of 1983.".

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 137) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER INDEFINITELY POSTPONING CONSIDERATION OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 172, NATIONAL SCHOOLBUS SAFETY WEEK OF 1983

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that calendar order No. 427, Senator Joint Resolution 172, which is a Senate companion bill, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ANTI-TAMPERING ACT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 216.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 216) entitled "An Act to amend title 18, United States Code, to combat, deter, and punish individuals who tamper with household products with intent to cause personal injury, death, or other harm, and for other purposes", do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Anti-Tampering Act".

SEC. 2. Chapter 65 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1365. Tampering with consumer products

"(a) Whoever, with reckless disregard for the risk that another person will be placed in danger of death or bodily injury and under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to such risk, tampers with any consumer product that affects interstate or foreign commerce, or the labeling of, or container for, any such product, or attempts to do so, shall—

"(1) in the case of an attempt, be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both;

"(2) if death of an individual results, be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned for any term of years or for life, or both;

"(3) if serious bodily injury to any individual results, be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both; and

"(4) in any other case, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(b) Whoever, with intent to cause serious injury to the business of any person, taints any consumer product or renders materially false or misleading the labeling of, or container for, a consumer product, if such consumer product affects interstate or foreign commerce, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

"(c)(1) Whoever knowingly communicates false information that a consumer product has been tainted, if such product or the results of such communication affect interstate or foreign commerce, and if such tainting, had it occurred, would create a risk of death or bodily injury to another person, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both.

"(2) As used in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the term 'communicates false information' means communicates information that is false and that the communicator knows is false, under circumstances in which the information may reasonably be expected to be believed.

"(d) Whoever knowingly threatens, under circumstances in which the threat may reasonably be expected to be believed, that conduct that, if it occurred, would violate subsection (a) of this section will occur, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(e) Whoever is a party to a conspiracy of two or more persons to commit an offense under subsection (a) of this section, if any of the parties intentionally engages in any conduct in furtherance of such offense, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(f) In addition to any other agency which has authority to investigate violations of this section, the Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Agriculture, respectively, have authority to investigate violations of this section involving a consumer product that is regulated by a provision of law such Administration or Department, as the case may be, administers.

"(g) As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'consumer product' means—

"(A) any 'food', 'drug', 'device', or 'cosmetic', as those terms are respectively defined in section 201 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321); or

"(B) any article, product, or commodity which is customarily produced or distributed for consumption by individuals, or use by individuals for purposes of personal care or in the performance of services ordinarily rendered within the household, and which is designed to be consumerd or expended in the course of such consumption or use;

"(2) the term 'labeling' has the meaning given such term in section 201(m) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321(m));

"(3) the term 'serious bodily injury' means bodily injury which involves—

"(A) a substantial risk of death;

"(B) extreme physical pain;

"(C) protracted and obvious disfigurement; or

"(D) protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty; and

"(4) the term 'bodily injury' means—

"(A) a cut, abrasion, bruise, burn, or disfigurement;

"(B) physical pain;

"(C) illness;

"(D) impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty; or

"(E) any other injury to the body, no matter how temporary.".

SEC. 3. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 65 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1365. Tampering with consumer products.".

SEC. 4. (a) Title 35 of the United States Code is amended by inserting after section 155 the following new section:

"§ 155A. Patent term restoration

"(a) Notwithstanding section 154 of this title, the term of each of the following patents shall be extended in accordance with this section:

"(1) Any patent which encompasses within its scope a composition of matter which is a new drug product, if during the regulatory review of the product by the Federal Food and Drug Administration—

"(A) the Federal Food and Drug Administration notified the patentee, by letter dated February 20, 1976, that such product's new drug application was not approvable under section 505(b)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act;

"(B) in 1977 the patentee submitted to the Federal Food and Drug Administration the results of a health effects test to evaluate the carcinogenic potential of such product;

"(C) the Federal Food and Drug Administration approved, by letter dated December 18, 1979, the new drug application for such product; and

"(D) the Federal Food and Drug Administration approved, by letter dated May 26, 1981, a supplementary application covering the facility for the production of such product.

"(2) Any patent which encompasses within its scope a process for using the composition of matter described in paragraph (1).

"(b) The term of any patent described in subsection (a) shall be extended for a period equal to the period beginning February 20, 1976, and ending May 26, 1981, and such patent shall have the effect as if originally issued with such extended term.

"(c) The patentee of any patent described in subsection (a) of this section shall, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this section, notify the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks of the number of any patent so extended. On receipt of such notice, the Commissioner shall confirm such extension by placing a notice thereof in the offical file of such patent and publishing an appropriate notice of such extension in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 14 of such title 35 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"155A. Patent term restoration.".

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to prohibit certain tampering with consumer products, and for other purposes.".

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, it is with great enthusiasm that I urge my colleagues to concur in the House amendment to S. 216 and vote in favor of final passage of this landmark legislation. This bill, which addresses the heinous crime of product tampering, represents a year of hard work and careful deliberation.

One year ago, as we are all too sadly aware, seven persons met untimely deaths in the city of Chicago after ingesting Tylenol capsules laced with poison. Following that unfortunate event, there was a rash of episodes involving actual or alleged tampering. Most recently, there was a tampering incident involving the Gravymaster product in New Jersey.

In the last Congress, in an attempt to promptly respond to the Tylenol tragedy, a skeletal version of S. 3048, the predecessor of S. 216, was included in a House package sent to the President. Although we were disappointed at that time that the package was vetoed for unrelated reasons, the benefits of further deliberation have been considerable. S. 216 is a vast improvement over the bill which was sent to the President in that, among other things, it covers a wider range of consumer products and contains a business-damage offense.

The House amendment, in which I urge concurrence, resolves the differences between the versions passed by the House and the Senate in May. Most of the differences between the amendment and the Senate bill are technical and editorial improvements. Let me touch upon the major substantive changes which have been made.

The Senate-passed version of S. 216 required that the involved product be in, intended to be in, or continue to affect interstate or foreign commerce. The House amendment requires that the product affect commerce. As a practical matter, there is no substantive difference between these approaches and the House language is less cumbersome.

Under section 1 of title 1 of the United States Code, the present tense includes the future. Thus, section 1356(a), when enacted. will cover products which affect, or which will effect, commerce. This will include all cases where the offender intends to place the tainted product back on the drugstore shelf or into a restaurant. However, it will not, under any circumstances, cover the purely domestic situation where the tamperer intendes to kill a family member or acquaintance. These are situations which are clearly within the purview of State and local homicide laws and Federal intervention here would certainly not be appropriate.

The second major difference involves the state of mind which the prosecution would be required to prove in connection with the tampering offense. The language which passed the Senate required an intent to kill, injure or otherwise endanger the health or safety of any person, which was defined to include all situations where the "person knows or has reason to know that the normal and usual consequences of the * * * tampering would be to kill, injure, or otherwise endanger the health or safety of any person." The House amendment requires a showing of reckless disregard for the risk that another person will be placed in danger of death or bodily injury and under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to such risk. While this is a slightly more demanding state of mind for the jury to find in these cases, I do not believe that the change will make much practical difference. If a person has reason to know that the normal consequence of his tempering activity will be death or injury, it is hard to imagine how he would not be acting with the requisite reckless disregard and extreme indifference.

With one notable exception, the House amendment is generally designed to take the higher of the penalties in the two versions across the board. Thus, for instance, there will be a $100,000 fine where serious bodily injury results. The one case where the lower penalty from the House bill was retained is the 5-year term of imprisonment for threatening to commit a tampering offense. Although this is clearly a serious crime, it would not be appropriate if the term of imprisonment were higher than that imposed for threatening to assassinate the President under 18 United States Code 871(a).

Under the Senate version, the Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Agriculture would have been granted concurrent jurisdiction over tampering offenses which would also violate title 21. The House amendment would authorize concurrent jurisdiction over all tampering-related offenses involving products within their respective jurisdictions. Their involvement should not be limited because of title 21 distinctions which were not crafted with the efficient investigation of tampering situations in mind. We are aware of no objection to this change.

When this body passed S. 216 in May, the bill included a cumbersome definition of food, which referenced, in addition to the Food and Drug Act definition, definitions of products such as meat and poultry in related acts. Upon careful examination, it was determined that such a list was decidedly unnecessary.

The definition of food in the Food and Drug Act covers first, articles used for food or drink for man or other animals, second, chewing gum, and third, articles used for components of any such articles. This very broad definition clearly incorporates meat, meat food products, poultry, poultry products, eggs, and egg products, as they are defined elsewhere. While the regulatory aspects of the Food and Drug Act are admittedly applicable to only some of the products covered under the definition of food in that act, those limitations are not incorporated by references in the House amendment.

The universe of products covered under the House amendment is slightly larger than that contained in the bill which we passed in May. In addition to food, drugs, cosmetics, and devices, S. 216 included language taken from the Fair Packaging Act. The House amendment makes two modifications which are appropriate in the tampering context. First, the prosecution will not be required to show that the product is produced or distributed for sale through retail sales agencies or instrumentalities. This will insure that products which are produced for restaurants, for instance, will also be covered. Second, it covers products designed to be expended in the course of consumption or use, rather than products usually so expended. This will be a clearer requirement for the prosecution to prove.

The fundamental difference between the tampering bills passed by the House and the Senate is that the latter version penalized tampering for the purpose of causing damage to the business of another person. The urgent need for such an offense is clearly demonstrated by the Gravymaster case, where the offender publicly announced his intention to damage that business. Furthermore, the committee received an overwhelming amount of testimony in strong support of such a provision.

A business damage provision encompassing conduct which is not a threat to life and limb is appropriate for three reasons. First, the resulting financial losses to a business, including investigation costs alone, could be enormous. Second, the effect on consumer buying would be substantial and copycats would be encouraged by the publicity. Third, an offender who engages in conduct designed to cause significant or serious damage to a business is acting as reprehensibly as one who tosses an explosive into an empty building or commits embezzlement. Individuals who step outside the boundaries of fair, vigorous, and lawful competition, and maliciously set out to ruin the business of another should be punished severely, irrespective of their imaginative means.

The House amendment offense differs from the Senate-passed version in several respects. First, it requires an intent to cause serious damage, rather than significant damage. No substantive difference is intended between these terms, both of which are designed to exclude situations where the offender desired merely to cause mild annoyance. It is important to note, however, that the prosecution need not prove that the offense actually resulted in any damage, such as a product recall. It need only show that significant damage was intended by the offender. As a result, the offense will cover the situation where the offender is apprehended before an actual recall takes place.

The second difference between the original and amended versions of the offense is that the penalties are lowered to 3 years of imprisonment and/or $10,000. This decrease is appropriate in light of the fact that the offense is primarily intended to cover tampering incidents directed at a business which do not create a risk of death or injury. Those which do, irrespective of the offender's ultimate motive, would be covered under the more severe penalties provided in section 1365(a). These penalties, which are identical to those authorized under the Food and Drug Act for fraudulent adulteration, should prove a sufficiently strong deterrent.

The House amendment deletes the references to tainting and material misbranding in the basic tampering offense, but retains them in the business-damage offense. Since the basic offense involves a risk of death or injury, the tampering activity will necessarily encompass a tainting or material label alteration, and those requirements need not be spelled out. Where no such risk is required as in the business damage provision, references to tainting and material changes and appropriate for the reasons outlined in the Senate Judiciary Committee report to accompany S. 216.

Finally, the House amendment differs from the Senate-passed version in that the three false information offenses included in the latter have been consolidated, and the highest penalties retained. The prosecution is no longer required to prove that the conduct was engaged in willfully and maliciously. This is unduly burdensome on the prosecution, particularly in light of the fact that the damage caused by false information is unrelated to the intensity of the declarant's motives. To insure that this deletion does not have any unfair harsh results, there is a new requirement that the alleged tainting involve a risk of death or bodily injury.

By specifying that the allegation must relate to the tainting of the product, rather than to an offense under subsection (a), the House amendment, like the original Pryor amendment, insures that the offender will not escape because he did not clearly allege that another individual had tampered with the product. Thus, false remarks such as there is a nail in my hotdog, or untrue allegations that a product contains rodent hairs, will clearly be covered.

The false information provision in the Senate-passed bill referenced the commerce nexus which was included in section 1365(a). The House amendment retains this nexus by requiring that the false information relate to a product which affects commerce. However, it also authorizes prosecution where the results of the false communication affect commerce. Allegations about a tainted product which came to rest in the home would not involve a product which affects commerce. However, if that same false communication led to the removal of the product from a drugstore shelf, it would be covered under the expanded commerce connection.

The House amendment includes a requirement in both the threat and false information offenses that the communication be such that under the circumstances, it would reasonably be expected to be believed. This addition does not limit either offense in any way, since it merely codifies a requirement that would be judicially imposed under case law which has developed in connection with existing air hijacking and Presidential assassination threat and false information offenses. Similarly, certain case law elements of the conspiracy offense, which were not spelled out in the Senate-passed version, are specified in the House amendment.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the House amendment includes, with minor technical changes, the Airco amendment which was successfully sponsored on this floor by Senator JOHN EAST and myself in May. This provided limited patent term restoration to a company which suffered unfairly at the hands of the Washington bureaucracy. I am hopeful that we will be able to report the more comprehensive Patent Term Restoration Act of 1983 out of the Committee on the Judiciary in the very near future, so that other companies will enjoy a fairer patent term under our Federal laws. This measure, in my view, has been delayed for far too long and I pledge my determined cooperation in the effort to bring it out of the Committee on the Judiciary before much more time has passed.

Mr. President, in the memory of those who died 1 year ago and in the spirit of protecting other innocent consumers and business people, I strongly urge this body to concur in the House amendment and to pass S. 216 immediately.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I cannot adequately convey how pleased I am with the legislation we are about to pass. I have been keenly interested in this bill from the start, and I know the extraordinary work that the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and my good friend, Senator THURMOND, performed to bring us here today. I also know that Senator THURMOND's staff worked tirelessly to improve the bill at all stages of its consideration and to bring about a fair and effective compromise between the Senate and House versions of the bill.

There is one small question of interpretation that would be well to clear up. The words "training," "taint," and "tainted" are used in sections 1365 (b) and (c). In the Senate-passed bill, they were used in conjunction with the word "tampering." I believe it would be appropriate to clarify the meaning of these terms, since they appear alone.

The definition of taint is discussed at length on page 7 of the Senate Judiciary Committee report on S. 216 (No. 98-69). The explanation in the last two paragraphs made it clear to me that tainting does not imply that the offensive or contaminating substance which is added to the consumer product must be dangerous. It might or might not be. The use of the term "tainting" does not require proof of an associated danger. Such proof is only required where it is specifically stated. Let me give a couple of examples on point.

Where someone taints milk by pouring dye into it with intent to seriously injure a dairy company, and the product affects commerce, a section 1365(b) offense has been committed, even though there is no risk of death or bodily injury.

By contrast, if a false allegation is made that milk is tainted with dye, it would not constitute an offense under section 1365(c) because there is no such risk. This is due to the fact that section 1365(c), unlike section 1365(b), specifically requires the risk of death or bodily injury. Where someone communicates false information that there are nails inside a batch of hot dogs, and the product or the communication affects commerce, we have a false information offense under section 1365(c), because of the risk that this tainting might cause death or bodily injury.

Mr. THURMOND. I appreciate the kind words from my distinguished colleague from the State of Vermont. His assistance and the work of his able staff on this important legislation have facilitated its consideration and improved our final product.

My colleague's understanding of the meaning of taint as used in the House amendment is the same as my own. It is the general understanding of everyone who has considered the matter.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Senator for this clarification.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO THE INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION AND EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next I propose to go to the consideration of S. 1530, if the minority leader has no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COHEN). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, then I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate S. 1530, Calendar Order No. 417.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1530) to make technical amendments to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act and other acts.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2262

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to be offered on behalf of the distinguished junior Senator from Alaska (Mr. MURKOWSKI) and I send it to the desk and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) on behalf of Mr. MURKOWSKI proposes an amendment numbered 2262.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the conclusion of the parentheses on line 8, page 1, strike the period, quotation mark, and second period and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That a grant agreement or a cooperative agreement may be utilized in lieu of a contract under sections 102 and 103 of this Act when mutually agreed to by the appropriate Secretary and the tribal organization involved."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, S. 1530 is a bill to make technical amendments to three laws enacted in the 97th Congress and a fourth law enacted in the 93d Congress. Two of the amendments correct land descriptions situated in the State of Kansas and the State of Arizona. A third amendment corrects certain references to the short title of an amendment to the Federal statute of limiations which was passed last year. The fourth amendment provides a new section to Public Law 93-638.

Mr. President, this bill is identical to S. 973 which was passed by both the Senate and the House of Representatives earlier in this session of Congress with the exception of an amendment of Senator HELMS offered on the floor of the Senate which triggered a veto. In his veto message, the President stated that he had no objection to the technical amendments provided in this bill and he urged their prompt enactment.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, section 1 of S. 1530 provides that the provisions of Public Law 93-638, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act shall not be subject to the requirements of the Federal Grant and Cooperative Agreement Act. There is concern that this provision could be construed to preclude Indian tribes, Alaskan Native villages, regional corporations or other Indian entities from utilizing a grant or cooperative agreement when they deem it to their best advantage. It is my understanding that such agreements are in common usage in Alaska. The amendment I have sent to the desk does not alter the provisions of section 1 of S. 1530, but will add a proviso that will allow use of a grant agreement or a cooperative agreement in lieu of a contract when it is mutually agreed to by the appropriate secretary and the tribal or Indian organizations involved.

Mr. President, I would urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I have consulted with my colleague on this amendment and pose no objection to its adoption. Title I of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act contains authority at this time for grants to tribal organizations for a wide variety of activities. The regulations implemeting this provision of the act tend to place limits on the purposes for which grants may be given which may be more narrow than originally intended by the act. The amendment proposed by Senator MURKOWSKI will make clear that grants or cooperative agreements may be utilized by any agency with programs that are subject to Public Law 93-638. I would stress, however, that such grants or cooperative agreements may not be forced upon the tribes, but may only be utilized with the mutual agreement of the Indian organization involved. Public Law 93-638 was explicit in expressing its intent that the primary mechanism for tribal assumption of program management responsibility was to be the contract mechanism. The amendment proposed in section 1 of S. 1530 and the amendment of Senator MURKOWSKI in no way limits the right of tribes to contract under Public Law 96-638. The amendments simply open an additional avenue of funding if the tribes or Indian entities so desire.

Mr. President, I believe this is good legislation and I urge my colleagues to support this bill with the Murkowski amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment (No. 2262) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (S. 1530) was passed, as follows:

S. 1530

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638; 88 Stat. 2203) is amended by inserting after section 8 the following new section:

"SEC. 9. That provisions of this Act shall not be subject to the requirements of the Federal Grant and Cooperative Agreement Act of 1977 (Public Law 95-224; 92 Stat. 3): Provided, That a grant agreement or a cooperative agreement may be utilized in lieu of a contract under sections 102 and 103 of this Act when mutually agreed to by the appropriate Secretary and the tribal organization involved.".

SEC. 2. The Act of October 15, 1982 (Public Law 97-344; 96 Stat. 1645), relating to certain restricted land in Kansas, is amended by striking out "the southeast quarter northwest quarter" in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "the south 20 acres of the east 60 acres of the northwest quarter".

SEC. 3. The first section of Public Law 97-386, relating to the reservation of the Pascua Yaqui Tribe of Arizona, is amended by inserting "located in township 15 south, range 12 east, Gila and Salt River Meridian," after "tracts of lands".

SEC. 4. (a) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 2415 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Indian Claims Act of 1982" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Indian Claims Limitation Act of 1982".

(b) The last proviso in the first paragraph under the heading "Administrative Provisions", relating to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, of title I of Public Law 97-394 is amended by striking out "The following" and inserting in lieu thereof "Sections 2 through 6 of this Act".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I propose to go to the consideration of S. 1009, but before I can I also propose to go to the consideration of the budget waiver, which is Senate Resolution 195.

Could the minority leader clear both of those measures at this time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, both have been cleared.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, first, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the budget waiver, Calendar Order No. 397, Senate Resolution 195.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 195) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 1009.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 195

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 1009. Such waiver is necessary because S. 1009 authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in fiscal year 1984, and such bill was not reported on or before the appropriate date required under section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for such authorizations.

The waiver of section 402(a) if necessary to permit congressional consideration of statutory authority for the agencies of the United States Government.

S. 1009 provides an authorization for fiscal year 1984 of such sums as may be necessary for reauthorization of the Federal physicians comparability allowances program, first authorized in 1978.

FEDERAL PHYSICIANS COMPARABILITY ALLOWANCES

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate S. 1009.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1009) to reauthorize Federal physicians comparability allowances.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Governmental Affairs with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) the second sentence of section 5948(d) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "No agreement shall be entered into under this section later than September 30, 1987, nor shall any agreement cover a period of service extending beyond September 30, 1989.".

(b) Section 3 of the Federal Physicians Comparability Allowance Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. 5948 note) is amended by striking out "September 30, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1989".

SEC. 2. Section 5383(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "4507, 5382, 5384, and 5948" and inserting in lieu thereof "5382 and 5948".

SEC. 3. (a) Notwithstanding section 5383(b) of title 5, United States Code, the aggregate amount paid for fiscal year 1982 under sections 4507, 5382, 5384, and 5948 of such title to an individual specified under column I below may exceed the amount of the annual rate payable for positions at level I of the Executive Schedule in effect at the end of such fiscal year by not more than the amount specified under column II below opposite the name of such individual:

Column I:	Column II:
Dr. Larry Silver	$1,988.66
Dr. Louis Sokoloff	$5,988.66
Dr. Ichiji Tasaki	$1,488.66
Dr. Paul D. Parkman	$1,455.46
Dr. Allan Forbes	$1,680.91
Dr. Roscoe Brady	$1,488.66
Dr. Martin Cummings	$3,988.66
Dr. Manning Feinleib	$1,488.66
Dr. D. C. Gajdusek	$1,488.66
Dr. Carl Kupfer	$1,988.66
Dr. Toichiro Kuwabara	$1,488.66
Dr. Lester Salans	$1,488.66
Dr. Henry Webster	$1,488.66

(b) Subject to the limitation on the aggregate amounts computed under subsection (a), the amount of any overpayment under section 538(b) of title 5, United States Code, collected during fiscal years 1982 and 1983 from any individual specified in subsection (a) shall be paid to such individual.

(c) For the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, any amounts paid for fiscal year 1982 under subsections (a) and (b) of this Act shall be deemed to have been paid on the date such amounts would have been paid but for the limitation set forth in section 5383(b) of title 5, United States Code.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate H.R. 2077, the House companion measure.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2077) to amend title 5, United States Code to extend the Federal Physicians Comparability Allowance Act of 1978, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 2077 and insert the language of S. 1009.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 2077), as amended, was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1009 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO INDEFINITELY POSTPONE H.R. 1043, SMALL BUSINESS PROCUREMENT INFORMATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if the minority leader concurs, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 1043, which is now at the desk, be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BYRD. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HENRY M. JACKSON FOUNDATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF MILITARY MEDICINE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next I propose to go to S. 1894, which is Calendar Order No. 411, if the minority leader does not object.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1894) to designate the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine as the "Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine", and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2263

(Purpose: To amend references in title 10, United States Code, to the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine)

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), on behalf of Mr. TOWER, proposes an amendment numbered 2263.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Section 178 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by inserting "The Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation" in the section heading; and

(B) by inserting "Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine" in subsection (a).

(2) The item in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 7 of such title relating to section 178 is amended to read as follows:

"178. The Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine.".

(b) Section 2113(j) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine" each place it appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2263) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1894

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine established pursuant to section 178 of title 10, United States Code, shall be designated and hereafter known as the "Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine", in honor of the late Henry M. Jackson, United States Senator from the State of Washington. Any reference to the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine in any law, regulation, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be held and considered to be a reference to the "Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine".

(b) The Council of Directors referred to in subsection (c) of section 178 of such title shall take such action as is necesary under the Corporations and Associations Articles of the State of Maryland to amend the corporate name of the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine established under such section to reflect the designation made by the first sentence of subsection (a).

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Section 178 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by inserting "The Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation" in the section heading; and

(B) by inserting "The Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine" in subsection (a).

(2) The item in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 7 of such title relating to section 178 is amended to read as follows:

"178. The Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine.".

(b) Section 2113(j) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine" each place it appears.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, S. 1837 is cleared on this side, if the minority leader is prepared to consider it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, S. 1837 is cleared on this side.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

HENRY M. JACKSON FEDERAL BUILDING

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 431, S. 1837.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1837) to designate the Federal building in Seattle, Washington, as the "Henry M. Jackson Federal Building."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1837

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the building located at 915 Second Avenue, Seattle, Washington, known as the Federal Building, shall hereafter be known and designated as the "Henry M. Jackson Federal Building". Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, record, or other paper of the United States to that building shall be deemed to be a reference to the "Henry M. Jackson Federal Building".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, S. 552 appears to be cleared on this side. Is the minority leader prepared to clear it, as well?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the measure has been cleared on this side.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

GEORGE W. WHITEHURST FEDERAL COURT BUILDING

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 432, S. 552.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 552) to designate the Federal building in Fort Myers, Florida, as the "George W. Whitehurst Federal Court Building."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works with amendments as follows:

On page 1, line 5, strike "George W. Whitehurst Federal Court Building" and insert "George W. Whitehurst Federal Building and United States Courthouse".

On page 2, after line 4, add:

SEC. 2. Section 3(b) of Public Law 98-1 is amended by striking the words "six months" and substituting therefor "two years."

So as to make the bill read:

S. 552

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the building located at 2301 First Street, Fort Myers, Florida, known as the Federal Building, shall hereafter be known and designated as the "George W. Whitehurst Federal Building and United States Courthouse". Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, record, or other paper of the United States to that building shall be deemed to be a reference to the "George W. Whitehurst Federal Court Building".

SEC. 2. Section 3(b) of Public Law 98-1 is amended by striking the words "six months" and substituting therefor "two years".

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to designate the Federal Building in Fort Myers, Florida, as the 'George W. Whitehurst Federal Building and United States Courthouse'.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to en bloc.

The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to designate the Federal Building in Fort Myers, Florida, as the 'George W. Whitehurst Federal Building and United States Courthouse'.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NAVAL ARCTIC RESEARCH LABORATORY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution (S.J. Res. 175) on behalf of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. MURKOWSKI) and I ask unanimous consent that it be placed on the calendar.

Mr. BYRD. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

NAVAL ARCTIC RESEARCH LABORATORY

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, the purpose of this joint resolution is quite simple. It will prevent the Navy from disposing of the Naval Arctic Research Laboratory (NARL) at Barrow, Alaska, until the full range of alternative uses for the facility can be explored.

It will cost millions of dollars to dismantle and dispose of NARL as the Navy is currently planning. I have been informed that costs totaling some $420,000 for a variety of preliminary demolition studies will be incurrred before the actual demolition, expected to cost between $10 and $20 million, can even begin.

I believe it is imprudent to spend these funds when Congress is actively considering legislation to coordinate, upgrade, and fund U.S. research activities in the Arctic. The Senate has passed this legislation, the Arctic Research and Policy Act, in both 97th and 98th Congresses. I am informed that the House Science and Technology Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology is preparing to mark up the bill in the very near future. After this legislation is enacted, it is possible that a Federal research or support facility near Barrow will be determined to be necessary. If the Navy proceeds with its disposal plans, we may find ourselves in the embarrassing position of having to rebuild a facility very similar to NARL 3 or 4 years down the road.

I might also mention that there are other alternatives for the use of the NARL facilities. One proposal by the local Native village corporation would free the Navy from future obligations, put the facility to immediate and productive use, and would result in a net savings to the Treasury.

I believe we need to insure ourselves an opportunity to explore these alternatives, and I would ask for the support of my colleagues in the adoption of this joint resolution.

Thank you Mr. President.●

ORDER FOR H.R. 3222 TO BE PRINTED WITH COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT), I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 3222, the Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary appropriations bill, be printed with the committee recommendations as submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on today's Executive Calendar, the items under nominations on page 1, the nominations beginning with the heading Army on page 2, the nominations on page 3, together with the nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Air Force have been cleared on this side for action at this time. One item, Calendar No. 316, is not available at this time since I believe there is no report yet to accompany that nomination. But if there is no problem on the minority side, I would like to consider that one as well.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this side of the aisle has no objection to the nominees beginning with Department of Commerce.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering nominations beginning with Calendar Order 315 under Department of Commerce, which is Richard L. McElheny, of Arizona, to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce; to include all of the nominations of page 2, which are Calendar Nos. 316, 317, 318, and 319; all of the nominations on page 3, which are Calendar Nos. 319, 320, and 321, and the nominations placed on the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Richard L. McElHeny, of Arizona, to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

BOARD FOR INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Michael Novak, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Board for International Broadcasting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the nominations be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remainder of the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

The nominations confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Terence A. Todman, of the Virgin Islands, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Career Minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Denmark.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE AIR FORCE

Air Force nominations beginning Philip N. Brown, and ending Sal A. Leone, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 20, 1983.

Air Force nominations beginning Gary J. Abbate, and ending Wayne R. Zimmerman, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 20, 1983.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to move once to reconsider the votes by which all nominations were confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I make that motion, Mr. President,

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT EXTENSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am told there is one other item that can be taken care of on this side, S. 1852. Is the minority leader prepared to consider that bill?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 433, S. 1852.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1852) to extend the expiration date of the Defense Production Act of 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs with amendments, as follows:

On page 2, line 17, after "capability", insert "which is reasonably determined to be available for national defense";

On page 3, line 13, after "capability", insert "which is reasonably determined to be available for national defense";

On page 3, line 19, strike "borrower.", and insert "borrower.";

On page 3, line 22, strike "take an action", and insert "execute a contract";

On page 4, line 11, after "capability", insert "which is reasonably determined to be available for national defense";

On page 4, line 24, strike "such guarantee", and insert "the industrial resources shortfall which such guarantee is intended to correct";

On page 5, line 3, strike "explaining", through and including "law" on line 5, and insert the following:

demonstrating that the budget submission is in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a)(3) of this section, and if guarantees to correct such industrial resource shortfall have been authorized by law.".

On page 5, strike line 13, through and including "law" on line 17, and insert the following:

the industrial resource shortfall which such loan is intended to correct has been identified in the budget, or amendments thereto, submitted to the Congress, accompanied by a statement from the President demonstrating that the budget submission is in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (3) of this section, and unless such loans to correct such industrial resource shortfall have been authorized by law".

On page 6, line 5, strike "such action", and insert "the industrial shortfall which such action is intended to correct";

On page 6, line 9, strike "explaining", through and including "law" on line 11, and insert the following:

demonstrating that the budget submission is in accordance with the provisions of the preceding sentence, and unless actions to correct such industrial resource shortfall have been authorized by law.".

So as to make the bill read:

S. 1852

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of section 717(a) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2166(a)) is amended by striking out "September 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1988".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 301(a) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2091(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(3) A guarantee may be entered into under this section only if the President determines that—

"(A) the guaranteed contract or operation is for a material, or the performance of a service, that is essential to the national defense;

"(B) without the guarantee, United States industry cannot reasonably be expected to provide the capability for the needed material or service in a timely manner.

"(C) the guarantee is the most cost-effective, expedient, and practical alternative for meeting the need;

"(D) the United States national defense demand is equal to or greater than the output of domestic industrial capability which is reasonably determined to be available for national defense, including the output to be established through the guarantee; and

"(E) the material or service of the guaranteed contract has been identified in a specification agreed to by the United States and the contractor.".

(b) Section 302 of such Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2092) is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence the following: ", and (3) no such loan may be made unless the President determines that—

"(A) the loan is for the expansion of capacity, the development of a technological process, or the production of materials essential to the national defense;

"(B) without the loan, United States industry cannot reasonably be expected to provide the needed capacity, technological processes or materials in a timely manner;

"(C) the loan is the most cost-effective, expedient, and practical alternative method for meeting the need;

"(D) the United States national defense demand is equal to or greater than domestic industrial capability which is reasonably determined to be available for national defense, including the output to be established through the loan; and

"(E) the material or service has been identified in a specification agreed to by the United States and the borrower".

(c) Section 303(a) of such Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2093(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The President may not execute a contract under this subsection unless he determines that—

"(1) the mineral, metal, or material is essential to the national defense;

"(2) without Presidential action under authority of this section, United States industry cannot reasonably be expected to provide the capability for the needed mineral, metal, or material in a timely manner;

"(3) purchases, purchase commitments, or other action pursuant to this section are the most cost-effective, expedient, and practical alternative method for meeting the need;

"(4) the United States national defense demand for the mineral, metal, or material is equal to or greater than the output of domestic industrial capability which is reasonably determined to be available for national defense, including the output to be established through the purchase, purchase commitment, or other action; and

"(5) the mineral, metal or material has been identified in a specification agreed to by the United States and the contractor.".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 301(e)(1) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2091(e)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Except during periods of national emergency declared by the Congress or the President, a guarantee may be made under this section only if the industrial resource shortfall which such guarantee is intended to correct has been identified in the budget, or amendments thereto, submitted to the Congress, accompanied by a statement from the President demonstrating that the budget submission is in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a)(3) of this section, and if guarantees to correct such industrial resource shortfall have been authorized by law.".

(b) Section 302(2) of such Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2092(2)) is amended to read as follows: "(2) no such loan may be made under this section, except during periods of national emergency declared by the Congress or the President, unless the industrial resource shortfall which such loan is intended to correct has been identified in the budget, or amendments thereto, submitted to the Congress, accompanied by a statement from the President demonstrating that the budget submission is in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (3) of this section, and unless such loans to correct such industrial resource shortfall have been authorized by law".

(c) Section 303(a) of such Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2093(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Except during periods of national emergency declared by the President or the Congress, the President shall take no action under authority of this section unless the industrial resource shortfall which such action is intended to correct has been identified in the budget, or amendments thereto, submitted to the Congress accompanied by a statement from the President demonstrating that the budget submission is in accordance with the provisions of the preceding sentence, and unless actions to correct such industrial resource shortfall have been authorized by law.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Without objection, the amendments are considered and agreed to en bloc.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agree to.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the transaction of routine morning business be extended sufficient to permit the recognition of the Senator from New Jersey for a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE U.S. CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I cannot let this day go by without noting my concern that we have failed to act on a matter of great importance to me and to millions of other Americans: The continuation of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Although I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, I have followed with great interest the efforts to reach a compromise on the membership of the Commission. A proposal is now before the President but he has not yet given his approval. Because of that uncertainty, the Judiciary Committee did not vote out the compromise.

Unfortunately, the issue has too frequently been portrayed as a fight over specific members of the Commission. As far as I am concerned, nothing can be further from the truth.

I am not here today to say that current members of the Commission whom the President wishes to fire are more or less qualified than the members the President wishes to appoint. I know and have the deepest respect for one of the President's nominees, Morris Abram. But individual qualifications are not the issue.

The first and most immediate question is whether the Civil Rights Commission will survive at all. The next question is whether it will survive as the credible, independent institution that every President and every Congress since its creation has pledged to preserve.

The authorization for the Commission runs out at midnight tonight. The statute itself, I understand, provides 60 days after this expiration date for the Commission to wind down activities. I do not intend to stand idly by and watch the Civil Rights Commission wind down.

If by early next week the President has not given his support to the compromise reached by the Judiciary Committee, I hope a sufficient number of my Republican colleagues will join with Members of my party to make clear that the Senate will not turn back the clock on the progress we have made in civil rights.

Our lack of action on the reauthorization of the Civil Rights Commission is not a record to be proud of. But the President's actions to obstruct action can simply no longer be tolerated.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, the other body will turn to the consideration soon of the conference report on the continuing resolution, I am told between 4:30 and 5 p.m. I am also advised that it will be at least 5 p.m. or more likely 5:30 before that measure reaches us.

I am also advised that the conferees on the unemployment compensation matter have not yet met. We must do the conference report on that matter this evening.

It seems to me the better part of discretion suggests we recess the Senate to await the outcome fo the House on those two matters.

Therefore, if the minority leader has no objection, in a moment I will make a request that the Senate stand in recess. At this point, I yield to the minority leader.

RECESS UNTIL 5:30 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 5:30 p.m.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 4:17 p.m., recessed until 5:30 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. STEVENS).

RECESS UNTIL 6 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have been advised that the House has not yet finished action on the items in disagreement accompanying the conference report on the continuing resolution. I believe they have done three and maybe have two more to go. I get mixed signals on how long it will take, but I think we could safely go out until 6 p.m. Therefore, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 6 p.m.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 5:31 p.m., recessed until 6 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. COCHRAN).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair in his capacity as a Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1984—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the conference report on the continuing resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be stated.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana reserves the right to object.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the conference report, as I understand it, references the Interior appropriations as agreed to in the conference concluded yesterday. Is that correct?

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator state that again? I am sorry. I was listening to a staff member.

Mr. MELCHER. This conference report references and uses the figures agreed to in the Interior appropriations conference committee that was concluded yesterday; is that correct?

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MELCHER. Does the language included in that conference report on Interior contain the provisions on the Bumpers amendment dealing with coal leasing?

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot answer that question directly. I can tell the Senator that we have included in the resolution the Interior conference report, with the exception of the provision relating to the date. Under this provision, it states:

"Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1984, notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, except section 102," which is the date "such sums as may be necessary for programs, projects, or activities provided for in such act," which was the Interior Appropriation Act "to the extent and in the manner provided for in the conference report and joint explanatory statement of the committee of conference filed in the House of Representatives, as if such act had been enacted into law."

So that it is the sums necessary for the projects, programs, and activities set forth in the act that are incorporated by reference.

Mr. MELCHER. Perhaps I could review that language. I would like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STEVENS. I would be happy to suggest the absence of a quorum and have a discussion with the Senator. I do not think the problem he perceives exists, but I want to be fair about it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I yield to my friend from Montana so he may further explain his situation here and we can clarify this matter for him before we proceed with the conference report.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I thank the assistant majority leader for yielding to me. I will be very brief.

Our problem in Montana arose on the Interior appropriations bill regarding the moratorium on Federal coal leasing. At the time the Bumpers amendment was offered, I asked Senator BUMPERS if his amendment would leave maintenance tracts of Federal coal available for mining operations that we are mining now and would need at some point a maintenance tract in order to keep a steady planning and a steady progressive arrangement for their mining operation. Senator BUMPERS told me that, yes, maintenance tracts would be exempted from the moratorium and I was satisfied at that point. He later told me he was in error after we had adopted the amendment. We suggested language that would straighten out the error and leave maintenance tracts available for ongoing coal mining operations.

The fact was, however, in the conference, the House insisted that that not be changed and so we are faced with a dilemma in Montana of possibly needing maintenance tracts for the Montana Power Western Energy operation of a coal strip in Montana.

I have only brought this matter to the attention of the Senate at this time because of the fact, within this conference report on the continuing resolution, there is reference to the amounts and sums of money that are in the Interior appropriations conference report, which we have not acted upon yet.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me state to the Senator my understanding of what has been done. This is a continuing resolution to provide internal funding for the agencies of the Government until November 10. The provision the Senator is questioning that relates to the Interior Department takes the conference report on Interior and related agencies that is pending before both Houses and adopts it by reference for the purpose of providing guidance on the expenditure of the sums that may be necessary in this interim period.

But there is no intention in this agreement on the continuing resolution to adopt by reference that conference report on Interior and related agencies and adopt into permanent law all of the provisions that are in that pending conference report.

It is only to the extent—and if you will examine it you will see—that such sums as may be necessary for programs, projects or activities provided for in that act, to the extent and manner provided in the conference report as if such act had been enacted into law.

We are not foreclosing consideration of the Interior conference report during the period between now and November 10. As a matter of fact, we have every hope that that conference report will become law during this period and that the dispute that the Senator mentions can be resolved in connection with that conference report. We are not prepared to debate that conference report now. I hope the Senator would realize that that conference report will be before us.

It is a matter that can be pursued in connection with the Interior conference report itself. This reference is for the purpose of providing guidance as to how the moneys that are made available to the Interior Department and these related agencies can be used for this interim period between now and November 10.

I do not know if the Senator from Wisconsin would agree with that, but that was my understanding.

If you look at the defense portion, for example, that I happened to manage as part of my job as chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense, it relates to the 1983 appropriation's bill in terms of the funds that can be expended between now and November 10.

So there are different standards for each agency and each department. This standard for the Interior Department is the conference report pending before the Congress, but we do not foreclose the Senator from raising the point he wishes to raise about any amendment or any portion of the conference report on the Interior appropriations bill when it is presented to the Congress.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the assistant majority leader for his explanation. I feel sure that nothing in the next 45 days would be disadvantageous to this problem under any circumstances. As long as we have separate action on the Interior appropriations conference report, my discussion can be had at that time on the Montana problem.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I renew my request that the Chair lay before the Senate the conference report on House Joint Resolution 368, the continuing resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of today, September 30, 1983.)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, members of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees met this morning at 10 a.m., to confer on the disagreeing votes of the two bodies on House Joint Resolution 368, the continuing resolution for fiscal year 1984. Because of the outstanding cooperation of all Senators in withholding amendments to that measure, we went to conference with only 26 Senate amendments. The majority of those were technical in nature, dealing with section and subsection changes and conforming amendments.

I can report to the Senate on behalf of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee—and I think the Senate owes a great debt to Senator HATFIELD for the manner in which he handled this—that the House conferees were delighted with the Senate's restraint, as we were with theirs, and we all agreed that we were dealing with a continuing resolution in the manner that it should be dealt with and not in the wee hours of the late night on the deadline before the current appropriations expired.

The conference agreed to several changes in the spending rates provided in this continuing resolution, which will expire on November 10, the date proposed by the Senate. The spending rates for the Interior, military construction, and District of Columbia bills are set at the levels established by the conference agreements on those three bills. The rate for Commerce is at the lower of the two bills, with some exceptions and that is also the case for the Labor-HHS-education bill. Agriculture is funded at the level of the House bill, with some exceptions, and defense is pegged at an annual rate of $247,000,000,000—which is approximately the level of the House subcommittee bill that was reported to the full committee—with a special provision of $5,000,000 for activities concerning the 1984 Olympic games in Los Angeles. The rates for treasury and foreign operations were not amended by the Senate, and were not in conference. The Treasury bill is at the current rate, while the foreign operations bill is at the lower of the current rate of the budget request.

The net result of these actions in conference produces an annualized spending total for the life of this resolution that is $6,724,338,000 below the level passed by the Senate. The reduction in the spending level for defense accounts for $6.000,000,000 of that difference, while nondefense spending is $724,338,000 below that passed by the Senate. The administration has stated that on an overall funding basis, they will support this resolution.

All of these spending levels are established ony for the life of the resolution, which will expire on November 10. As the regular appropriations bills are enacted into law, they will fall out from under the coverage of this CR.

I believe that summarizes the pertinent elements of the conference agreement.

I will be happy to yield to my good friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I thank the assistant majority leader for yielding.

Mr. President, I am delighted that we have reverted to the once common practice of treating the continuing resolution as a simple housekeeping measure to keep the Government functioning until we can pass all the regular appropriations bills. I think the chairman of the Appropriations Committees in both Houses deserve a great deal of credit for resisting amendments that could have turned the resolution into a grab bag of special interest legislation of the kind that has become all too familiar to this body. I also want to thank the many Senators who agreed not to introduce amendments that they felt strongly about so that the Federal Government could continue to operate in an orderly fashion.

I hope this resolution sets a precedent that we will follow in the months and years ahead. I urge its rapid adoption.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I commend the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, my distinguished colleague Senator HATFIELD, and the Senate conferees for a quick resolution of our differences with the House on this measure. Tomorrow starts the new fiscal year. Our expeditious action on this continuing appropriations resolution provides the funding necessary to assure the continuation of essential Government functions beyond tonight. In fact, our action on this resolution has been so expeditious, we have beat the system for producing final numbers on this conference agreement. The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) is working on that, and I will insert a final scoring of this conference agreement into the RECORD early next week. Based on our preliminary estimates however, I can assure the Senate that this conference agreement is below the Appropriations Committee's 302(b) allocation under the first budget resolution.

Mr. President, I support this conference agreement. I hope my Senate colleagues will act as swiftly and with as much restraint to assure the enactment of the regular appropriation bills covered by this measure before its November 10 expiration date.

Mr. BAKER. I would like to inquire of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee the intent of the conferees with regard to language which addresses the Clinch River Breeder Reactor in the conference report. Does the conference committee intend that the language be consistent with the colloquy which we entered into yesterday prior to the passage of the continuing resolution, which appears on page S13183 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am pleased to respond to the distinguished majority leader with regard to CRBR funding. The language in the conference report is intended to be consistent with that which we stated yesterday. The conferees have instructed that all options should be maintained until such time as Congress acts on the alternative financing proposal. Furthermore, the Appropriations Committee will work closely with DOE to insure that the instructions are implemented.

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, my good friend and distinguished colleague Senator HOLLINGS and I are delighted that the first continuing resolution has proceeded so rapidly and cleanly. However, whenever funding levels are determined primarily by a formula, certain items fall between the cracks. I would like to take this opportunity to develop some legislative history on a few points on the Commerce, Justice, State, the judiciary and related agencies portion of the continuing resolution. In this, I speak for Senator HOLLINGS, as well as myself.

First, and most important, the figures in the continuing resolution are not binding on the Senate when it considers the regular 1984 bill. We did not foreclose the rights of any Senator on any account. We hope to bring our bill to the floor in the near future, and will carry the Senate-passed provisions into conference rather than any figure on the continuing resolution. The amounts in the CR are only effective for the life of that resolution.

Second, although the continuing resolution only includes $10,100,000 for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration, we believe it has sufficient funds to operate the full gateway receptionist program. The Senate-reported bill, S. 1721, recommended $12,870,000 for USTTA and earmarked $255,000 for the gateway receptionist program. We fully intend to push for the Senate-reported figure on the Senate floor and in conference. However, even at the $10,100,000 level in the continuing resolution, we feel the resources are available to operate the gateway receptionist program and expect to see the agency immediately enhance this exciting program.

Third, the continuing resolution includes the Senate recommended figure of $151,399,000 for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The Senate directed in its report for S. 1721 that a total of $19,000,000 shall be set aside for State and local grants. Although that direction is not operative in the continuing resolution, we are putting the agency on notice that we eventually expect to pass a bill that will maintain the $19,000,000 level and we expect the agency will have that level of resources available.

Finally, although the continuing resolution provides $520,515,000 for contributions to international organizations within the Department of State, recently the Senate reduced the authorized level for this account when it considered the State authorization bill. That decision may later be altered, but if it is not, the 1984 appropriation would have to be amended to reflect the lower authorization ceiling. We expect that the department will respond to these realities when it obligates funds in this account during the duration of the continuing resolution.

Again, Mr. President, we appreciate the opportunity to discuss these points.●

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to adopt the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments in disagreement be considered en bloc, with the exception of amendment No. 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments in disagreement, except No. 6, be agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments in disagreement, except No. 6, are as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 to the aforesaid resolution, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter stricken by said amendment, and insert:

(c) Pending enactment of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984, such amounts as may be necessary for continuing activities, not otherwise specifically provided for elsewhere in this joint resolution, which were conducted in fiscal year 1983, for which provision was made in the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1983, but such activities shall be funded at not to exceed an annual rate for new obligational authority of $247,000,000,000, which is an increase above the current rate, and this level shall be distributed on a pro rata basis to each appropriation account utilizing the fiscal year 1984 amended budget request as the base for such distribution and shall be available under the terms and conditions provided for in the applicable appropriation Acts for fiscal year 1983: Provided, That no appropriation or funds made available or authority granted pursuant to this subsection shall be used to initiate multiyear procurements utilizing advance procurement funding for economic order quantity procurement unless specifically appropriated later: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available pursuant to this subsection shall be available for the conversion of any full time positions in support of the Army Reserve, Air Reserve, Army National Guard, and Air National Guard by Active or Reserve Military Personnel, from civilian positions designated "military technicians" to military positions: Provided further, That no appropriation or funds made available or authority granted pursuant to this subsection shall be used to initiate or resume any project, activity, operation or organization which is defined as any project, subproject, activity, budget activity, program element, and subprogram within a program element, and for investment items is further defined as a P-1 line item in a budget activity within an appropriation account and an R-1 line item which includes a program element and subprogram element within an appropriation account, for which appropriations, funds, or other authority were not available during the fiscal year 1983: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, $5,000,000 is appropriated for the XXIII Olympiad as authorized by Section 304 of Public Law 98-94, and in addition the Department of Defense may provide support to the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee on a reimbursable basis, with the proceeds to be credited to the current applicable appropriation accounts of the Department.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 to the aforesaid resolution, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter stricken by said amendment, and insert:

(g) Such amounts as may be necessary for the following projects or activities, were provided for in H.R. 3222, the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984, as reported to the House of Representatives on June 3, 1983, to the extent and in the manner provided for in such Act, and at a rate for operations, notwithstanding section 15(a) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 and section 701 of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, as follows:

International Organizations and Conferences: "Contributions to International Organizations", $520,515,000;

International Commissions: International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, "Construction", $672,000; "American Sections, International Commissions", $3,426,000; "International Fisheries Commissions", $8,876,000;

Other: "Asia Foundation", $9,900,000;

United States Information Agency: "Salaries and Expenses (Special Foreign Currency Program)", $10,450,000; "Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange Between East and West", $18,362,000; "Acquisition and Construction of Radio Facilities", $34,013,000.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 to the aforesaid resolution, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter stricken by said amendment, and insert:

SEC. 109. Funds shall be available for school assistance in federally affected areas authorized by title I of the Act of September 30, 1950, and the Act of September 23, 1950, at an annual rate of $585,000,000 under the terms and conditions provided in the applicable appropriation Act for fiscal year 1983; and funds shall be available for Departmental Management, "Salaries and Expenses" under the Department of Education at the current rate of operations.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up the amendment in disagreement to Senate amendment No. 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6 to the aforesaid resolution, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter striken by said amendment, and insert:

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the distinguished occupant of the Chair has some interest in this amendment, I hope another Senator will be able to take the Chair so that Senator COCHRAN may have access to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WEICKER). The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to concur in the House amendment with a further amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) proposes an amendment numbered 2264 to House amendment to Senate amendment No. 6.

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

(b) Such amounts as may be necessary for projects or activities not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution and for which appropriations, funds, or other authority would be available in the following appropriation Acts:

Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 at a rate for operations and to the extent and in the manner provided for in the Act as passed the House of Representatives as of October 1, 1983: Provided, That appropriations or loan authorization for the following agencies or activities are available at not to exceed the following annual rates and the totals are adjusted accordingly:

: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, section 184 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (96 Stat. 785), is amended by inserting before the period at the end of paragraph (b) the following: ", or for the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984": Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, the provisions of subsections (f) and (i) of section 3 and section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, as amended, concerning private, nonprofit drug addiction or alcoholic treatment and rehabilitation programs, shall also be applicable to publicly operated community health centers: Provided further, That, hereafter, in order to restore and maintain U.S. share of world markets and to restore capital of the Corporation for its operations, any restrictions or limitations on the authorities and obligations of the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell in world markets, as provided by its Charter, may be waived or suspended by the Secretary of Agriculture; and Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 (H.R. 3363), notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, except section 102, such sums as may be necessary for programs, projects, or activities provided for in such Act (H.R. 3363), to the extent and in the manner provided for in the conference report and joint explanatory statement of the Committee of Conference filed in the House of Representatives, as if such Act had been enacted into law.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this amendment is identical to the conferees' language, with one exception. It deletes an extraneous amendment added by the conferees which was mystifying to this Senator, at least, in terms of its having been considered at all. It was sprung on the conference, as I understand it, with no advance knowledge or notification. It has not been considered by the authorizing committee in either the House or the Senate.

It was included without consultation with, or even notification to, the Senator from North Carolina, chairman of the relevant authorizing committee. Frankly, without being unduly critical of anybody, it is not the way we ought to do business in Congress.

The provision by the conferees delays for 3 more months a very important antifraud provision adopted in 1981. That provision requires the States to establish monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting for certain food stamp households—not all households, but for certain households, those most likely to have changes in their monthly income.

Mr. President, every State has had 2 years to implement this regulation, which was approved by Congress, both House and Senate, and signed by the President, in 1981. Several States have already implemented it. Parts of my State have implemented it. I know the State of the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) has implemented it. I know the State of Wisconsin has implemented it. I just do not understand why Congress would allow some States to drag their feet in implementing a very clear mandate by Congress to work toward eliminating some of the fraud in the food stamp program.

Mr. President, inaccurate reporting of income is the No. 1 problem in the food stamp program. Monthly reporting is scheduled to begin tomorrow—and bear in mind, let me repeat for the sake of emphasis, everybody has known about this for 2 years. Effective tomorrow, this monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting provision would be required. This is an important tool to combat the kind of fraud that is ripping off the taxpayer.

As I say, most States have already begun this provision and I, for one, see no reason to permit other States to escape implementation of this antifraud measure.

Let me say again for the purpose of emphasis that there has not even been a bill—not one—introduced in the Senate relating to this subject, Mr. President, a subject which has been clear in terms of the law for 2 years. There has been no consideration of any extension of time by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, which I have the privilege to chair. Rather, this issue was sprung on us at the last minute, without hearings, without committee consideration.

All of a sudden, the conferees say, "Well, some States have been unable to implement it." I will tell you why they have not implemented it: Because they do not want to spend a nickel that they do not have to, even to cut down on fraud in one of the most enormously expensive welfare programs that one can conceive.

Therefore, Mr. President, I believe the conferees' action, and I say this with all due respect to the conferees on both sides, is, to say the very least, quite premature. We permitted the States 2 years to prepare for this. I just cannot see any reason to postpone it another 3 months.

The only way we can clean up fraud in any governmental program, be it food stamps or legal services or whatever, is to clean it up. Sometimes it is unpleasant to do what I regard as my duty as a Senator. It is not popular to crack down on these people who are engaging in fraud or on the States which are not doing what they should be doing in terms of eliminating fraud. I know it is not popular. But we have the duty to do it, and the Senate took the action 2 years ago, the House agreed to it, and I say again that the States have known for 2 years that, come midnight tonight, it would be their responsibility to implement this very reasonable provision of law.

So, Mr. President, that is why I have offered the amendment to concur with the House amendment with a further amendment deleting this unnecessary delay.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am sympathetic to the concerns raised so eloquently by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. I think a great deal has been done in the past 2 years under his leadership as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to eliminate waste and abuse in the food stamp program. I think he deserves the compliments of Americans everywhere whose tax dollars support this program, because much in savings has been realized because of initiatives that he has brought to the attention of Congress and has had implemented through legislation. I regret, frankly, to have to rise in opposition to the effort that the Senator makes here tonight.

When this conference report was being negotiated and conferees of the House and the Senate were meeting together to discuss the various provisions of the agriculture section, the Senate had included in its part of the bill two food stamp amendments. Both had been included in the passage of the regular appropriations bill for fiscal year 1984. One was a suspension of a deadline that would have occurred on October 1, 1983, suspending for 90 days the termination of the cash-out program of food assistance in Puerto Rico. The committee was advised that it was not possible to make the change required by law on that deadline date. With advice and counsel from the legislative committee, that amendment was included in the fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill.

There was another amendment as well which this Senator offered to the bill, which technically, I suppose, is legislation. It is designed to ease a burden that had been imposed upon publicly run mental health centers which operate alcoholic and drug addiction rehabilitation centers in my State of Mississippi. These centers would not qualify to redeem food stamps for its recipients who are otherwise eligible, because of the technical interpretation of the law.

With that clarification, the Senate went to conference with two food stamp amendments. The House conferees argued that if they were going to accept these two amendments, the Senate should consider accepting a 90-day postponement of another deadline, which was the monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting provision. The House had included a 1-year postponement, Mr. President, in the first continuing resolution that was approved by the House Committee on Appropriations, and that 1-year postponement was again urged upon the conference. We did not accept the 1-year postponement but, rather, agreed that the 90-day postponement would be appropriate, inasmuch as we had requested that they accept a 90-day postponement of a deadline date for the cash-out program for food assistance in Puerto Rico.

Now, this conference report is going to expire by its own terms on November 10. The legislative committee will have an opportunity to address this issue, which I may say is one that is serious, and I think should properly be brought to the attention of the committees with appropriate jurisdiction.

I have heard personally from my State with respect to the expensive administrative burden that has been imposed by this change in the law which occurred in 1981. There are several States which we are advised are unable to comply with this October 1 deadline. There are others who are able to comply. Aside from the fact that we agreed, in good faith, based on solid reasoning, with the 90-day postponement, we think there is merit to the suggestion that a 90-day postponement would be appropriate.

In 1980, Congress enacted legislation making monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting systems a State option in the food stamp program. However, in 1981 Congress reversed gears, and—at the request of the administration—made the use of these systems a mandatory Federal requirement, rather than a State option beginning October 1, 1983.

This requirement is causing serious problems for many States across the country. Numerous States have found these systems to be cost ineffective and expensive to administer. Findings recently made available from a number of federally sponsored demonstration projects provide confirmation that monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting systems generally do not reduce errors—but do increase administrative costs, and result in the denial of benefits for some needy families.

Congress made an effort to alleviate these problems last year. Congress included in the 1982 Reconciliation Act a provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to allow States to exempt certain categories of households from monthly reporting where the States could show that monthly reporting would cause unwarranted administrative costs. Nearly a year after this provision was passed, however, USDA has yet to implement it fully. Some requests for such exemptions, or waivers, have still not been ruled on. It remains unclear whether the administration will elect to utilize this authority to ease State burdens in this area.

What the language in the conference report on the continuing resolution would do is postpone the October 1, 1983, deadline for 3 months, or 90 days, to allow the Agriculture Committee and the Congress time to ascertain whether the Department intends to utilize its waiver authority in a manner that can resolve the serious problems now facing the States or whether further legislation is needed.

Mr. President, I might also say that among those States having difficulty is the State of North Carolina, which was expressed in a letter to a House Member in May of this year urging the delegation from that State to seek legislation to either repeal this mandated October 1 deadline or at least make it optional.

So there are many States having difficulty with the provision, but the Senator from North Carolina is fully aware of that, and I know that in this capacity as chairman of the committee he will address that at the appropriate time.

I hope the Senate will approve of the actions of the conferees as reflected in the report.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of my friend, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. It is a privilege to serve on the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry with him. He is such a valuable member. I hold him in such great affection and respect. This is one of those rare times that we disagree. I might emphasize that we have agreed to disagree agreeably.

The rationale cited for the 3-month delay for monthly reporting is that a 3-month delay was provided in the Senate-passed agriculture appropriations bill for Puerto Rico to have to convert to a noncash program.

The point is—and I am saying this for the record so the position of the Senator from North Carolina will be clear—that provision relating to Puerto Rico was itself a compromise because the Senate Appropriations Committee attempted to repeal the provision altogether without consultation with the chairman of the Agriculture Committee under whose jurisdiction the matter clearly lies.

In any event, I concurred with a 3-month extension during earlier Senate consideration on the agriculture appropriations bill pending resolution of the problem, which I might add originated in the House of Representatives with the House Agriculture Committee. I hope the earlier, compromising spirit of the Senator from North Carolina is not being abused.

I have attempted to follow procedure in every possible way. I advised the chairman of the full committee and the subcommittee of my concerns about several extraneous matters which had been included in the original House Appropriations Committee bills, House Joint Resolution 367. I indicated to them that I would be constrained to object to the inclusion of legislative matters properly under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculutre, Nutrition, and Forestry, including this issue.

I sincerely regret that the House conferees have, Mr. President—I do not know exactly how to say this because I want to say it respectfully—but they "slipped it through." [Laughter.] And I understand the pressures under which the Senate conferees were working, but I regret that this kind of thing happens time and time again in the few remaining hours before the expiration of the fiscal year.

The truth of the matter is that the House of Representatives constantly does the Senate in. They have a favorite little trick of putting something in and then recessing, going home and saying to the Senate, "If you want to shut down the Government, be my guest."

I might add, one of these days the House of Representatives is going to wake up and find the Senate standing up and saying, "OK, we will shut down the Government." As a matter of fact, Mr. President, sometime when I am out among the real people of this land and I mention the possibility of shutting down the Government, I get a big round of applause. And that shows the cynicism with which actions of this Congress are greeted among the people who pay the bill, the taxpayers.

Mr. President, the projections on the cost of this extension—based on original CBO projections from 1981—will be $60 million—$60 million more fraud in the food stamp program for the 90-day period.

Let me state a proposition to my friend from Mississippi and to my friend from Alaska and my friend from Wisconsin, the distinguished managers of the bill. If the Senator from North Carolina will back off, withdraw his amendment, can I expect the full support when the next continuing resolution comes up—what is it, 41 days from now—to put an end to this business of extending the capability of fraud—in other words, say to the States, "Now, you get ready by November the 10th or we are going to sock it to you"?

Now, if I could have some sort of assurance from my friends that they are going to stand with me in conference or whatever with the House of Representatives and say enough is enough, then I will be willing to withdraw this amendment, even though it will cost the taxpayers about $30 million of that $60 million that I mentioned, because of the shortened delay. Would the Senator be interested in that proposition?

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, of course I am convinced that one of the motivations for every Member of this body is to try to make sure that tax dollars are wisely and efficiently spent and that there are no Federal programs that are contaminated with fraud, waste, or inefficiency.

Mr. HELMS. I know that.

Mr. COCHRAN. And this Senator is going to work as hard as he can and as enthusiastically as he can to make sure that not only the food stamp program but every other program under the jurisdiction of this Appropriations Committee is administered in a way that is consistent with the law and every dollar is accounted for that is spent. The Senator has my assurance that my every effort will be put into that endeavor.

As for whether or not I am going to support one suggestion or another in a conference or any piece of legislation will depend upon the circumstances and the terms of the situation and whether it is consistent with those basic principles of mine.

I also say to the Senator that this provision in the conference report does not prohibit any State from going ahead with its compliance with this October 1, 1983, date.

There are some problems with waivers being granted by the USDA now, we understand, and this will grant some period of time in which they can act on requests for waivers or exceptions under certain circumstances. I know that my State is one of those.

However, beyond that, I have no quarrel with the fact that the law is the law and that after the expiration of that 90 days, unless the law is changed, there should not be different actions of any other committee, any further postponements.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, let me say that there is no Senator more diligent in trying to reduce the cost of Government and waste of expenditures by the Government than the able Senator from Mississippi.

Let me just follow up on one of the distinguished Senator's comments. Let the record be clear that States that have already implemented, or may yet implement, monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting (or either provision) may do so, during this interim period with regular matching funds provided in this appropriation bill. We certainly do not intend to preclude those States that wish to proceed immediately from doing so.

I guess all I am saying to him and Senator STEVENS and Senator PROXMIRE is this: Will you help me send a message to the States saying, "You had better get ready and comply with the law that is 2 years old"? If the answer to that is, "Yes," I am going to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I say to the Senator that it is my understanding that some States are proceeding. My State has been in contact with me, and I know it is proceeding.

Mr. HELMS. My State is, and the State of the Senator from Wisconsin is. The other States are saying, "We won't buy any computer equipment. We'll drag our feet, and we'll not do this or that."

As long as we let them get by with that, I do not think we are going to be fair to the people in the States that are proceeding.

Will the Senators help me send a signal saying:

On November 10, when the next CR comes, you are likely to see an amendment by Senator HELMS or somebody else, or a combination of them, to go back to this 2-year-old law that has been on the books, about which everybody has known, about which there is no mistake?

If the Senators can assure me of their support in that regard, I have no problem with the action that was taken by the conferees today. I am just asking, in good faith, will the Senators give me the assurance of their support in that regard?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I certainly will give the Senator my assurance of support for the proposition that the date that was set in the original law should be adhered to.

I have the feeling, however, that under the provisions in this bill, that date now is 90 days from that date. It would be January 1.

I think we should send a message that January 1 is the date we need to have the States in compliance with the new provisions, and that it certainly would be the intent of Congress to see to it that it is done by that time and no later than that time.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I support the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the subcommittee. I think he is absolutely right that there is great merit in what Senator HELMS has argued. It is hard to dispute the terms in which he puts it.

On the other hand, I think we have to keep something of an open mind on this, and I have great faith in the Senator from Mississippi. As I understood his response to the Senator from North Carolina, he indicated that he would oppose fraud in every way he possibly could but that he would reserve his judgment on this specific recommendation of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina—the amendment by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina—until he had a chance to study the details and see what the situation was as it developed over the next 30 days.

Is that a correct interpretation?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, my reservation about making that firm commitment was the fact that the Senator was suggesting that, on November 10, I join him in a statement or an action that would terminate at that point the period of time within which States have to comply.

I have no quarrel with the fact that this is going to end in 90 days and that on January 1, 1984, States will have to be in compliance with the terms of the law, and that this suspension is a 90-day suspension only. I will join the Senator in resisting any further extensions.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I believe we have made some progress here, not in terms of the distinguished Senator's attitude, because he has always been a stalwart in opposing fraud and trying to get to the root cause of it, but in making the record. I hope I have made it clear that what I want to do is to serve notice on the States that enough is enough, no more footdragging, if I withdraw this amendment.

Let me serve notice in an open, gentlemanly fashion. If we do not tighten up and enforce this monthly reporting requirement, I will be forced to press—through the appropriations and authorizing process—other means of reducing fraud, waste, and abuse.

We must say to the States, "You have to get busy, because time runs out on January 1, 1984. You had better get ready to comply with the 2-year-old law."

If I have made that clear, I have accomplished a little something, and I have gained the support of the Senator from Mississippi—which I have had all along, as a matter of fact.

I have the support of the Senator from Alaska. I do not know where the Senator from Wisconsin is, precisely.

It reminds me of when I was serving on the Raleigh City Council many years ago. I made a proposal and made one of my usual eloquent speeches; and one of the members of the council said, "Mr. Mayor, I agree with Jesse in principle but not in practice." [Laughter.]

That is the problem we have around this place. Sometimes we agree in principle, but when it comes down to practice, it is a little different. Allow me to summarize the facts.

As noted by the Congressional Budget Office, "monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting (MR/RB) is one of several initiatives to reduce fraud, waste, and abuse in the Food Stamp Program." These are important provisions that were originally estimated in 1981 to save $257 million annually when fully implemented (in fiscal year 1984).

The 1981 law provides flexibility for the Secretary of Agriculture to waive provisions of the act in order to permit States to maintain consistency with provisions for calculating income required under the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program. Monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting have been required in AFDC since October 1, 1981.

In order to accommodate further the compatibility of the two programs, additional waiver authority was established under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (Public Law 97-253). The Secretary is now authorized to waive any provision of the act—except the provisions excluding certain categories of households from monthly reporting—in order to develop requirements similar to those used for AFDC. Additionally, waiver authority was granted to enable State agencies to have selected categories of households report less frequently (than monthly) if the State agency could demonstrate that requiring monthly reports from such households would result in unwarranted administrative expense.

It should be remembered that the original and fundamental purpose of monthly reporting is to obtain the most current income information from food stamp recipients. Historically, investigative audits have demonstrated time and time again that the single largest cause for overissuances of food stamps comes from recipients underreporting their actual income. Inasmuch as monthly food stamp benefits are based on a household's monthly income, understatement of income results in overissuances of food stamp benefits. Most recent figures indicate that over $1 billion, or 10 percent of all food stamp benefits, are overissued, most of which is caused by underreported income. The Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry has been especially concerned with this area of fraud in the food stamp program, and has made a number of recommendations, subsequently adopted, to prevent and detect such underreporting of income. Monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting are two such tools intended to improve this situation.

At the same time, the committee's legislation has permitted the necessary flexibility to target such requirements on housholds that are likely to have income, and experience frequent changes in income. There is not the same urgency to include households that have no income, or are not likely to have changes in income—such as those on fixed incomes. For example, households in which all adult members are elderly or disabled are exempt from these requirements. As noted earlier, States may seek to exempt other categories if they can demonstrate that their incorporation in monthly reporting would not be cost effective.

Frankly, I was somewhat surprised and disappointed at the last minute flurry of activity to avoid this requirement. The committee has received only scattered reports of complaints. In my home State of North Carolina, for example, most of the few counties that complained had not even attempted to seek waivers for those categories of recipients for which they felt reporting would not be cost effective. Some apparently felt, without having studied the matter closely, that the requirement was "more bother than it was worth" or would result in a "paperwork glut."

Since that time, States and counties have petitioned the Secretary to grant waivers in certain cases. By all reports, the Secretary has been very judicious in granting waivers where the evidence presented warranted such an exception.

As I say, little opposition to the proposal had emerged prior to the House Appropriations Committee action. Indeed, there has been no legislation of any kind introduced in the Senate to amend these requirements.

Obviously, the committee will continue to monitor the situation to insure that the requirement provides the kind of improvements that were intended at the time of enactment in 1981.

As I noted earlier, both monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting have been required in the AFDC program since October 1, 1981.

Frankly, I see no reason to expect a less stringent provision of monthly income verification in the food stamp program than is already required in the AFDC program, and which States have been doing in that program for 2 years.

I continue to be distressed by the reaction of some State and local officials to this and other reforms in the food stamp program. As I have emphasized on past occasions, unlike almost any other Federal program, the food stamp program is funded 100 percent by the Federal Government. The only contribution to the food stamp program made by State or local governments is that they bear 50 percent of the administrative costs of the program. Inasmuch as food stamp benefit costs are currently $12 billion, and total administrative costs are approximately $1 billion (of which the Federal Government pays half), it is clear that the Federal Government shoulders the great cost of this program. Indeed, the program is the second most costly Federal needs-based program—second only to medicaid.

Because the Federal Government bears these costs, State and local officials have been reluctant to improve the administration of the food stamp program, for which they are responsible. They have rationalized that "since improvements do not save our money, why bother?"

An example of this attitude was expressed in a recent letter from a local official who was complaining about monthly reporting:

We are obviously distressed that local funds (50%) are required to provide for staff costs in order that the Federal Government may reduce their own cost. It would appear that a reasonable solution would be for the Federal Government to provide all funds necessary to increase local staff in order to meet a program that would perhaps result in Federal savings. We applaud the purpose of this regulation (i.e., monthly reporting), but we also believe that local governments ought not be required to expend local funds for the increased effort required.

Mr. President, this is precisely the wrong attitude. The tax dollars that are overspent in the food stamp program are those of all taxpayers. State and local officials and administrators must take a more active role in improving their administration of the food stamp program.

In my view, this fundamental attitude must be corrected. States must be held accountable for overissuance errors that result, as the administration has proposed. Another option, is that States be permitted to have optional block grants so that they have the flexibility they desire as well as the accountability that would accompany a specified amount of Federal funds for such a program.

I make these observations at this time to point up an inherent shortcoming in the present program. We have attempted to provide remedies to the obvious problems of fraud, waste, and abuse, and will continue to do so. We need the cooperation of State and local officials that administer the program, not their intransigent resistance.

I think we all understand each other. I have no wish to pursue the matter further, and I certainly would not call Senators back in for a rollcall at 4 minutes before 7 on Friday evening. I think we have served the taxpayers pretty well by making this record, because somehow it is going out to the States that "You had better get ready, because we're not going to have any more of this."

So with that understanding, Mr. Leader, I am going to withdraw the amendment, and I thank the Senator very much for his patience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from North Carolina. It is my observation, having been in the Senate 5 years and serving with him, that he not only makes a point but also makes a difference, and he does it very effectively.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, in keeping with the spirit of both Houses of Congress that we keep this continuing resolution as clean as possible, the Agriculture Subcommittee members of the Appropriations Committee have been most cooperative by refraining from offering extraneous amendments to our portion of the resolution. I express my appreciation to our members for their participation in this prime example of bipartisan teamwork.

Mr. President, the continuing resolution, as passed by the conference committee, contains amounts for appropriations and loan authority which were derived through negotiations intended only for the purpose of this continuing resolution. These negotiations were not an attempt to produce an agreement for our regular fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill. We simply wanted to carry our share of the load in attempting to meet the administration's request for this continuing resolution, while maintaining our position to the greatest extent possible in funding levels for our programs.

The appropriation for the Agricultural Research Service (ARS) is $6 million less than the Senate-passed mark in the regular fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill. It is the Appropriations Committee's intention that any programing decisions which deviate from the committee report on the regular fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill be made with the advice and consent of the committee.

The appropriation under this continuing resolution for the Extension Service is $4 million less than the Senate-passed mark. It is the intention of the conferees that the Renewable Resources Extension Act, however, is to be carried out within the funds provided for the Extension Service.

The brucellosis program under APHIS will be funded, under the terms of this resolution, at $69,500,000. We have been assured that, although this is well below the fiscal year 1983 appropriation, brucellosis State agreements and indemnity rates will not be reduced.

The conference report shows a funding level for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation below both the House- and Senate-passed bills. This appropriation is based on the fiscal year 1983 participation rate, and the conference agreement reflects the reduced growth assumptions for fiscal year 1983 participation.

Mr. President, it is my firm belief that this is a fair compromise which warrants both approval by the Senate and approval by the administration. I urge the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senate is indebted to the Senator from North Carolina.

I think the message has gone out to the States that they had better get in line by January 1 or "Old Jesse" is going to get them. That is for sure.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in amendment of the House to amendment No. 6 of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, have we disposed of all the amendments and the conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Mr. HATFIELD and the ranking Democratic Member, Mr. PROXMIRE, for their leadership and cooperation in achieving the final product in this continuing resolution. I would also like to express my appreciation to the Appropriations Committee staff on both the Republican and Democratic sides of the aisle for their diligence and swift preparation. I do not remember when a continuing resolution was acted upon so smoothly on the eve of a new fiscal year. I hope this action is an example for such measures in the future.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, that means there will be no further votes this evening.

We do have several minor items of a unanimous-consent nature to handle, which we will handle expeditiously in just a few moments, pending the arrival of the distinguished Democratic leader.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRIBLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MONEY LAUNDERING

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, in earlier floor speeches I have tried to emphasize the seriousness of the illicit drug problem and how it pervades all our lives—not just the lives of common criminals or "fringe types." In fact, more and more tax lawyers, stockbrokers, bankers, and accountants are cleaning up the illegal profits of drug traffickers by falsifying documents and shuttling bales of money across international boundaries. The journalists call it "laundering" the loot. I like that image: It reminds me once again that the IRS—and the American taxpayer—is being taken to the cleaners.

Millions and millions of tax dollars are lost in this money laundering, and it is the respectable banks and white-collar professionals, out of business school and law school, who are doing it. The National Republic Bank of Chicago was recently fined $15,000 and put on 5-year probation for failing to report currency transactions linked to a nationwide cocaine-distribution network. The bank was indicted along with its former vice president and 20 other persons on charges of running a cocaine ring out of Chicago, Los Angeles, and Florida.

It does not really surprise me that dishonest dealings and "dirty" money keep a few cogs greased in the workings of our economy. A more shocking trend is the increased involvement of ordinary professionals with the criminal underworld, especially drug traffickers—particularly vicious and venal breed. I wonder how these "laundry service" lawyers, bankers, and accountants reconcile their actions with their natural desire to bring up their children in a healthy and secure environment.

Mr. President, I request permission to enter into the RECORD an article from the Wall Street Journal on money laundering of illegal drug profits.

LAUNDRY SERVICE—MORE PROFESSIONALS LIKE LAWYERS, BANKERS SAID TO HIDE DRUG LOOT

(By Robert E. Taylor)

W. Stephen McConnell was the picture of a successful lawyer.

Within a decade of opening his own law practice in Annandale, Va., a suburb of Washington, he acquired a pair of Mercedes-Benz cars, a 33-foot sailboat, a large home on a wooded lot and also a new wife. He speculated in real estate and gambled in the Caribbean.

It was a rich life style. Too rich, thought Stephen Cochran, one of his law partners. "I knew he wasn't making that much from the firm," Mr. Cochran says. "My wife and I looked at the money he was spending and wondered where he was getting it."

The federal government says the answer is that Mr. McConnell had expanded his tax practice into a lucrative new area: helping drug smugglers invest and conceal their profits.

Mr. McConnell, 41 years old, denies any illegal money laundering. In a plea bargaining, however, he pleaded guilty to helping prepare false tax returns. In return, the government dropped other charges against him. He is serving an 18-month prison sentence.

Hiding profits of illegal dealings isn't new. It has been necessary for crooks ever since the Internal Revenue Service jailed mobster Al Capone in 1931 for tax evasion.

LEGAL IMPLICATION.

What is new is the growing number of lawyers, bankers, accountants, brokers, and other professionals who are being charged these days with laundering money for drug operators. As a result, says Rudolph Giuliani, associate attorney general, dope trafficking "is looking more and more like a white-collar crime."

To make concealing of drug profits more difficult, federal agencies in 1980 stepped up enforcement of a little-known law requiring financial institutions to report all transactions of $10,000 or more to the IRS. The idea was that this would help agents trace large, unexplained money flows to drug traffickers and other criminals.

Sometimes they have. But as pioneered in Miami, these financial investigations also are leading to others who are paid to help launder huge sums of cash. Originally, most of those charged with laundering money were low-level bank employees who would omit or falsify federal currency reports. But greed doesn't end at the bank teller's window, and criminal investigations have increasingly traced laundered money trails to law offices and executive suites.

Federal undercover agents posing as drug traffickers also "are getting solicited with all kinds of offers" from business and professional people willing to provide them with false documents to give them an apparently legitimate source of income or to avoid taxes, says Roger Markley, an assistant U.S. attorney in Chicago.

DE LOREAN DEAL

Professional involvement often goes well beyond handling and hiding drug profits. Undercover work collared auto executive John DeLorean last year on charges of conspiring to sell cocaine. His case wasn't unusual. In Miami last year, for instance, federal agents posing as money-launderers produced charges against three lawyers for conspiracy to import cocaine and three bankers and a physician for referring clients to the launders.

Alabama State Circuit Judge Thomas Coggin was caught flying 98 pounds of marijuana into Florida; he didn't contest the charge, resigned and was sent to jail. Former Florida Supreme Court Justice David McCain is a fugitive, accused of conspiring to import 30,000 pounds of marijuana from Colombia.

Investigations have also focused on brokerage houses. Millions of dollars in cash transactions handled in 1981 by Merrill Lynch & Co.'s New York offices have been subpoenaed by federal investigators, apparently because of suspicions that many required reports on large transactions weren't filed. And J. B. Hanauer & Co., a New Jersey municipal bond dealer that settled money-laundering charges filed by the Securities and Exchange Commission, remains under Justice Department investigation.

Recently, prosecutors have begun to turn their attention more to lawyers. Since 1980, lawyers have been accused of laundering schemes in Florida, Georgia, Virginia, Maryland, Illinois, Arizona and California. And with federal task forces still getting under way in many parts of the country, prosecutors say these cases are just beginning.

A BETTER LAUNDRY?

Some investigators believe that with all the heat on banks, lawyers' escrow accounts are becoming a more popular laundering vehicle. Sometimes, attorneys simply deposit bales of drug money in their law firms' bank accounts, then buy property or cashier's checks for clients, thus avoiding the federal currency reports.

But lawyers also can provide more sophisticated help. Some pass cash through a maze of foreign corporations and bank accounts shielded from U.S. agents by strict financial secrecy. This can make it "virtually impossible to find out whose money it is," says Richard C. Wassenaar, assistant IRS commissioner. He says about half of the IRS's narcotics-related investigations find that the money is moved offshore.

Many attorneys under investigation come from marginal law firms. But some are reputable lawyers like Stephen McConnell.

Mr. McConnell was a trial attorney in the U.S. Justice Department's Tax Division from 1967 until 1971, when he opened his private practice. Four years later, federal prosecutors said in federal court in Alexandria, Va., he started depositing large sums in the secrecy of Cayman Island trust accounts for a young man named Julian Pernell. In a few more years, the connection helped make him the largest moneymaker in his law firm.

The convicted drug smuggler's use of Mr. McConnell's law firm also helped cause the lawyer's downfall. The firm maintained two bank accounts to hold clients' cash in escrow for short periods while they completed transactions such as real-estate purchases. According to prosecutors, Mr. McConnell set up a brace of U.S. corporations for Mr. Pernell and began depositing large amounts of cash in the firm's accounts on behalf of these companies. Usually, the money would be paid out in a few days, the government claimed, often to the Cayman trusts or to U.S. investments.

Karen Tandy, the assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted Mr. McConnell and several associates, says this arrangement allowed Mr. Pernell to use the law firm's escrow accounts "like personal bank accounts," without leaving the financial fingerprints of federal currency reports that are routinely required of banks. By passing the money through the Cayman trusts, Mr. McConnell made it even harder to trace.

In its court papers, the government charged that Mr. Pernell and his associates took in abut $30 million over seven years of importing many tons of marijuana and hashish. Of the 20 persons charged in the case, 19 have been convicted, and one remains a fugitive.

Prosecutors say Mr. McConnell handled about $3.5 million of the cash, mostly for Mr. Pernell and his relatives. He is alleged to have passed about half of that through the Cayman Island trusts and his firm's accounts to a real-estate investment in Hilton Head, S.C. Miss Tandy says that alone would have been worth $5 million by 1990.

DRUG-WAR WEAPONS

Moving money through law firms or Caribbean tax havens isn't normally a crime. But the government demonstrated in the McConnell case that it has an arsenal of weapons to bring such activity into criminal courts when it is linked to drugs.

The government charged Mr. McConnell under a racketeering statute with being part of a conspiracy to make and conceal profits from importing illicit drugs, conspiring to defraud the government of taxes and helping prepare false tax returns for two years. The government even maintains that lawyers, like banks, often must report to the IRS transactions through their escrow accounts of more than $10,000, and even smaller accounts if fragmented to slip under the threshold. This was part of the tax-fraud charge against Mr. McConnell.

In the tax charges that Mr. McConnell admitted, the government said he ordered tax returns prepared showing Mr. Pernell and his wife made $157,794 in 1977 and 1979 combined (1978 wasn't mentioned in the charges), though they passed almost $500,000 through his law-firm accounts in those years.

In a telephone interview from prison, Mr. McConnell says he didn't know whose money the Pernells sent to his firm and didn't know until 1981 that they had been drug smugglers. "I was used," he says.

INHERITANCE-TAX PLOY?

Mr. McConnell also contends that the purpose of the Cayman trusts was legally to avoid U.S. inheritance taxes for Mr. Pernell, who he says is in his late 30s. "It's never too early to think about estate taxes," he says. His attorney, Louis Koutoulakos, complains that Mr. McConnell was targeted for prosecution "because it is open season on lawyers."

The government cited evidence in court that Mr. McConnell knew more than he admitted. Prosecutors claimed that Mr. McConnell was told in 1978 that Mr. Pernell had been convicted of drug smuggling. The prosecutors also claimed that Mr. McConnell had been receiving large bags of the drug operator's cash at the law firm for years. Prosecutors also said that when local bank tellers and the law firm's bookkeeper became suspicious, Mr. McConnell tried to avoid federal reports by breaking large deposits into multiple small cashier's checks from an assortment of banks. He denies this.

Yet at his sentencing last October, Mr. McConnell admitted that "I intentionally turned my head" and became "a knowing puppet."

Offshore-banking expert Richard Blum says lawyers are part of "an impressive movement of respectable professionals into association with less respectable members of the community," especially in drug dealing.

OTHERS IMPLICATED

In Mr. McConnell's case alone, one other lawyer handling the drug ring's money was convicted of tax fraud and perjury, and a legislative expert for a trade association escaped prosecution only by cooperating with the government.

But while many are investigated, few are charged. And acquittals aren't uncommon. Prosecutors say it is hard to prove that high-ranking bank officials, lawyers or accountants are knowingly involved in laundering. Bank executives are insulated by layers of bureaucracy, they say. Lawyers sometimes try to shield themselves behind the legal confidentiality of communications between attorney and client. To convict, prosecutors say, they usually need testimony from an insider or undercover agent.

How valuable a sharp lawyer can be to drug traffickers was illustrated by Nathan Markowitz, a Los Angeles lawyer and one-time Securities and Exchange Commission attorney who agreed, after his arrest, to cooperate with federal agents.

He bragged that he had laundered millions of dollars for people in cities across the country.

Mr. Markowitz paid the officers of local Garfield Bank to accept large deposits without filing federal reports. The lawyer then wired money to Bermuda trust accounts controlled by Liberian companies. The money would return in the form of tax-deductible loans to corporations established for Mr. Markowitz's clients. The corporations could provide them with seemingly legitimate salaries, expense accounts, pensions and company cars.

Mr. Markowitz, like some of the other attorneys in his business, appeared to be involved in more than laundering. As recorded on tape, he offered to help an undercover agent arrange to import marijuana from South America. "I can give you buys, if you have to buy it down there," he said. "I can give the airstrips. I can give you the guys that press it, package it. I can give you the street (dealers). . . . I've done it for those people for years."

To avoid prison, Mr. Markowitz agreed to help federal agents who were after suspected large-scale drug traffickers and organized-crime figures among his clients. But an enterprise like his is as hazardous as it is lucrative. He was found shot to death, gangland-style, in a parking garage two years ago. His murder remains unsolved.

THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3415, THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION ACT, 1984

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, last night, the Senate passed the fiscal year 1984 District of Columbia appropriation bill conference agreement.

I support the conference report and commend the subcommittee chairman for keeping spending within the budget.

The conference report provides $0.6 billion in new budget authority for fiscal year 1984. Including prior-year outlays, fiscal year 1984 outlays associated with the conference report would be $0.6 billion.

These amounts are consistent with the subcommittee's section 302(b) allocation under the first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1984.

I ask unanimous consent that two tables comparing the spending and credit totals of the conference report to the first budget resolution, the House level, the Senate level, and the President's request be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER'S RESURGENCE

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, International Harvester is a company known throughout the world as the leading U.S. manufacturer of heavy trucks and one of our major manufacturers of agricultural equipment. International Harvester, with its headquarters in Chicago, was founded in 1831 by Cyrus McCormick who revolutionized farming with his invention of the reaper. The company marked its 150th anniversary just 2 years ago. It has always been one of this country's most important manufacturers.

I am pleased to tell my colleagues that after several years of financial difficulties, Harvester is again on the way to regaining its title as one of America's great corporations.

The main reason that Harvester has been able to come back from a major strike while simultaneously weathering the deepest recession in 50 years is the extrordinary leadership of Don Lennox, Harvester's president. Don Lennox has brought his company from the brink of bankruptcy to a point where Wall Street confidence in his company has seen a fivefold increase in the price of Harvester's stock from its 1982 low.

This increased confidence in the financial community is due in no small part to the style and experience that Don Lennox has brought to the job. By trimming staff and selling off or closing inefficient plants, he has reduced Harvester's debt considerably.

The resurgence of Chrysler Corp., under the aegis of Lee Iacocca is well known throughout the United States. But not as well known is the tremendous effort Don Lennox and other Harvester executives have made in the last few years to bring Harvester back to health. I might add that this major corporation brought about this restructuring without any Government assistance.

We are proud of this achievement in Illinois and we are proud of Don Lennox for this accomplishment.

When Business Week chose Don Lennox as its cover story for its August 15 issue, it was no surprise to those who knew how instrumental he has been in the company's recovery. In big, bold letters, Business Week's cover proclaimed, "Harvester's Tough Boss."

Mr. President, so that my colleagues can appreciate the leadership and decisiveness that Don Lennox has brought to Harvester, I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

One successful contribution of Don Lennox during the rebuilding at Harvester has been his own personal interest in the dealers. Don Lennox has made it his policy to visit dealers and suppliers to personally keep them up to date on Harvester's recovery. This has done a lot to increase confidence in the company. Edson P. Wilson, general manager of Ford's truck operations says in the Business Week article that "we've had an excellent relationship with Harvester as a supplier . . . we sense the organization is pulling together again, and Don is no small part of that." A dealer in Indiana is quoted as saying, "Most of us are extremely confident the company is going to make it."

This confidence is embodied in the driving style of Don Lennox. It is a style that is helping Harvester get back on its feet while at the same time providing American business with an example of managerial excellence.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Business Week, Aug. 15, 1983]

CAN DON LENNOX SAVE HARVESTER?

When Donald D. Lennox and three other International Harvester Co. executives struck up a poker game aboard their corporate airplane not so long ago, Lennox was stuck with a series of losing hands. Only after the plane began its descent toward Midway airport in Chicago, Harvester's headquarters, did his luck begin to turn. Leaving his seat briefly, Lennox coaxed the pilot into slowing his approach. By the time the aircraft touched down, Lennox not only had recouped his losses but was ahead by $100. "Don absolutely can't stand to lose," says one of the players.

Today, Lennox—named president of Harvester 15 months ago— is playing his toughest hand ever as he strives to save the company from bankruptcy. It still is too early to predict the outcome, and Lennox himself acknowledges that the final result will depend on an economic turnaround. But at least the odds have changed. When he took over at Harvester, the bet was that he had no course open to him other than filing for Chapter 11. The country's leading manufacturer of heavy- and medium-duty trucks and the No. 2 maker of agricultural equipment had gone the way of many other old-line industrial corporations: Its plants were outdated, markets and sales were shriveling, and debt stood at more than $4 billion.

But since then, the straight-talking operations man, who won his stripes as a manager of a Ford Motor Co. plant and a successful manufacturing executive at Xerox Corp., has sold off 17 businesses, slashed headcount and payroll by more than 32%, and shuttered inefficient operations, including the mammoth Fort Wayne (Ind.) truck plant. Altogether, he has cut Harvester's costs by at least $1 billion a year, stripping the company back to its traditional businesses of making trucks and agricultural equipment.

ANOTHER IACOCCA?

Lennox also has bought time while waiting for the economic turnaround by his nononsense leveling with dealers, suppliers, employees, and, especially, Harvester's big creditors—the 200 banks that now hold Harvester's IOUs. To all of them, Lennox's bluntness comes as a welcome change from the pie-in-the-sky pronouncements of former Chief Executive Archie R. McCardell: Whereas McCardell was forever promising an imminent recovery, Lennox at his first meeting with the bankers showed production figures that made it clear that Harvester would need further debt restructuring.

There are many who clearly believe that Lennox is on track. Wall Street in particular seems to like him: Harvester stock has spurted to $12⅞ a share this year, up fivefold from its 1982 low.

"Investors smell another Chrysler-style turnaround," explains a vice-president at one New York bank that has more than $20 million riding on Harvester's future. "Some of that is rubbing off on us bankers, even if the numbers indicate only that the bottom isn't falling out quite as quickly. A lot of it is just a feeling of confidence in Don Lennox."

That confidence is not universal, of course. "Nothing's changed," insists a former high-ranking Harvester executive. "They continue to liquidate the company to stay alive." And to be sure, Harvester keeps piling up heavy losses. In the second quarter of 1983, it lost $84 million from continuing operations (chart, page 83). Although that was half the level of the same period in 1982, it still represents an enormous drain on the company's limited resources.

Nonetheless, the very scale of Lennox's problems seems to encourage further comparisons with Chrysler Corp. and its dynamic chairman. Lennox, though, is quick to brush off any suggestion that he has ambitions to cast himself as another Lee A. Iacocca. "I don't have Lee's charisma—or, for that matter, his brashness," he insists. Something else Lennox does not share, of course, is Iacocca's $1.5 billion ace in the hole—the government bailout in the form of a loan guarantee. Even so, says one of Lennox's closest associates: "Don wants nothing more than to make a mark on industry and to earn recognition from the business community. He wants to be recognized to the same degree as Iacocca."

A GROUP OF OUTSIDERS

That Lennox, 64, is even in a position to have such a dream is remarkable. In 1978, as a senior vice-president at Xerox, his career seemed to be winding down. Xerox, in fact, had gone so far as to make an exception to its rule of retiring senior managers at 60 and kept him on. His job, however—representing the company in Rochester (N.Y.) area civic affairs—was scarcely dramatic. (Rochester is Lennox's hometown, and he keeps his sailboat at Lake Canandaigua.)

Then Archie McCardell called. The two had known each other for 29 years, first at Ford and then at Xerox, where Lennox had reported in various capacities to McCardell, who was president and chief operating officer. His former boss, who was now heading Harvester, wanted Lennox to work for him again, albeit as a part-time consultant. Lennox, chafing for action, jumped at the offer. And in 1979, he started to work full time, first as a special assistant to McCardell and then, in 1980, as senior vice-president in charge of Harvester's operations staff and executive vice-president of the Components Group, which makes parts for Harvester product lines.

It seemed to be perfect time to be at Harvester: 1979 had been its best year ever. It earned $369 million on $8.4 billion in sales. Even so, top management was scarcely a team, since most were outsiders with differing backgrounds. President Warren J. Hayford, for example, came from Continental Group Inc. and was associated with high-volume can production. To Harvester's operations people, only Lennox seemed to understand the business the company was in. He was spotted quickly as someone who clearly loved the complex world of assembling large machinery.

Because of the mishmash of expertise at the top, important decisions were delayed or, worse, sometimes not made at all. In addition, Hayford often rode roughshod over Lennox and other operations people. The differences between the two finally ignited over a proposal that Harvester build 6.9-liter diesel truck engines for Ford. Lennox championed the idea; Hayford tried to stomp on it. They went to McCardell, who backed Lennox. Hayford was overruled by McCardell on other occasions and finally quit in March, 1982.

So Lennox could not have been too surprised to be summoned to the Chicago Club that May—the board was meeting there—and to be offered the Harvester presidency. But what did surprise him, he admits, was that the offer came from Louis W. Menk, an outside director and the retired head of Burlington Northern Railroad Co. Lennox's first thought, he says, was' "Why isn't Archie asking me?" Then Menk told him the rest of the news: McCardell was out, and he, Menk, was the new chairman.

The selection of Lennox raised eyebrows because of the long friendship between him and the deposed chairman—a friendship that seemed to have been further cemented in Lennox's time at Harvester. Menk, 65, explains the decision this way: For his No. 2 he wanted someone who knew Harvester's markets and operations and, preferably, someone who could quickly succeed him as chief executive, which Lennox did in December. "We couldn't afford the trauma of bringing in another outsider," Menk says. "We needed someone who knew where some of the bones were buried and who could make the hard decisions that prior management wouldn't make."

"PRETTY DAMN BLEAK"

Lennox was stunned by the axing of his former boss. Still, he went home making plans. "That same night I sat down and made a two-page list of the things I thought needed to be done, regardless of who had a personal stake in them." (There were 10 items. No. 1: "Sell constuction equipment business." No. 2: "Get rid of six Cadillacs and drivers.") The list also "included some pet projects of McCardell's," Lennox adds. "It wasn't so much that I had no compassion or feeling. It was just that the situation was pretty damn bleak. I still consider him a friend," he says.

Menk and Lennox wasted little time in setting a new course at Harvester. Menk remembers how the two of them decided early that top management style would have to change dramatically. "We didn't have to look far to find some of the problems," says Menk. While Harvester was on its way to losing $1.6 billion on sales of $4.2 billion that year, "there was layer upon layer of staff, everybody had a secretary, and executives rode around in limos." Those luxuries were abruptly discontinued. "This place now looks like a bowling alley with desks," says Menk of company headquarters. "We are not rich enough to have people at all those desks." And although Lennox still plays poker, his airborne games these days usually are on commercial flights.

The reforms in the executive suite set the stage for Lennox to launch a massive move to shrink Harvester's operating expenses. "There were things that had to be done that had been obvious for a long time, but management"—unwilling to endure the stigma of big writeoffs—"was reluctant to move," says Lennox. "There was a psychological block about doing things that would cause us to approach a negative equity position," he explains. "To me it just doesn't mean that much whether you're $200 million positive or $200 million negative in a multibillion company like this. The important thing was to get rid of the nonperforming assets."

He did. The biggest sale was of the construction equipment unit. Its sales had peaked at $1 billion in 1979, but earnings were feeble, and the division never was big enough to compete with industry leader Caterpillar Tractor Co. McCardell and Hayford used to argue about what to do with the unit. Adds Jack D. Michaels, a longtime Harvester executive who now heads the Agricultural Equipment Group: "Even though it never made much of a contribution to the company, it was not sold. For a number of years it was difficult for top management to come to a decision." In contrast, this was the first decision Lennox made—it was, after all, No. 1 on his list—and he finally sold the unit in November to Dresser Industries Inc. for about $70 million. Lennox also took Harvester out of the manufacture of truck axles and transmissions, airliner tow trucks, and off-highway haulers. And he got out of life insurance and numerous joint ventures, such as mining.

BRUTAL CUTBACKS

At about the same time, Lennox turned his sights on the Fort Wayne truck plant. Although only one of three major truck assemply facilities, it had been a company fixture since 1923. "To some old-timers," Lennox recalls, "Fort Wayne was International Harvester, but in the end I just concluded we had to get rid of the thing. Some people said we could simply manage that plant back to profitability. But I just had to say if we hadn't done it in 20 years, we didn't know how to do it." So he closed the plant and laid off 2,000 workers, all that remained of the 10,000 who had worked there in 1979.

Then he bit the bullet on several of McCardell's "pet projects," including a Louisville plant that recently had been retooled at a cost of $6 million to build tractor transmissions and differentials. Next was the corporate science and technology group, which was headed by another old friend, Robert J. Potter. Lennox says he asked himself: "In the long run do we need that activity? Yes. Can we afford it? No." So he shut it down. Potter quit.

Neither man will disclose the details of their conversations over the decision, though Potter says he understands it. But he adds: "In the long run, Harvester will have to rebuild its research operations if it is to develop new products."

Making those brutal cutbacks, Lennox says, was the most unpleasant task in his life. "I'd sit and have a Scotch and water at the end of the day and say to myself: 'Damn, this is a depressing way to operate. When will we ever have something pleasant to work on? Like announcing a new plant?'"

That mood was deepened by the dire cash shortage that hit the company last summer. Lennox survived those early months, colleagues believe, because he kept in mind that his harsh actions were the key to saving as many Harvester jobs as possible. Even so, the ruthlessness he perceived as necessary took its toll: "He is not the happy-go-lucky guy he was," says one colleague.

"TWO-HEADED MONSTER"

This is particularly obvious at staff meetings. He listens well, insiders say, but does not tolerate sugarcoated analysis from his subordinates. "If you launch a windy, formalized report, he will quickly say, 'Cut out the crap' and insist on moving to the important issues," says one vice president. And once he has the information he is looking for, Lennox makes fast decisions, sticks to them—and demands that others do the same.

Lennox insists that he pushes his subordinates to express opinions that contradict his own. "There have been major disagreements on some issues about what should be done," he says. "I encourage people to disagree and discuss their viewpoints. On the other hand," he adds, "I'm not running a come-to-Jesus meeting here." When other people have had their say and he disagrees, he closes the subject. "I say, 'I heard you. You made good points. But here's the way we're going to go.'" That was what happened when the agricultural group tried to get funding to work on new products.

Despite occasional ill-feeling, executives prefer Lennox's rule to that of McCardell and Hayford—described by one as "a two-headed monster." With Lennox, he says, "you get crisper decisions, and you do move more swiftly. Today we have one leader, not two."

Even after the bloodletting of the past 15 months, Lennox has kept a sense of humor. He uses it, too, to put people at their ease. A favorite joke involves his old friend Bob Potter, now a consultant. During a visit to Tokyo last year, Lennox was out jogging one morning when—quite literally—he bumped into Potter, also a runner. "We both thought we were heading toward the same hotel," says Lennox. "But I was pointed in the wrong direction."

This always serves to leaven the somber mood at meetings. Another joke he told went down very differently. After hearing an executive from a Canadian subsidiary extol the performance of his staff, Lennox said: "That proves one point, doesn't it? If you set your objectives too low, you're bound to exceed them." There was a stunned silence.

Lennox accepts with good grace jokes at his own expense, even if they are close to the bone. A high-energy man who not only jogs but also ice skates, sails, and plays golf (handicap 19—and he bets on his game), Lennox took time off last February to play in an American Airlines Inc. golf tournament in Hawaii. Some friends from Rochester noticed that Bethlehem Steel Corp. has just posted a loss larger than Harvester's. They sent him this telegram: "Forget American tourney. Harvester needs you. Bethlehem now in first place."

A DEAL WITH FORD

Lennox has turned increasingly to outside suppliers to provide many of the parts that Harvester previously made in-house. For example, Dana Corp., a longtime Harvester supplier that bought the truck axle and transmission business, now also will supply Harvester with harvester-designed parts and will service them as well.

"We had a lot of bad feelings about Harvester," says Gerald B. Mitchell, chairman of Dana. "We saw their problem getting worse and couldn't see them fixing it." But after a 2½-hour meeting with Lennox, Mitchell recalls that he was convinced that Lennox understood the basic restructuring job needed in the entire heavy- and medium-duty truck industry. "He realized that there were too many assets around, too much capacity, and that if you consolidate operations, you eliminate a lot of waste."

Similarly, Harvester's Springfield (Mo.) engine and component remanufacturing plant was bought by an employee group. It will continue to supply rebuilt engines to Harvester truck dealers.

Lennox got attention by backing such cooperative ventures even before he became president. One example was the agreement to make the 6.9-liter diesel truck engines for Ford, which, after all, makes competing products. Moreover, "there was concern that the deal would be tying up some of our cash," says Jack D. Rutherford, president of the International & Components Group. "But the facts said you couldn't afford not to do it. Don put his job on the line for the 6.9, and it is now one of our most profitable areas." And by capitalizing on a rapid shift from gasoline to diesel engines in medium-duty trucks, Harvester has ended up selling more than the 30,000 engines a year it agreed to supply to Ford in a five-year contract. It now expects to surpass the $500 million in revenues originally forecast for the deal.

"We've had an excellent relationship with Harvester as a supplier," beams Edson P. Williams, general manager of Ford's truck operations. "We sense the organization is pulling together again, and Don is no small part of that."

DOOR-TO-DOOR VISITS

While Lennox is most at home working on just such manufacturing arrangements, he is also proving adept at juggling. Harvester's other key constituencies, including its dealers, suppliers, and banks. In each case, he has been able to win financial concessions aimed at easing Harvester's cash bind—despite recurring newspaper speculation that the company was about to file for bankruptcy.

"Two years ago, there was an awful lot of feeling that Harvester would go down the tubes," admits Bernard Uhl, a Harvester truck dealer in Palmyra, Ind. "That feeling is gone now. Most of us are extremely confident the company is going to make it." One encouraging sign, he says, is that Lennox and his line managers have eliminated more than half of the regional staff people who were constantly calling on dealers. "That was mostly wasted money. Now more is being spent to service the accounts of customers who bought on credit, a function that had been cut too much in the past and caused us some expensive delinquencies."

Nowadays, Lennox himself pays many of the door-to-door visits as he continues to meet with suppliers and dealers to keep them abreast of his activities. This practice originated last summer, soon after he took over. To calm nervous suppliers, Lennox produced confidential internal reports showing that Harvester was reducing, not increasing, inventories. "If we had been planning to file [for Chapter 11]," he told the dealers, "we'd have been building inventory as fast as possible before we pulled the plug, so we would have a large backlog of machinery and parts to sell."

Following that presentation, Lennox personally called on the 10 largest suppliers to press his case. He was persuasive enough to win more than $100 million in concessions last fall, most of them in the form of stretched-out payment schedules from suppliers. That, in turn, triggered an agreement with some lenders that permitted conversion of $350 million in interest and debt principal into Harvester equity.

A CLOGGED MACHINE

Whenever he has a free spot on his schedule (usually several days a month) he sets up appointments to call on dealers. Hayford did this, too, of course. But he traveled with an entourage. Lennox perfers to drop by either unaccompanied or with only the district sales manager.

Recently he and a manager spent several hours with an agricultural equipment dealer in Arkansas. Hearing that a local farmer was not completely happy with his Harvester planter, Lennox went with the dealer to take a look at the problem. It turned out that the heavy clay soil was clogging the machine. When he got back to Chicago, Lennox told Jack Michaels about the difficulty. He in turn assigned several people to develop a "fix," which they did. Even Hayford admires the way Lennox has "preserved the fine distribution network Harvester has."

Lennox feels increasingly optimistic that Harvester is positioned to turn the corner, especially since truck sales perked up in late spring and summer. Thanks to the timely sale of assets and cost-cutting efforts, the company's cash crisis has abated. By Oct. 31, the end of its fiscal year, Harvester will have about $300 million in cash, enough to see it through another year of depressed markets if necessary.

But other problems continue to surface. Lennox is wrestling with a ticklish problem in France, where Harvester's two agricultural plants are overstaffed by about 700 workers. Because of government policies, it cannot lay them off. Since Harvester's overall European operations depend on the French plants for parts—and on the French market for sales—a failure in France could topple much of Harvester's overseas business.

The company also faces the need for a third major restructuring with its banks this fall. Lennox is "quite confident" that the banks will agree to some form of restructuring. But he refuses to predict whether he can win the long-term agreements that he wants. In the meantime, he hopes that they will go along with a package that would relieve the company's debt problem through an exchange for equity.

It is still too early to declare a full-fledged recovery in the truck market. Nevertheless, the truck division's return to profitability was reported in July. That, together with the consolidation of Fort Wayne production, was celebrated at the Springfield (Ohio) plant.

Prospects for a similar celebration at the tractor and combine division are far more remote. Farm equipment sales have been plummeting for three years industrywide—particularly in the U.S. where farmers, beset by depressed crop prices and high interest rates, are reluctant to buy. Moreover, the government's payment-in-kind program has further depressed demand because there is less acreage to farm. It may be that the PIK program and this year's hot, dry weather will boost crop prices next year, which would help. Even so, Harvester will face aggressive competition from the largest and best-financed producer, Deere & Co. Lennox may be under pressure from bankers this fall to accelerate consolidation of farm equipment facilities. The company already has held discussions with Massey-Ferguson Inc. to share certain manufacturing plants.

A GOOD CHANCE

Overall, even skeptical members of the financial community believe there is reason for optimism for Harvester. Larry D. Hollis, a machinery analyst with Milwaukee's Robert W. Baird & Co. and one of the first to predict the magnitude of Harvester's problems, has recently begun to see signs of a revival. "If the economic recovery continues, there is a good chance that both Harvester's markets will be moving up in 1984," he says. "If that happens, the company could earn an operating profit—and maybe a small net profit."

Even Lennox, who steadfastly resists the urge to make optimistic predictions, is starting to voice encouraging words: "We've made super-conservative estimates, and one of these days I think we'll be able to surprise people with some good news for a change."

SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, though words cannot adequately express the sense of loss we feel concerning the death of Senator Jackson, I, nonetheless, ask unanimous consent that several eulogies which have appeared in the press be printed in the RECORD at the close of all eulogies by Senators.

These articles attempt to span the breadth of this man's impact on the Nation and the Senate, but most importantly, on each of those of us who were fortunate enough to feel that we knew Henry M. Jackson, the man * * * as well as the politician.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Everett (Wash.) Herald, Sept. 2, 1983]

TO REPORTER FROM HOME, JACKSON WAS A REAL SWEETIE

(By Jeanne Edwards)

EVERETT.—It was always difficult to be an objective reporter covering Senator Henry M. Jackson. It was especially hard when I was the reporter from The Herald assigned several times to write about Scoop in Washington, D.C., and in New York during his 1976 bid for the presidency.

He was such a nice guy.

Although in April 1976 he was in the midst of a riproaring campaign to grab the presidential nomination from Jimmy Carter, he took time daily to be concerned about the lady reporter from Everett whom he feared didn't know how to take care of herself in the Big Apple.

Secret Service men assigned to protect Jackson finally got used to the senator hauling me out of massive crowds into which I'd try to melt to get reactions to the senator from Washington state. It was unsafe for a woman alone to mix with any New York City crowds, he repeatedly nagged. It sure made it hard to get an unbiased story with the subject acting as my guardian angel.

As we sped in a caravan across New York City the Sunday before the vital primary election, Scoop sat on my left and New York City Mayor Abraham Beame sat on my right. I was trying to complete an interview for a story for Monday's editions. Beame couldn't quite grasp the fact that I was a reporter from Scoop's hometown. Where were ABC and CBS? Beame wanted to know. And what the dickens was the Snohomish Valley that Scoop kept referring to? Why would he want to talk about floods there on this important day?

Beame wanted to discuss the plight of Russian Jews and the political problems in New York City. Those were subjects on Scoop's mind, too. Important ones.

But the senator wanted to relax a few minutes and chat with someone who knew about the bridge over the "Stilly" and firsthand gossip about some of his Everett High School classmates.

That's the kind of guy the senator was. In New York or in Washington, D.C., running for the office that was his lifelong dream, he always seemed more interested in home and hometown folks than in the national and international VIPs who peopled his life, day in, day out.

Reporting that presidential primary was a series of struggles. It was a struggle for a reporter from Everett to be a member of the working press instead of a source for national newspeople.

Jackson was a curiosity. He'd run a presidential primary campaign in 1972. They knew all the Scoop stories but the good-guy and warmonger images just didn't compute.

Was it true, they asked, that his sister named him "Scoop" after a comic strip in The Herald? Was it true that as a kid the senator won an award for never missing a delivery all the time he carried papers on a Herald route? Was it true that the money he collected for making speeches went into a fund that helped innumerable kids in the Everett area go to college? Was it true that he often came to Everett in the summer and led a quiet life with his wife and kids in a house near downtown—a house with no guards and no gates?

Yes, yes and yes, I'd tell them. I told one national newsman that about the worst thing I knew for sure about Scoop was that he was a holy terror of a back-seat driver, that he drove his drivers crazy when he interrupted any conversation to impatiently rattle off directions: "Turn right at this corner; no, turn left at this corner. No, no, not that lane."

The next-worst thing I knew about Jackson was that he was demanding of his staff. Yet they were unquestionably loyal, frequently defending Jackson's position. "Scoop isn't a hawk; he isn't a dove. He just doesn't want this country to be a pigeon," said Don Donohue, the senator's friend, bodyguard and patient driver.

It was difficult to equate the hawkish senator that some reporters portrayed with the rumpled, relaxed father who stopped everything during his critical New York presidential primary campaign to celebrate son Peter's ninth birthday at Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey Circus at Madison Square Garden. The carnival was turned into a press circus as reporters jumped at the rare opportunity to portray a usually starchy senator as a father at play.

It was difficult to equate the warmonger image with the good sport who gamely climbed astride an elephant that night because that's what Peter wanted to do on his birthday.

Those of us assigned to cover Jackson routinely dealt with the Jackson paradox time and again:

Jackson the hawk. Jackson the concerned man whose greatest pleasure was in retelling stories about people like Seamus Kadrinka, whom he helped get out of a Siberian prison camp.

Jackson, a strong supporter of arms buildup. Jackson, the man who lectured his kids on the value of studying history and learning from it.

Jackson won that New York campaign but lost in his bid for the presidency. His staff members, by their own admission, took the end of that dream harder than Jackson did.

With Carter as president, Jackson returned to Washington and worked at the day-to-day tasks of a senator. The defeat rankled a bit. Four years after the New York primary, he sat in his Maryland home, rumpled suitcoat off and rumpled brown sweater on, and reminisced:

"The president (Carter) used to call me once in a while to talk things over. But he doesn't anymore.

"There's nothing boring about this job. It's a killer to a lot of people but not to me. People ask, 'How can you stand it?' or 'Why don't you have a heart attack?' Well, if you enjoy what you're doing, you don't have to worry about that.' "

Scoop makes it hard for this hometown reporter to write an objective, dispassionate story when my memories are of a gentle, kind man, a paradox who fought to the end for what he believed in and whose worst habit was back-seat driving.

SCOOP: A GIANT AMONG GIANTS

We in the Puget Sound area knew him so well, this neighborly, plain-spoken man, that it was often hard to sense his stature. Like people who live at the foot of a mountain, we could not appreciate the presence and force of this statesman who was so much a part of our lives without occasionally standing back and seeing how he dominated the greater landscape.

When we did stand back, we were in awe of Henry Jackson, in awe of his intelligence, his abilities, his integrity.

He was one of us, a son of our shores. Armed with little more than a Northwesterner's devotion to hard work and an unyielding sense of decency, he went to do political battle with giants, and became a giant among them, a leader not only of the Senate in which he served but of the nation and the free world. All the while, though, to us, he remained "Scoop," the guy from down the street who looked more like a harried small-town lawyer than one of the preeminent Americans of our time.

Scoop twice sought the presidency and twice failed. His defeats in those campaigns were blamed on what was called his lack of charisma. He didn't have a "golden Kazoo," one political analyst said. Scoop's reply to that sort of observation was always that the American people wanted more than bells and whistles from a president. "I believe the country's looking for solutions," he once told The News Tribune, "and they're not looking for charisma as a solution." The public did itself a profound disservice by proving the senator wrong.

But even though he was never president, Scoop, in his methodical, decent, hard-working, undramatic way, left a legacy that will be the envy of many presidents to come. He gave America strength and humanity, stature and maturity.

Yes, one had to stand back to appreciate Scoop. We will have to stand back even more to appreciate how much we have lost with his passing.

A MAN OF AND FOR HISTORY

(By Lisa Marchese)

Henry Martin Jackson has many honorable achievements to his name. Since his sudden and tragic death, much attention has been given to what he did throughout his distinguished career of public service. Senator Jackson was deeply respected by his colleagues in Congress and he held the admiration of the world community-at-large. His constituency extended far beyond the borders of Washington State.

In many ways, Senator Jackson's death concludes an important chapter in American political history. It was a chapter written by the ideology and will of one man. We cannot deny that Scoop Jackson will be painfully missed as an enduring and guiding political force. As we mourn the loss of this prominent statesman we cannot help but focus upon his life and his work. His accomplishments alone, however, are not what made his life meaningful. Those who knew Scoop Jackson know why he did what he did. They understand the driving force behind his actions and through them, his ideals must live on.

Strength of conviction and clarity of purpose were consummate to Jackson's style. He had a vision far beyond short-term objectives which was always focused on his long-range goals. His image of America was never blurred for political expediency.

Senator Jackson was an avid student of history and he saw the world from an historical perspective. He was one of the few remaining members to have served before Pearl Harbor. He remembered all too well the travesties of World War II. He understood that freedom as we now know it could only be protected through military preparedness.

Throughout his career, he tried to make others understand this too. He once said, "I wonder sometimes whether the so-called peace movement may not be related to our American tendency to neglect the study of history. I wish every student could be exposed to a thorough study of that fascinating but shameful decade when Hitler was building the German war machine while the democracies were preaching disarmament and neglecting their military preparedness."

Senator Jackson was seldom wrong in his assessments. Long before the nation knew there would be an energy crisis, Jackson warned of the inevitable and initiated efforts to create a strategic petroleum reserve. He never waivered in his support for Israel nor in her right to exist as a free democratic nation, even when it became politically unfashionable to do so. He was deeply concerned with human rights. Due to his efforts, thousands of Soviet Jews were able to emigrate from the Soviet Union. He was shocked but not surprised when the Soviets recently shot down a civilian aircraft on a commercial mission.

Senator Jackson's foresight was based on hindsight as he knew we could learn from mistakes of the past. His approach to an issue or crisis always seemed to be the most viable. This was because he did his homework well and he understood why things were the way they were in the world.

Senator Jackson was best known for his foreign policy expertise, however, he was also a leading congressional figure on various domestic issues. He wielded great influence in both these areas because he always knew the facts and his positions were always based on what he saw was in the best interests of the nation. He lived for America and he was a true patriot. He dedicated his work to the preservation of our democratic way of life. Scoop Jackson loved people and he loved being a Senator not because of the power or the prestige but because he cared.

His world view shaped his political philosophy. He couldn't be labeled as merely a liberal or a conservative. Furthermore, he never felt the need to redefine himself as a neoliberal or neoconservative to stay in vogue. He was never uncomfortable with his views because he was always true to himself. Senator Jackson's ideology was a type of liberal-conservatism. Where most would see this as contradictory, Jackson saw their necessary connection. He was believed to be a liberal because he wanted an active federal government to improve the life of the average American. Yet, he was considered conservative because he wanted a strong national defense.

To these categorizations Jackson would simply say that if we believe in America and in what we stand for as a nation, then survival above all else must be our first priority. He believed there could be peace in the world and he was very idealistic, but he was an idealist without illusions.

Another political era has come to an end and another chapter of history has been written. As we look back we can remember a great man who did great things. There is much we can learn from the life of Senator Henry M. Jackson. More than anything he showed us that we have the strength within ourselves to become better than what we are. Those who were inspired by him and loved him can carry on his work for they will never forget why Scoop Jackson strove endlessly in the strength of great will and determination to be his best and do his best the only way he knew how.

A DECENT MAN—WHATEVER SCOOP JACKSON HAD WASN'T CHARISMA, BUT IT WORKED

(By Rick Anderson)

A short man, he talked tall. War, missiles, shock troops, whatever might spread a little well-meaning paranoia around the Kremlin. Scoop Jackson did not practice my kind of politics, but he was my kind of politician.

There was a magazine piece I used to keep around. I took it out every so often and read it for a good laugh. It was a profile of the senator. It said what a boring man Scoop was.

A sawed-off Scandinavian with a closetful of lifeless black suits and matching wing tips, Henry Jackson's idea of a good time, he allowed, was to impetuously drop canned crab into the bowl of tomato soup he had every day for lunch.

What else do you do for excitement, Mr. Jackson?

Read.

And?

Some TV, maybe.

And?

Can you count sleeping in on Saturdays?

It was not a long article. It concluded that all work and no play had made Scoop a dull boy. But what puzzled the writer was how this boy had gotten to the House, the Senate, and within spitting distance of the Oval Office. It worked, but whatever Henry Jackson had, it sure didn't sound like charisma.

Not, that is, as charisma is commonly, politically defined. If Ronald Reagan is the Great Communicator, Scoop was the Little General, the guy who seemed to have to jump up on his toes and wave his sausage hands to be heard.

He was not one to be described in elegant, romantic tones or known to possess a charming knack for turning phrases. Churchill they'll remember for blood, sweat and tears; Scoop, for blood, bombs and bombast.

Then why was I going into the voting booth all these years and pulling for Henry Jackson? What made me always hop aboard his steamroller that flattened Lloyd J. Andrews, Charlie Elicker, George M. Brown and all the other Republicans he returned to oblivion?

Among the few superlatives used to describe Henry Jackson was extremist—ace quarterback for the Pentagon who, should he ever see the right opening, was sure to drop back and throw the bomb.

I was never certain that wasn't true. But as I stood time and again before those hallowed voting machines, I ruminated in my mind and then voted with my heart.

It's that last-second feeling, when everything whirs, beeps and instantly computes. Fleetingly, you are left with the paramount question:

Is he, or is he not, a decent man?

In the years I've been writing for newspapers, I encountered a number of people who could not get help or satisfaction from their senator, Henry Jackson. People who did not like—who indeed hated—him.

But what I encountered more often were people who were aided, quietly, privately, through the efforts of his office, his staff, and him.

I understand it may have something to do with being small-town Norwegian, but Jackson, I came to learn, had strong feelings about justice, fair play and what was right.

In politicians, I don't know of a quality more important.

So he was unexciting. He was unprofound. He dressed like Robert Hall and talked like Muzak Man.

They can have all that.

When the grave is full and the stone is up, let the inscription say:

Here lies a decent man.

For Henry Jackson, there'll be no hell to pay.

HUNDREDS ATTEND MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR SENATOR JACKSON

(By Blaine Harden)

Sen. Henry M. (Scoop) Jackson, who served in Congress for nearly 43 years before his death Thursday, was eulogized last night by his colleagues and friends as an honest, no-frills politician, who, more than any of his contemporaries, combined a passion for military strength with an unwavering tenderness toward the poor and disadvantaged.

"In an era of slick images and slack ideas, Scoop Jackson was a real man," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.).

"He mastered . . . the art of being a servant to a vast public . . . without being servile to any part of it," Columnist George Will said.

"His decency placed him steadfastly in the corner of the underdog in American society," said Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO.

On a steamy September night, more than 1,000 people crowded into the National Presbyterian Church on Nebraska Avenue to listen as Jackson, who died of a heart attack at 71, was praised as one of the most important and effective members of the U.S. Senate in this century.

"He was the finest public servant I have ever known," said Will, a longtime friend of Jackson's. Will said a portrait of Jackson deserves to be hung in the Senate chamber along with other "hall of fame" senators such as Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, Robert M. LaFollette and Robert A. Taft.

Will said that a Senate hall of fame without Jackson, whom he called "my hero," was as unthinkable as a baseball hall of fame without Babe Ruth.

In his eulogy, Kennedy, who served with Jackson on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said that his colleague committed his life to a "strong military and to a just society." But he added that Jackson never believed in paying for missiles "at the expense of a hungry child."

Referring to Will, who spoke before him at the memorial service, Kennedy said that on non-military domestic issues, "Scoop had such good sense that he always seemed to disagree with George."

Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan (D.-N.Y.), who called Jackson a "just" man who "knew the terrible danger in the age in which he lived," said it was fitting that Jackson's last public act was a denunciation Thursday of the Soviet Union for the shooting down a South Korean passenger jet.

Grenville Garside, who worked with the late Washington senator as counsel to the Senate Energy Committee, recited a list of Jackson's accomplishments. He mentioned that Jackson was a key force behind Alaskan statehood, national wilderness legislation, the Environmental Protection Act, the creation of a strategic petroleum reserve and the formation of the Youth Conservation Corps.

"Scoop's legacy touches our lives in many, many ways, Garside said.

Ben J. Wattenberg, an author, pollster and campaign adviser to Jackson's unsuccessful presidential bids in 1972 and 1976, began his eulogy last night by saying that "Scoop liked his own nickname." It was given to him by his sister when he was a boy in his hometown of Everett, Wash., because she thought he looked like a cartoon-strip character in the newspaper that Jackson delivered.

In the five days since Jackson's death, Wattenberg said, he and others who knew the senator well have been trying to come up with an appropriate memorial. But Wattenberg said he decided that no one memorial could suffice.

"Scoop has his own memorial," Wattenberg said. It is, he said, a long list of legislation that has profoundly changed the way Americans live.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 3, 1983]

SENATOR ALMOST

Who, in 1956, was a leading candidate for the Vice Presidential spot on the Democratic ticket?

Who, in 1960, almost beat out Lyndon Johnson to become John Kennedy's running mate?

Who, in 1972, came in second behind George McGovern for the Democratic nomination?

Which Democrat, at the start of 1976, was running dead even in the polls with President Ford?

Whom did senators once choose, overwhelmingly, when asked which of them was best qualified to be President?

The answer, in each case, is Henry M. Jackson, the Washington Democrat who died Thursday at the age of 71 after 42 years in Congress, 30 of them in the Senate. Indeed, Scoop (thus dubbed, in childhood, for a cartoon character) Jackson was so much and so long in the forefront of national politics that one wonders why he was not better known.

In recent years he was thought of as a neo-conservative, or as just conservative, or as the Last Cold Warrior. He surely was a leading Democratic hawk. He opposed the 1963 test-ban treaty, for instance. Of Vietnam he said, "If we don't stop Russia in Southeast Asia, we might as well sign a quitclaim deal to the rest of Asia and grant Soviet entry into the United States."

But he was not a political primitive. Yes, he started out as a hard-bitten prosecutor who pushed liquor out of Snohomish County, Wash. But he also quit the Senate Investigations subcommittee to protest Joseph McCarthy's red-baiting. Yes, he pushed for the United States to build a supersonic transport. But he was a sensitive conservationist who also pushed for the first Environmental Protection Act. Yes, he campaigned against school busing. But he was a father of conservation corps programs for disadvantaged youth.

Scoop Jackson personified the industry and practicality of working people in his home town of Everett. Small wonder he was re-elected so often and so overwhelmingly. Still, as a national candidate, people judged him wooden, lacking charisma, and, what may have stung most, rigid.

"I'm not that," he said in 1975. "My ideology is very simple: 'Let's see what the problem is and what we need to do.' . . . I've been called a conservative by some, a liberal and a radical. But the main thing is, what are you getting done. I believe in trial and error. If something won't work, let's try something else."

Scoop Jackson did not make it to the White House, but his own words describe, proudly and honorably, the next best thing: a lifetime of industry and excellence in Congress.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 5, 1983]

DECENCY KNIT JACKSON'S PHILOSOPHY INTO A COHERENT WHOLE

(By Ben J. Wattenberg)

Sen. Henry M. (Scoop) Jackson (D-Wash.), who died at his home last week at age 71, was the most decent, professional and idealistic man whom I have known in American political life. In a unique way those traits intertwined to create a legislative giant whose legacy here and around the world may well surpass that of many who held the presidency—which is the job that he trained for, and surely deserved.

He was so unpompous that it was almost laughable. He was so unphony that it could be politically painful. He was a religious man—and it was pointed out to him that it would be helpful to allude to this in his campaign speeches. But he declined; that's private, he said.

He never took a dime for a speech. The money went directly (and quietly) into a scholarship fund. He cared deeply about his staff members and their problems. More than one of them regarded him as a father.

There are many decent men in the world, but Scoop Jackson had a personal decency with a political dimension. It ended up writ large on the international scene. Those who didn't know him, or where he came from, called him a "cold warrior" and a "hawk." They thought him obsessed with weaponry.

In fact, as I say, he was an idealist. He was obsessed, all right—about indecency. He had fought fascists (the Silver Shirts) back when he was a young prosecutor in Washington state in the late 1930s. He was with the American forces that liberated the concentration camp at Buchenwald. He loathed totalitarianism, of the right and of the left, because it was indecent. He was not surprised that the Soviet Union was capable of shooting down a civilian airliner.

And so it came to pass that this man who some thought cared mostly about military hardware became the father of the human-rights movement.

There are arguments pro and arguments con about the particular efficacy of the Jackson Amendment, which stipulated that the United States would not grant trade benefits to nations that did not allow free emigration.

But when all is said and done, and when all the charges and countercharges are set aside, two facts remain: Several hundred thousand people, Jews and non-Jews, were able to emigrate from the Soviet Union because of the Jackson Amendment. And the United States went on record as saying that human rights mattered to us. We were prepared to reward those who were moving toward a recognition of human rights, and to punish those who would not.

In 1975 I visited Andrei Sakharov at his dacha outside Moscow. The Jackson Amendment was controversial then, as it is now. I asked him what he thought about it.

"Jackson knows how to make things happen," he said. "He is our champion."

The bedrock premise of the Jackson Amendment has energized much of American foreign policy ever since, and for the better. Finally, we Americans said that we care about decency.

Jackson cared enough about what his politics meant: to become a consummate professional politician. He never lost touch with the voters back home in Washington state. He raised plenty of money, and raised it early. He campaigned for Democrats all over the country, including those whose politics did not always appeal to him. He knew that you couldn't get help unless you gave help.

He was elected to the Senate in 1952 with 56 percent of the vote. That was too close. In the next five elections he averaged 72 percent of the vote. One year he got 82 percent. He rather liked that one.

Jackson's decency drove his idealism, and his professionalism bolstered his idealism. He ended up at a unique spot in the firmament of U.S., and global, politics. He was a liberal on domestic affairs; that was the decent thing. And he was the man who understood that we had to be strong if we were to promote the values of decency around the world.

It is the tragedy of recent American politics that such a position—combining domestic and international decency, which is the essence of what most Americans believe—has had such a difficult time finding a home in Scoop's party, let alone in the other party.

However, the battle is not over. There are millions of people out there who believe in what Scoop believed. They call themselves Jackson Democrats.

SCOOP—THE MAN FOR ALL SEASONS—HARDWORKING, SINCERE, UNSWERVING

(By John Komen)

Forever, it seemed, it was "Maggie and Scoop." The news releases would flow in a steady stream from Washington, D.C.—"Sens. Warren G. Magnuson and Henry M. (Scoop) Jackson announced today . . ." and there would be another shipyard contract, another federal grant to the University of Washington, another something for the state—and always the joint credit shared by Maggie and Scoop.

The voters broke up the team when they retired Maggie in the election of 1980. And now Scoop is gone, dead of a heart attack at his home high on the bluff overlooking Everett's Port Gardner Bay.

Twice that home on Grand Avenue had been seriously talked about as a possible Western White House. Once, in 1975, a newspaper displayed a photograph of the Jackson home juxtapositioned over a picture of the White House in Washington, D.C. Scoop Jackson was then making his second try at winning the Democratic presidential nomination, and his chances looked good.

At least, they appeared better than in 1972, when the times were not ready for Scoop Jackson as president. The peace movement had the Democratic National Convention in its grip, and Jackson "the hawk" was unacceptable. George McGovern became the Democratic nominee, and Jackson almost immediately geared up for 1976. But again it was not to be. This time the party chose Jimmy Carter, and Jackson's hopes of ever becoming president were gone forever.

Actually, the closest Jackson had come to the presidency occurred a decade earlier. In 1960, John F. Kennedy had Jackson at the very top of his list of potential vice presidential running mates. Had Kennedy followed through, and not chosen political expediency and Lyndon B. Johnson, Henry M. Jackson would have succeeded to the presidency upon JFK's assassination in 1963.

His home state seemed to accept it as a matter of course that this small town boy from Puget Sound was of presidential stature. They knew Scoop Jackson for what he was—hardworking, sincere, unswerving in his dedication to a strong America. Washingtonians just assumed that was what presidents were made of. To them Jackson personified the American ethic, and so it seemed only natural that the presidency would beckon.

Nor were Scoop Jackson's fellow Washingtonians unduly surprised when the prize never became his, for they knew that the chances were always long. Living out here in the far Northwest corner of the United States, they understood how little this state figured in the machinations of the power brokers back East. It was always a matter of some pride and no little amazement that one of Washington's own had broken through that Eastern bias and risen so far.

It was perhaps Jackson's steadiness of purpose that so impressed others beyond Washington's borders. Here it was taken for granted. But in a world of political expediency where men were constantly testing the winds to adjust their course, Scoop's solid ideals came to be recognized as something of real value to America.

It became almost routine for thoughtful men to turn to Jackson for guidance and reassurance when times were particularly difficult. Ernest Cuneo, a national columnist, once called him "a man for all seasons."

"In the deepening winter of our country's affairs," Cuneo wrote in 1974, "Henry M. Jackson has demonstrated he already is a very great de facto president of the United States."

He had his detractors, of course. The 1972 presidential compaign in his own home state can be remembered for its particular bitterness toward Scoop Jackson by many of his fellow Democrats. They were McGovern Democrats, out to take away Jackson's home state favorite-son delegates, and they hated as only fanatics can. They campaigned with a venom that still lingers among some of the old peace-movement protesters of that day. To them, Jackson was a thunderbolt-hurling warlord, a minion of Boeing and the CIA.

It was a simplistic view, a refusal to recognize that Jackson was many other things besides a "hawk." There was Jackson, the liberal proponent of civil rights; Jackson, the environmentalist; Jackson, the believer in education, and Jackson, the quietly compassionate human being.

For years, until disclosure laws required otherwise, it wasn't known that he had endowed thousands of dollars to a scholarship fund for underprivileged youngsters. He had quietly contributed every cent received in honorariums for speaking appearances.

You could disagree with Jackson's views. You could even dislike him. But even his most fervent enemies would have to admit that Henry M. Jackson served his country and its people with great distinction.

LAST OF A BREED . . .

(By Joseph Kraft)

Any number of senators can replace Scoop Jackson in such specialized areas as energy, defense, civil liberties and Great Power politics. But nobody else can draw all these themes together in ways that make things happen.

So his untimely death represents a genuine national loss. The more so as it comes against a general decline in the caliber of public servants.

The Scandinavian heritage marked Jackson in palpable fashion. He was a self-reliant individual, not, as so many politicos, a groupie. He liked to work things out for himself. While he was not a subtle or deep thinker, his convictions, once established, held firm.

Much fuss has been made as to whether he was a liberal or a conservative. In fact, his shaping political experience was the New Deal. Like all New Dealers, he believed in the power of government to solve problems. He looked to government to redress the balance between rich and poor, to protect the rights of labor and minorities, to make available cheap power and abundant water and recreation. He also counted on government to manage national security in a robust way.

Because his views were so steadfast, he developed over time a personal constituency of extraordinary depth and reach. He won six terms as a congressman from the state of Washington, and six as a senator—the last with 69 percent of the vote. No one was closer to the Jewish community. Nor to labor. So unlike almost all other senators and congressmen, Jackson did not merely speak for himself. He commanded big battalions.

His New Deal connections, moreover, carried him beyond narrow support of the congressional prerogatives to a presidential perspective. He knew the ins and outs of the federal agencies better than most of their leaders. He sought the White House twice himself, and worked hand in glove with two Democratic presidents—Kennedy and Johnson. A Republican, Richard Nixon, offered him the post of secretary of defense.

Because he had troops and a feel for the presidential viewpoint, he exerted extraordinary influence on the course of events. He practically determined energy policy. He shaped basic legislation on the environment and the development of water resources. His insistence on tying relations with Russia to explicit guarantees on Jewish emigration frustrated the policy of détente undertaken by Henry Kissinger under Nixon and Ford.

Most important, he personified bipartisan support for a strong defense. Other senators—notably John Tower, the Texas Republican who now heads the Armed Services Committee, and Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat—set as much store by efficient military force as Jackson. But he alone crossed ideological lines. He fostered trust between the Pentagon and the unions. He kept labor patriotic and the generals in touch with ordinary people. He thus served as a potent factor in the building of national consensus.

Had he lived slightly longer, the true extent of his influence might have been made manifest. For the chances are the Democrats will carry the Senate in 1984. Jackson would have become chairman of the Armed Services Committee. He would have dominated the Appropriations Committee, for the likely chairman, John Stennis of Mississippi, is over 80 and not in the pink. The combination would have given Jackson far more power than any senator has held since Richard Russell some 30 years ago.

As it is, he is the last of a breed. New senators are made on television, and in an age where ideological fashion is turned against government. They do not build loyalties quietly from within. They go for the evening news, usually by profiling themselves, from right or left, against the powers that be. More and more, the Senate is a collection of egos.

Leadership in the Senate, accordingly, has lost its appeal to men of large views and high ability. Howard Baker, the majority leader, is stepping down in large part because the petty quarrels of the Senate afford him scant springboard for the presidency. John Tower is quitting at least in part because of wounds sustained in a nasty debate over the MX missile last month.

The corrosive forces at work in the Senate operate throughout government. The quality of Cabinet officers, and governors, and mayors, has slipped. Private satisfaction exerts, particularly for intelligent people, a stronger appeal than public glory.

Just why is hard to say. There seems to be, as Ablert Hirschman has pointed out, a kind of "private-public cycle." "Societies," he writes in his fine work "Shifting Involvements," are in some way predisposed toward vacillation between periods of intense preoccupation with public issues and almost total concentration on private improvement."

If so, the frustration fostered by selfishness will eventually breed a new realization that the "pursuit of happiness" means a quest for public good. When that happens, we may see again the likes of Henry Jackson.

. . . AND HERO

Painted on the walls of the Senate reception room are portraits of the five men who were selected by a special committee, a quarter of a century ago, to constitute a kind of Senate hall of fame. The portraits are of Clay, Calhoun, Webster, La Follette and Taft. There is no more space on the walls of that room, but there is a nonfunctional door. That door should be removed, and the wall filled in, and adorned with a portrait of a sixth senator. A Senate hall of fame without Henry Martin Jackson is as unthinkable as Cooperstown without George Herman Ruth.

A silly person once said that only silly persons have heroes. But only exceptionally small persons will not pay homage to the exceptionally large persons among us. Heroes make vivid the values by which we try to live. I say, unabashedly, and with many others: Henry Jackson was my hero.

Because he was magnificently uninterested in the cosmetics of politics, dull persons considered him unexciting. But discerning persons by the millions recognized that his kind of character is as exciting as it is rare. Persons who, under the pressure of fashion, are as flexible as fly rods found Jackson incomprehensively. They came to the absurd conclusion that he had departed from the liberal tradition.

He was a pioneer of environmentalism. He was the preeminent champion of civil rights. He fought for the full domestic agenda and authored legislation that put teeth into U.S. pronouncements on behalf of Jews and others persecuted by the Soviet regime. And if Jackson's proposals for substantial force reductions had been adopted, we might have had arms limitation agreements that actually limit arms.

The ironic truth is that Jackson was one of those persons—Felix Frankfurter was another—whose constancy was mistaken for change. He never wavered from his party's traditional belief that there is no incompatibility between government with a caring fact at home and government with a stern face toward adversaries.

Jackson was an anchor against weariness, wishful thinking and apostasy in his party, and his country. He nurtured in this republic something without which no republic can long endure: a sense that problems are tractable. To be in his presence was to experience the wholesome infection of a reviving spirit. This was especially remarkable because he, more than any contemporary, looked unblinkingly at, and spoke uncomfortingly about, the terrors of our time. He taught less clearsighted, less brave persons how to combine realism and serenity.

He missed the ultimate prize of our politics, perhaps because he lacked the crackling temperament that marks persons who burn on the surface with a hard, gem-like flame. If his political metabolism seemed uncommonly calm, that is because he had the patience of a mature politican—a gift for planning, thirst for detail and a sense of ripeness in issues. He had a flame, but he had depth in which he kept it.

In committees and on the Senate floor, he was a cannon loaded to the muzzle with knowledge born of diligence. His unrivaled effectiveness was a rebuke to the less industrious and a refutation of the theory that in politics fancy footwork is necessary and sufficient.

A legislature is a face-to-face society, where character and moral force tell. What Jackson did in committees and on the floor was awesome. But it was only a small fraction of the work he did during four decades of 18-hour days, working with one member after another, one member at a time, building coalitions of common sense.

I remember a day, nearly a decade ago, when I went panting along in the wake of Jackson on a campaign swing from Washington to Philadelphia to Shreveport and back. When I was decanted from the little plane after midnight, I was a broken shell of my former self. Henry Jackson, twice my age and fresh as a tulip, bounded off into the night.

His legendary energy flowed as much from his spirit as from his physiology. His biography is an essay on the sources of American vitality. He was the son of immigrants, and of the American West. He had the stamina of parents who crossed an ocean and then a continent, and he had the optimism of his region.

For longer than I have been alive, Congress has been embellished by his presence. And for longer than I live, public life shall be enriched by the radiating force of his character. Why? Consider.

If you wonder who real leaders are, find out who has real followers. By real followers I mean persons who follow a leader onto a path of life, who adopt careers where they navigate by stars he has taught them to see. The social geology of this city is layer upon layer of persons pulled into public life by the example of lives worth emulating. Today, in numerous public offices, and in law and journalism, there is a thick layer of Henry Jackson's men and women.

There are those, and they are legion, who call themselves "Jackson Democrats." I can say with absolute authority that there is such a thing as a "Jackson Republican."

Henry Jackson mastered the delicate balance of democracy, the art of being a servant to a vast public without being servile to any part of it. He was the finest public servant I have known.

CONSTITUENTS DIDN'T KNOW HIM PERSONALLY, STILL FEEL VOID

(By Ned Carrick)

The common people—who knew Sen. Henry Jackson mostly by reputation, the people he once delivered newspapers to—felt the same loss this morning as did Jackson's close friends and political colleagues.

Everett's downtown, still waking-up for the business day, was quiet and mournful, and the early arrivals of the regular coffee-and-donut crowd expressed unanimous feelings of grief and sadness.

"This is an awful shock," said Frank Taylor, sipping coffee with fellow GTE employee Fred Hanenburg at Karl's Bakery on Wetmore Avenue.

"This is a loss to the state and the country." Hanenburg added. "And he's put a lot into this county."

Four women, employees of nearby businesses and professional offices who were seated in another booth, agreed that Jackson's death is a major loss to the state and nation.

"I was in deep shock. I didn't think we would ever lose him," said Sharon Michel.

"He was a good balance and took strong stands when they were needed," added Donna Wirt.

Dottie Seigal, whose husband is a retired military man and who has two sons in the military, said she feels Jackson was a key figure in keeping this country strong.

"He could make a decision immediately when it was needed," she said.

Having learned of the senator's death only this morning, Betty Knight said she was "still trying to digest the fact that he's gone."

In Lynnwood, Judy Schlegel, a clerk at the Fred Meyer auto licensing window, said, "It's terrible. It's going to be a great loss. It's not going to be easy to find anybody to replace him, that's for sure."

Kristie Bolding, Schlegel's co-worker, said: "I think it's going to be really bad for the state. It's going to have an effect on the economy. He had a lot of power and authority and he could do things somebody else new won't be able to do."

Ron Peluso of Lynnwood said he was shocked when he picked up his morning newspaper to learn Jackson had died. Just the night before, he heard Jackson talking on television about the Korean Air Lines jet that was shot down.

"He was definitely an asset to all of us," Peluso said. "He'll be missed."

Ed Soulds, a federal government worker from Lynnwood, said it would be "very difficult to replace" Jackson. "I think it's going to be a tremendous loss to the Pacific Northwest."

Jewell Hartnell, a retired nurse from Edmonds, never met Jackson but felt she knew him better than many people. Hartnell's roommate for many years, May Moore, died last June at age 100. Moore had been a close friend of the Jacksons and each year since they had married the senator sent Moore a Christmas card with a portrait of his family, Hartnell said. The collection was one of Moore's prized possessions.

"I got to know him that way," Hartnell said. "I felt very bad about it. I think he was a great senator."

On Colby Avenue in Everett, at Rick's Donut and Coffee Shop, Jim Bradley, an Everett Mall clothing-store employee, added his feeling of shock.

"He was pretty much a critic of the Soviet Union," Bradely said as he read Thursday's Herald account of the downing of the Korean jet. "That is a bad business," he said of the air disaster.

Nearby, dentist Harold Fey noted that Jackson was a "very dedicated man."

"He served his country well and he had time to visit with the people. He listened," Fey said.

"He will be sorely missed," added Don Wallin, an auto parts salesman. "He was a dedicated man."

Al Cooper, a plumbing and heating tradesman, said Jackson's death is "very definitely a loss to this country."

"He was a grass-roots person," Cooper said. "I didn't always agree with what he said—but, then, we shouldn't always agree all the time. This is very definitely a loss to the country."

Walking to her job at a Colby Avenue bank, Barbara Lindberg described Jackson's death as a "great loss."

"We've lost a people person," she said. "It is a great loss to our state and to the nation. He had real insight to issues.

"He was Mr. Everett."

FELLOW POLITICIANS SAY OF SCOOP—NOBODY ELSE LIKE HIM

(By Peter Callaghan)

EVERETT.—Flags flying at half-mast throughout Washington state today were the visible signs of tribute to Sen. Henry Jackson. State political leaders and friends honored him with their words.

Gov. John Spellman, who ordered the traditional sign of mourning late Thursday night, called Democrat Jackson a "great patriot who fervently believed in and lived the highest ideals of our American way of life."

"People throughout the world knew him as a defender of freedom and an enemy of tyranny," the Republican governor said in an official statement issued moments after the announcement of Jackson's death.

"Sen. Jackson was a strong and effective advocate of the best interests of our state and our nation," Spellman said. "He was a respected leader in both national and foreign affairs. The people of Washington mourn his passing."

Paul O'Connor, the governor's press secretary, said Spellman has directed that all flags in the state be flown at half-mast beginning immediately and lasting until after Jackson's funeral.

Former U.S. Sen. Warren Magnuson, contacted late Thursday at his Seattle home, said the shock of Jackson's death left him almost speechless.

"I always thought of Scoop as indestructible," Magnuson said. "He kept good care of himself and he worked hard.

"I'm very distressed—both Germaine and I are," he said. "We were not only colleagues but friends."

Magnuson preceded Jackson to Congress and was the state's senior senator until his defeat in 1980. While in the Senate, Jackson and Magnuson complemented each other politically—Magnuson as the expert on domestic affairs, Jackson as the master of foreign policy.

"Our spheres of influence covered everything," Magnuson said.

Magnuson gave testament to Jackson's prestige as an expert on foreign affaris and defense.

"All the Senate would go to him for advice," Magnuson said. "Oh, they're going to miss him. . . . I'm going to miss him."

He called Jackson prophetic.

"He'd size up the situation, and they'd take his word," Magnuson said. "He was quite concerned about the Marines in Lebanon: He said that would be a disaster, and it was.

"But he wasn't an 'I told you so' kind of person," Magnuson said.

Jackson was well liked in the Senate and able to help solve the problems of the state and the region because of his ability to work with other senators, Magnuson said.

"If there was a problem in the state, people would listen," he said.

Washington state will miss his prestige and his seniority," Magnuson said of Jackson.

Rep. Al Swift, the Bellingham Democrat who now holds Jackson's old seat in the 2nd Congressional District, said that the senator's great love for and knowledge of Everett and Snohomish County gave him perspective on national and international issues.

"I had dinner with (Seattle mayor) Charles Royer Saturday," said a saddened Swift, who was vacationing on Guemus Island near Anacortes. "I told him then that if there were no health problems, that I thought Scoop might run again and would win again (in 1988)."

Four members of the state's congressional delegation who received the news in Tokyo expressed shock and surprise.

The four are on a good will-educational mission to Japan sponsored by the Japan-American Society of Washington.

"We're all shocked and deeply sorrowed at the news," said Rep. Rod Chandler of Redmond by telephone from Tokyo. "It's a terrible loss to all of us—Democrats and Republicans alike.

"It's fair to say a political era in the state of Washington has passed on," Chandler said.

Reps. Joel Pritchard, R-Seattle; Mike Lowry, D-Seattle; and Sid Morrison, R-Yakima, all spoke of the kindness Jackson showed to them when they entered Congress as freshmen lawmakers.

"Everyone in the delegation looked to him for leadership," Chandler said. "That's lost. One heartbeat stops, and we lose much more than just one man."

Republican Morrison said Jackson considered state congressmen from both parties part of the team.

"He called me the night of my election in 1980 when it became obvious I would be part of the team and welcomed me aboard," Morrison said. "He was most generous with his staff. He shared everything . . . including his home. He went out of his way to make us feel welcome."

Lowry said Jackson was a famous political campaigner, working hard for Democratic candidates. But once the election was over, Jackson became a statesman, Lowry said.

"He had many doors open to him that he made available to anyone in the congressional delegation," Lowry said. "It was a tremendous advantage to be from the same state as Scoop.

Lowry said legislation to designate state wilderness areas and make rules regarding its use was at the top of the delegation's list of goals for the next session. Its passage now is clouded.

"Jackson was a key because of his good relationship with both Republicans and Democrats in the Senate," Lowry said.

"Losing someone with Scoop's power makes it more difficult to accomplish our agenda."

Pritchard, who served with Jackson for 11 years, called Jackson a legend. He said the shock of his death was heightened by Jackson's appearance of health.

"When I think of Scoop, I think of someone who was always on the job—Saturday, Sunday, always," Pritchard said. "He was going like a 30-year-old when he was 70.

"During the last campaign, we were flying back to the state together," Pritchard remembered. "I asked him, For heaven's sake, you have no serious challenge this year, can't you ease off a little?' "

"He said, 'At may age, you can't change your ways.' "

Rep. Wayne Ehlers, speaker of the Washington House of Representatives, said, "I don't think anyone knew he had a heart problem. . . . He was so energetic. People who tried to keep up with him were amazed at him."

Ehlers was set to meet with Jackson this week to discuss possible congressional action regarding the Washington Public Power Supply System.

"Everyone assumed Sen. Jackson was going to take the lead on it," Ehlers said. "This isn't going to help."

Ehlers said a tribute was paid to Jackson's knowledge of foreign affairs just Thursday. After Soviet fighers shot down a Korean passenger liner, the national news media sought out Jackson's comments.

"People always wanted his reaction," Ehlers said. "We lose that as a state and as a nation."

"It's such a big loss—a real loss for our party and our state," state Democratic Chairwoman Karen Marchioro told the Associated Press.

"Scoop and I became close friends, and he helped me so much. I feel real, real bad about this. He was already helping us make plans for the '84 elections."

MILESTONES WERE MANY IN HENRY JACKSON'S CAREER

Some milestones in the life of Henry Martin Jackson:

Born in Everett on May 31, 1912.

Was graduated from Everett High School in 1930.

Received a University of Washington law degree in 1935.

Practiced law with Everett's Black and Rucker firm from 1936 to 1938.

Declared his candidacy for Snohomish County prosecuting attorney in July 1938, saying, "My duty under the oath of office is clear-cut and well-defined and I will do my best to comply with such oath of office and the duties pertaining to it."

Elected prosecutor in November 1938, after a then-innovative campaign of door-to-door canvassing by the candidate and volunteers. The 26-year-old proved that he meant what he said about complying with the duties of office, quickly launching raids on illegal liquor sellers and gambling joints. He acknowledged that he had been offered payoffs to lay off, but, in what would be a pattern of his career, he refused to be swayed from the straight and narrow.

Elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in November 1940. He became an early backer of publicly owned electric utilities.

Elected to the U.S. Senate in his first statewide race in 1952, unseating Harry P. Cain, Republican incumbent. Jackson was assigned to work on a committee headed by Sen. Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin, who was conducting a witch hunt for communists in government. Jackson took a minor role in opposing McCarthy's excesses and voted for censure in December 1954. Soon after, Jackson was hospitalized and doctors attributed his health problems to tension. He began a daily regimen of exercise that helped keep him fit in years to come. He continued his diligent work habits and built a liberal record of supporting federal spending for education, welfare, health care and dams.

Pushed by a number of party leaders and the press as a potential Democratic vice presidential candidate in the weeks leading up to the party's 1956 convention. One magazine called him the West's top hope. But when presidential nominee Adlai Stevenson threw the choice open, Jackson was not nominated.

Re-elected to the Senate in November 1958 by 300,000 votes. He returned to the Senate to concentrate more on questions of national defense.

Withheld his support for John F. Kennedy's presidential bid until the last minute as another push for Jackson as a vice presidential candidate developed. Sen. Warren Magnuson switched his support from Lyndon B. Johnson to Kennedy to help Jackson get the vice presidential spot. Kennedy chose LBJ as his running mate, but got a reluctant Jackson to become chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Jackson quit the position, one he never really liked, before Kennedy's inauguaration.

Married to Helen Hardin of Albuquerque, N.M., on Dec. 16, 1961. The couple would have a daugher, Anna Marie, on Feb. 7, 1963, and a son, Peter Hardin, on April 3, 1966.

Re-elected to the Senate in 1964 by 538,000 votes.

Introduced legislation that led, in 1968, to creation of the North Cascades National Park.

Achieved perhaps his greatest national legislative victory with passage of the National Environmental Policy Act in 1969, the first major piece of environmental legislation.

Won Senate re-election in 1970 with 83 percent of the vote.

Formally announced his candidacy for presidency on Nov. 19, 1971. He described himself as "a law, order and justice man" and said that "putting people back to work must rank as a key priority."

Gave up his campaign for the presidency, after a series of disastrous showings in primaries and depletion of campaign funds, on May 3, 1972.

Was rated one of the two top contenders for the 1976 Democratic nomination in mid-1975.

Won the Massachusetts primary on March 2, 1976, taking 23 percent of the vote, but finished third in the Florida primary a week later and dropped out of active campaigning after Jimmy Carter beat him in Pennsylvania.

Re-elected to the Senate in 1976 with 74 percent of the vote.

Helped keep the proposed SALT II nuclear arms limitation treaty negotiated by the U.S and the Soviet Union from reaching the Senate floor for a ratification vote in 1979.

Re-elected in 1982 with 69 percent of the vote.

Cast his 11,000th roll call vote, as he helped keep financing for nerve-gas production in the Pentagon's 1984 authorization bill, in July 1983. Colleagues gave him an ovation to mark the occasion.

Made his fourth trip to China in August, getting a warm reception from Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping.

PLAIN FOLKS RECALL JACKSON AS FRIEND

(By Patrick Connolly)

EVERETT, WASH. (AP.)—Plain folks recalled a past with a powerful friend and expressed concern about a future without him when they reflected today on Sen. Henry Jackson's death.

They said that he rose to power without forgetting his hometown roots in Everett. He hobnobbed with the mighty without forgetting the neighbors, they said.

He was always good for a handshake when he brought his family into a local restaurant for brunch.

"Every year I got a personal Christmas card from him," said Steve Davis, 24, a La-Conner police officer who was Washington state's national Boy's Club "Boy of the Year" in 1977. That's when he went to Washington, D.C., and met "Scoop."

Davis said, "Scoop established his career but he kept his ties at home."

Larry Hart's mother went to school with Jackson and Hart, 47, said he agrees with what his mother told him—Jackson was honest and "always for the working man.

"It was a shock to hear he died. I've always voted for him. He was a good man," said Hart, a bowling alley employee.

Michelle Miller, a cocktail waitress in an Everett hotel, said she met him several times when he brought his family in for Sunday dinner. "I didn't get to know him, but he seemed like a nice guy," she said.

Jackson's absence spells less clout for Washington state in general and Everett in particular.

Everett was in the running along with Seattle as the possible home port for a Navy task force eventually to be based in Puget Sound, said Chuck Pederson, an Everett taxicab driver. But without Jackson, "I don't think the Navy will come here," said Pederson.

Washington state lost it's last vestige of Senate seniority with Jackson's death, noted Stephen Conner, 24, an Everett restaurant clerk. The state's senior senator is now Slade Gorton, a first-term Republican.

"As far as seniority, we'll be up a creek for a few years," said Conner.

Anne Renfro, an Everett bartender, said Jackson's office "helped get me going in the right direction" when she once asked him to straighten out a state industrial accident claim for her former husband. "I was very upset to hear he died," she said.

So was Tom Upshaw, 24, a marine electrician who grew up in Everett. He called Jackson's death "a total loss.

"I felt it inside. I didn't know him but I used to bicycle past his house to go fishing. It's a loss to everybody," he said.

HENRY M. JACKSON, GREAT AMERICAN

At times, noting his inflexibility on certain issues, Henry M. Jackson would describe himself as a "stubborn Norwegian."

Norwegian by ancestry he was, but in a career that climbed from a newspaper delivery boy in Everett to highly respected senior U.S. senator, he was a great American.

Even those who bitterly opposed some of his social policies voted for him because they knew that in one area, love of country and the desire to keep it strong, there was no one who surpassed "Scoop" Jackson.

It is ironic, and tragic, that a heart attack felled the senator at the moment of crisis over the shooting down of the Korean passenger plane. His last public statements were on this issue and surely by this morning the president, the Pentagon, the State Department and the people would have been calling Sen. Jackson to get his counsel. It had happened so many times over so many years—"Let's hear what Scoop thinks about this."

Beyond the loss of a wise and experienced senator though, many, particularly in this state, feel personal grief. No matter how much time Sen. Jackson spent in the power centers of the world, when he came back among his relatives and friends here in our Washington, he became "old shoe," ready to listen to home-town problems.

The measure of a man is how much he will be missed when he is gone. Henry "Scoop" Jackson will be missed all the way from the world's capital cities to the smallest crossroads in his home state.

But he left a legacy of love for and service to his country and state that should serve as an inspiration to those who must now try to take his place.

WASHINGTON HAS LOST POWER AND A FRIEND

(By David Ammons)

With "Scoop" Jackson's unexpected death Thursday night Washington state lost a powerful, silver-tongued advocate in the nation's capital, a master politician and backslapping friend.

His death, coupled with the 1980 defeat of his longtime collegue and friend Warren G. Magnuson, marked the end of a political era—an era of persuasion politics, porkbarrel and power.

Their one-two punch, coupled with a powerful House delegation, gave the Evergreen State what many observers called the strongest single delegation in Congress.

Scoop and Maggie delivered. For years, Washington residents got back more federal dollars than they paid out in taxes.

Democrat Henry M. Jackson had a national and even international reputation as an anticommunist foe of the Soviet Union, as an outspoken ally of Israel and as a supporter of a strong defense.

His two runs for the White House, his onetime chairmanship of the Democratic Party and his frequent appearances on network television kept him in the limelight and put Washington on the map.

Even when the Democrats lost control of the Senate in 1980, he remained a power to reckon with, frequently consulted by the Reagan Administration and the majority Republicans.

Jackson was ranking Democrat on the Armed Services Committee and had strong influence in foreign affairs, energy, environment, budget and other issues. His legislation created the Environmental Protection Agency now headed by another homestate boy, William Ruckelshaus.

Between Jackson and freshman Sen. Slade Gorton, Washington state could "work the system" in the Capitol, with Jackson retaining his power to sway colleagues in both parties and Gorton enjoying his instant role as member of the majority.

Defense contracts and military appropriations, so crucial to a state so dependent on defense, regularly went Washington's way. Research grants rolled in, particularly at the University of Washington.

Jackson was known as the "senator from Boeing" by both critics and admirers for the way he looked at the interests of the homestate aerospace firm.

Washington was often chosen as a pilot state for various federal programs.

But for many Washington residents, he was simply "the senator," the son of Norwegian emigrants, a man who could shuck his suit jacket and pump hands at the plant gates, a man who would pound the podium and rail against the Soviets or inflation or other bugaboos.

Jackson, the cosmopolitan who moved in elite circles and dined with kings and presidents, could enjoy a beer with the boys at the union hall or walk the waterfront of his beloved Everett.

Scoop Jackson was a Democrat—and often a partisan one—but voters elected him 12 times to the House and Senate, always with a bipartisan landslide sendoff. Elections became more like coronations.

Power, and a friend: that's what Washington lost.

[From the Spokane (Wash.) Spokeman Review, Sept. 3, 1983]

JACKSON WILL BE MISSED

Sen. Henry M. Jackson was more than an enormously talented man. He also was a very dedicated one.

In a political career that spanned more than 40 years, Washington state's senior U.S. senator served both his state and nation with distinction.

He was one of the most effective and respected members of the Congress.

In his death Thursday at age 71, our nation lost a political giant; whose experience and influence will not be replaced easily.

Jaskson worked with nine presidents in a congressional career that began in 1940. The Democrat spent six terms in the House and was elected last year to his sixth term in the Senate.

Through the years, he offered his constituents an interesting study in contrasts.

Though he received mostly liberal ratings from the various special-interest groups, his hard-line stands on national security issues earned him the admiration of many Republicans and conservatives.

He was an expert on national defense and an outspoken advocate of military preparedness.

He was, however, a man of peace.

Mutual arms reductions were a Jackson priority long before nuclear weapons struck the public consciousness. As a member of the House in 1951, Jackson sponsored a resolution calling on the United Nations to pursue "an effective and enforceable system of worldwide disarmament."

Such an agreement, he said, should cover conventional and biological weapons, chemical agents and atomic and hydrogen bombs—the same weapons that concern us today.

And Jackson's commitment to meaningful arms reductons never wavered.

In 1979, he flatly stated that the SALT II treaty negotiated by the Carter administration did not go far enough in achieving genuine arms cuts. He even accused the administration of following a policy of "appeasement."

In 1982, Jackson again was the driving force behind a Senate resolution proposing a long-term, mutual and verifiable nuclear arms freeze with the Soviet Union.

Jackson came to the fore once again this summer when he introduced a resolution advocating massive American aid to Central America. He, along with Republican Sen. Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, proposed a social development program not unlike the Marshall Plan that rebuilt Europe following World War II.

Jackson warned that if not corrected, the social and economic problems of Central America could jeopardize American economic and security interests.

Jackson frequently was ahead of the pack in identifying problems and recommending solutions, and he always was effective in articulating his design for world peace.

His wide view and clear vision will be sorely missed.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 3, 1983]

HENRY MARTIN JACKSON

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, who died Thursday night at his home in Everett, Wash., showed a consistency and clarity of purpose unusual in politicians. First elected to the House in 1940 and then to the Senate in 1952, he was one of the few members of the current Congress to have served before Pearl Harbor. From those days, Mr. Jackson drew the lesson that freedom depends on preparedness and military strength.

He was interested from the beginning in nuclear energy and atomic weapons, and he believed that the United States must never let the Soviets gain advantage. That theme runs straight through his service on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy in the 1940s. It explains the defense commitments he extracted for supporting the limited test ban treaty and the conditions he demanded for supporting the first strategic arms agreement—otherwise neither would have been ratified—as well as his misgivings about SALT II.

From the beginning, he was interested as well in natural resources and the environment. He turned down the position of undersecretary of the interior in 1950, and he was a force behind environmental laws in the 1970s. As chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, he balanced environmental and economic interests skillfully.

On domestic issues, he started off as "a 100 percent New Dealer" and never wavered in his faith that an active federal government could improve the lot of the ordinary person. But he always understood that government could abuse the civil liberties of its citizens. In his first years in the Senate, he stood up to Joe McCarthy when few others dared, never flinching.

He ran unsuccessfully for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1972 and 1976. But he gained in his career a more elusive victory; ideas he championed have held up over time. In the last four decades, Americans and their government have generally advanced freedom, increased prosperity and improved the quality of life. In dozens of ways, Henry Jackson served those goals.

In the process, Scoop Jackson remained unpretentious and good-humored. He lived modestly and always gave his outside earnings to charity. He was one of the few public officials in the 1970s to send his children to D.C. public schools. A Senate insider, he took on his colleagues and got them to limit their outside earnings. He leaves behind an example of honorable and effective public service, responsive to events but informed by conviction and steadiness of purpose.

[From the Sarasota (Fla.) Herald-Tribune, Sept. 3, 1983]

SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON

The unexpected death of Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson, 71 in his native state of Washington is a blow not only to his constituents—whom he served in the nation's capital for 43 years—but to his colleagues in the Senate and to the several causes for which he was the outstanding spokesman.

Jackson, a firm anti-communist and defense expert, commented in his last press conference—12 hours before his death—that no barbarism by the Russians could surprise him. He had reference to the brutal destruction of a Korean airliner, with at least 265 aboard, by a Soviet fighter plane.

The senator got his nickname early in life—when he was a newsboy for the Everett Herald—and he went on from one personal "scoop" to another all his life. He was a racket-busting prosecutor in his home county—Snohomish—and was elected to Congress after three years in that post. He served six terms in the House before being elected and re-elected to the Senate.

He was offered cabinet posts by Democratic President Harry Truman and Republican Richard Nixon, but he chose to stay on Capitol Hill except for a couple of forays into the presidential sweepstakes—in which he might have done better if his Norwegian conscience had not kept him pinned to the job he already had rather than going all-out for another, on the taxpayer's time.

When last re-elected to the Senate—last fall—he had such a landslide victory it was very nearly a unanimous stamp of approval from his state's voters.

The senator was a liberal on domestic affairs—especially civil rights—and a steadfast friend of Israel.

He was also so dedicated to a strong defense that he was at times called "the senator from Boeing," but his colleagues knew that he was much more: a sharp, hard-working legislator who paid intense attention to his work. In recent years, this meant primarily the Armed Services Committee, of which he would undoubtedly have become chairman next year if the Democratic Party should regain its majority in the upper chamber.

Senator Jackson cast his 11,000th rollcall vote in the Senate last July—and received a standing ovation from his colleagues. It was a record of devotion to duty that will stand for years to come.

He may also be remembered as the powerful political supporter of Adm. Hyman Rickover throughout the latter's long task of building a nuclear Navy while staying, productively, on active duty far past normal retirement age. And the senator was also the floor manager for the bills which brought both Alaska and Hawaii their statehoods.

It has been of "Scoop" Jackson that he was so consistent in his attitudes that he was "boring." Yet he was among the kindest and most considerate of senators, as his peers today are attesting.

With policy-changing and fashionable-view-adopting becoming an ever faster and more bewildering game—in Washington as elsewhere—the country will sadly miss Henry Jackson, who knew where he stood. And stood there come hell or high water!

WE KNEW THIS STORY, AND WERE ALL THE MORE SADDENED

(By Joann Byrd)

It was a story we would have to tell someday.

But Scoop Jackson's mortality hadn't been evident at his hometown newspaper, and we began the story Thursday night in something like shock.

It was only after The Herald's first edition was off the press and in our hands Friday that some of us grasped the truth of what we had been writing:

Henry M. Jackson, whose nickname and childhood were associated with this newspaper, whose career had helped put our community on the international map, who never forgot his hometown newspaper in the crush of attention from the influential and glamorous national media, was dead.

We knew instinctively the immensity of the story, because we had watched Jackson as closely as any newspaper in the country. As wire services dispatched stories from Washington, D.C. and the wire services, television stations, newspapers and magazines from across the continent sought The Herald's help in capturing the Jackson story, our measure of his global stature was reinforced.

But Jackson was more to our readers than an international figure. He was a hometown boy who made very, very good, and never forgot his roots. Many reporters, editors and photographers at The Herald had interviewed or photographed him time and again, and he had made himself accessible to us at home and in Washington, D.C., whenever we wanted comment on the news, his views on a subject, a look at Henry M. Jackson.

Most of us had memories of our encounters with Scoop Jackson, war stories we found inspiration to tell. We indulged ourselves in those only fleetingly as we set about our task Thursday night.

And though journalists routinely cast a skeptical eye toward politicians, there were no skeptics in this newsroom. It took a third of the staff working through the night, and another third of our people beginning their day long before daylight, to produce a news package worthy of Jackson and of his hometown.

Writers, photographers and editors spent the night interviewing, photographing, phoning, searching voluminous files, compiling, cross-checking, locating people, dredging up memories and negatives, designing pages and revamping our plans.

About the time our first edition began rolling off the press—as we were looking for staff members who had had enough sleep to continue through the day—The Herald became a news subject and a source.

Three television stations filmed late morning in our newsroom, composing room and pressroom, interviewing Herald people who had risen to the occasion almost as if this were the thing they could do in recognition of the man.

Two wire services called back, asking for more. A Midwest paper wanted to commission a Saturday morning story. Two newspapers asked for a color portrait. A Canadian magazine called to ask, "Can you confirm that Henry Jackson once was given an award for delivering 7,362 Heralds without a customer complaint?" An out-of-state newspaper asked for our perspective on the man. Newspapers we stopped counting asked to reproduce old photos from our files. Reporters we stopped counting asked us to suggest people they could interview about Jackson.

And we helped them the best we could—proud, I suppose, to be the experts on a major story, but wishing nonetheless this were a story none of us had had to tell.

HENRY M. "SCOOP" JACKSON

"Scoop" Jackson, who gained his nickname as a newsboy and who gave 45 years of his life to Congress, 30 of them as a senator, is gone. His energy, his dedication, will be missed by both liberals and conservative.

He'll be missed by the liberals because he fought fiercely for the poor, the downtrodden and for social programs to aid them. Conservatives will miss his consistent, unswerving support for a strong defense, and the wary eye he never took off the Soviet Union.

Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson, a Democrat who never lost an election in his home state of Washington, was a political paradox.

Jackson was noted for his tough anti-Soviet stands. His death at 71 Thursday came only a few hours after he had learned that a Soviet fighter pilot shot down the Korean jumbo jetliner killing 269 people. The shock, his distress, may well have brought on the death of this man who did not smoke, drank little and exercised religiously.

For years, few Americans outside of his state knew who he was, or for what he stood. In the early 1970s, he came into the limelight with his unswerving support for Israel, his distrust of the Soviets. He became known among colleagues as "the last of the cold warriors."

But he refused to allow politics to interfere with his principles, his common sense.

Jackson became the darling of the environmentalists, when, as chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, he pushed through the Environmental Protection Act that created the EPA.

Jackson was twice a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination. But voters could not bring themselves to buy the blend of Cold War foreign policy and New Deal economics of this senator who served in the House under Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

He summed up his creed in his brief 1975 announcement that he was seeking the Democratic presidential nomination: "I would like to help the people in this country who are getting hurt. The little people—little business, the elderly, the young—across the board—who have been the one who have taken the beating."

Of his hard-line foreign policy attitude he once said: "I'm not a hawk or a dove, I just don't want my country to be a pigeon."

SCOOP'S DEPARTURE A "MAJOR BLOW"

(By Steve Forrester)

WASHINGTON.—Let it be recorded that the life of Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., ended on the day his arch-adversary, the Soviet Union, jolted world politics in what Jackson had called "an act of barbarism."

Let it also be recorded that Jackson's departure from the Senate is a major blow to the political fortunes of the Pacific Northwest. Even as a member of the Senate minority and without committee chairmanship, Jackson remained a very influential senator and critical to the success of many regional endeavors. It will simply be much more difficult to accomplish some things of regional importance without Jackson's clout, which ranged across party lines, to the House of Representatives and to the White House.

The most obvious endeavor in which Jackson's absence will be noticed is the campaign to rescue the Washington Public Power Supply System (WPPSS) nuclear plant 3. It was a key moment in that fight when Jackson abandoned his silence and committed himself publicly to rescuing the WPPSS plant. Jackson's successor as chairman of the Senate Energy Committee, Republican James McClure of Idaho, simply does not command the trust of his committee or Senate colleagues as Jackson had. The third Northwest senior senator, Republican Mark Hatfield of Oregon, has remained neutral of the WPPSS issue.

Washington state wilderness legislation will probably not fall together as easily without Jackson's hand. He and Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., had invited Washington state House members to discuss the wilderness question on Sept. 13.

The environmentalist community has lost a very important friend in Jackson. He was critical to passage of the National Environmental Policy Act and the Alaska Lands Act. One of the large items on the environmentalist agenda for the remainder of 1983 is the bill to allow sport hunting in Alaskan wilderness areas. That battle would have pitted Jackson, who opposed the hunting, against McClure.

Jackson's death suddenly pushes Sen. Slade Gorton into a position of new prominence. Gorton has gotten considerable national attention, because he is one of the few bright lights among Senate freshmen of 1980 and 1982. But now Gorton becomes cochairman of what some here would call Washington State, Incorporated—the bipartisan House-Senate group which attempts to get Washington state more than its share of federal largesse. The other cochairman is Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., the House Majority Whip.

Among regions and states, the Northwest and Washington state have won a phenomenal share of federal appropriations over the last four decades, largely because of the persistent cohesion and clout of this group. It is remarkable that in just three years the Washington state delegation has lost its two kingpins—former Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., whom Gorton defeated in 1980, and Jackson.

One of the historic ironies in Jackson's unexpected death is that he leaves office while there is widespread expectation that the Democrats will regain control of the Senate in 1984. That victory would have given Jackson chairmanship of the Senate Armed Services Committee, a post he longed for and would have relished.

Few men in Congress have served as long as Jackson, and he was, in many ways, marked by an earlier era of congressional politics when the first lesson a newcomer learned was how to count votes.

Jackson's death will make it all the more apparent how fractured and without direction the Senate has become. He had served long enough to understand the Senate's special role in our government and he was one of few senators who knew the historic context of many domestic and international issues.

He was a master legislator.

[From the Time magazine, Sept. 12, 1983]

A HAWK'S HAWK, A LIBERAL'S LIBERAL

SENATOR HENRY JACKSON: 1912–83

(By Kurt Andersen)

Most of Congress had something to say about the downing of Korean Air Lines Flight 007, but in the state of Washington, Senator Henry ("Scoop") Jackson's reactions had a double resonance: his constituents at the Boeing Co. built the 747 airliner, and during his 42 years on Capitol Hill, he had been more profoundly and articulately wary of the Soviet Union than any other national Democrat. Last week Jackson was recovering at home from a chest cold picked up during a trip to China, but on Thursday morning, he shrugged it off and drove into Seattle to talk to reporters about the aerial atrocity. It was "an act of barbarism," he said, and could have been planned in advance.

But for all his characteristic harshness, he was, as usual, thoughtful and careful. The U.S. should not strike back militarily, he said, adding, "The strongest arm of response is the moral one, one of outrage." Then should the matter be brought before the United Nations? Replied Jackson: "I would rather call a prayer meeting." Afterward Jackson, 71, went back to his wife Helen in Everett (pop. 54,400), the lumber-mill town north of Seattle where he was born and raised. And where, a few hours after he got home, he suffered a heart attack and died.

"Jackson," said Sam Nunn, his Democratic colleague from Georgia, "truly was a giant in the Senate." He had decisively won six elections to the Senate, the latest last November, and had been the de facto leader of his party's conservative wing. Jackson felt that his onetime comrades had turned too easy on Communism, or in some cases too hard on social programs, while he remained the archetypal cold war liberal, determined that the U.S. spend generously on guns and butter. "I don't worry about ideologies," he said. "I've been called a Communist, a socialist, a conservative." In 1972 and 1976, he was a credible contender for the Democratic presidential nomination.

His death surprised those who knew him. Jackson was fit and industrious, and never smoked. He had no history of heart trouble, and lived prudently.

The habit of prudence was bred by his parents, Norwegian immigrants, Nicknamed Scoop after a comic-strip character who appeared in the Everett Herald (which he delivered for years), Jackson practiced frankness young: in the third grade, asked what he wanted to be when he grew up, he admitted he wanted Warren G. Harding's job.

He started at the University of Washington as the Depression began and returned to Everett with a law degree, taking a job with the new Federal Emergency Relief Administration. But his notions of public service were more ambitious. At 26, he was elected Snohomish County prosecutor; then in 1940, a year after "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," Mr. Jackson was sent there for real, elected to the House. He caught the nation's eye by speaking out early on against the witch-hunting excesses of the House Un-American Activities Committee. In 1952 Jackson won election to the Senate over a Red-baiting Republican, and sat on the committee that grilled Wisconsin's Joseph McCarthy in the 1954 Army-McCarthy hearings.

It is telling about Jackson, and political fashions, that in 1961, on the eve of Viet Nam (and the year he finally married), Jackson's rating from the liberal Americans for Democratic Action was a perfect 100, but by 1972, when he was still a diehard supporter of the war, his rating had fallen to 56. The times, not Jackson, had changed. The ill will between Jackson and the New Left grew worse when he ran for President, encouraged by the so-called ABM (Anybody But McGovern) movement among Democrats. Jackson was never noted for charisma or stump-speech eloquence, and his 1972 candidacy fell apart quickly. Although his well-organized 1976 run showed some life—he won the Massachusetts primary—the old cold warhorse was trounced by his fresh friend Jimmy Carter.

In the Senate, Jackson was not a superb legislative craftsman, but intelligent and consistent. He always favored an expansive military to counter the Soviets (he was the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee), resolutely supported Israel (his 1974 amendment made U.S.-Soviet trade contingent on a freer Kremlin emigration policy, mainly toward Jews) and nuclear power. He was also a dependable ally of organized labor, and happy to vote for social welfare programs or civil rights bills. Perhaps his zenith as a powerbroker came in the past decade, when he worked to kill or modify SALT arms-control treaties.

Jackson was a tried-and-true conservationist as well. In the 1950s, before ecology became trendy, he introduced a politically risky wilderness-protection bill, later spearheaded the epochal 1969 National Environmental Policy Act, and last year sponsored legislation to prevent mineral leasing on wilderness lands. Jackson never settled into rigid predictability. Says Nunn: "He was willing to take on the Pentagon when he thought it was wrong." Recently the hawk's hawk sounded almost dovish about Central America. "If we don't pay attention to the history of social and economic oppression there," Jackson said, "the military shield is bound to crumble."

The party may have lost more than an elder statesman. Lately the Democrats have entertained hopes of gaining a Senate majority in 1984. They may still get control, but Jackson's heretofore safe seat in Washington is now up for grabs: if Republican Governor John Spellman appoints Dan Evans, a popular G.O.P. predecessor, to fill in for a year, Representiative Thomse Foley of Spokane, the most likely Democratic challenger, would face a tough race. In any event, Washington State will be without its supremely formidable champion in Washington, D.C.

But Henry Jackson was not simply a power wielder, he had a stubborn vision of America well armed and its people well cared for. He seldom roused voters, but served them ably and decently. He was more reasonable than passionate, more clearheaded than inspiring. His dreams were humansize. "Other may seek to make America great again," he said during his last run for President. "I seek to make America good again."

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Times, Friday, September 2, 1983]

INTEGRITY STOOD OUT MOST ABOUT "SCOOP"

Sen. Henry M. Jackson was the greatest political figure this state has produced. But for thousands of Washingtonians, that is of secondary importance. What thousands feel today is a sense of personal loss.

Just as he was "Scoop" to prime ministers and other dignitaries around the world, he was also "Scoop" to uncounted numbers of humble constituents from Forks to Walla Walla.

Jackson aimed high. For most of his political life, his goal was the White House. He was of unquestioned presidential timber. Comparatively few people nowadays would challenge the proposition that he would have made a better chief executive than either of the men who beat him for the Democratic nomination—George McGovern in 1972 and Jimmy Carter in 1976.

Yet Jackson was unable to command the same vote-getting magic beyond the borders of his state that he exercised in election after election at home. To our mind, the chief reason for that is simple: It was impossible nationally to cultivate the personal touch—the "my neighbor" feeling that solidified his hold on Washington voters.

It was characteristic of Jackson that once his life's ambition had slipped forever beyond his grasp, he threw himself more enthusiastically than ever into the work of the office he did hold.

Those activities spanned as fine a balance between home-state constituent concerns, on the one hand, and global problems, on the other, as was achieved by any of his Senate colleagues.

With equal intensity, he approached flood control on the Cowlitz River and the defense of Western Europe. He knew all about logging in Enumclaw and the deepest secrets of military-intelligence gathering in the Soviet Union. He worked as hard as anyone on the Hill.

Yet what stands out most about Henry M. Jackson is integrity: His 45 years in elective politics without a touch of scandal.

His nation and his state will sorely miss him.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post Intelligencer, Sept. 3, 1983]

HENRY JACKSON A 'TRUE PATRIOT'

It was fitting, and perhaps ironic, that Sen. Henry M. Jackson's last public appearance was in connection with another in the long series of crises in United States-Soviet relations, about which he had come to be regarded as an expert, nationally and internationally.

Characteristically, his comments at his final news conference in Seattle Thursday were firm and resolute in their denunciation of the Soviet Union and what he perceived to be that nation's global ambitions but they were tempered with restraint. Widely regarded as a leading hawk, Jackson was neither a saber-rattler nor a warmonger.

In his remarks on the Soviet attack on the Korean airliner and the tragic deaths of 269 innocent passengers and crew members, Jackson said the incident demonstrates the difference in the nature of this country which values human life and that of the Soviet system, which he called barbaric. But he advised against either a military or an economic retaliatory U.S. response.

As prominent as Jackson was in the field of foreign and military affairs, citizens of his home state of Washington knew him best for his efforts on behalf of civil rights, economic development and preservation of our natural environment. In the latter area, he was awarded the Sierra Club's John Muir Award in 1968 for his key role in drafting of legislation that created the North Cascades National Park.

Among the most revealing insights into a person's character traits are those of his working colleagues and the flood of tributes yesterday from his fellow senators, on both sides of the political aisle, were unanimous in their expressions of praise and affection.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said, "A quarter of a million Soviet Jews who have left the U.S.S.R. owe him a special debt for the famous amendment bearing his name, which spurred the Soviet government to release them from a modern day bondage." Sen. Howard Baker Jr., R-Tenn., called Jackson "a staunch supporter of a strong national defense and a seasoned politician who understood the need for a bipartisan cooperation on issues of vital national interest."

President Reagan termed Jackson "a true patriot."

The P-I extends its sincere condolences to Jackson's wife, Helen, and to their children, Peter and Anna Marie. Their grievous loss is shared by the state and nation Henry M. Jackson served with unswerving loyalty and dedication.

[From the Bellevue (Wash.) Journal American, Sunday, Sept. 4, 1983]

SCOOP JACKSON WASN'T YOUR USUAL POLITICIAN

When death calls a person like Henry Jackson, it is like an eagle being struck down in full flight. He hadn't been ill. He hadn't grown old. Life wasn't dwindling away. He could look forward to being a senior statesman—an American Churchill.

But it was not to be. Suddenly he is gone. Inside his otherwise healthy body must have been clogged arteries. That was bad luck. That is hard to avoid.

Now I know, as do so many others, that never again will I get a call from the person who runs his schedule, asking when it would be convenient for "Scoop" to drop in for a visit. He was a great visitor and after the first few years I knew he was not just another politician coming around periodically to keep his fences mended with the local editor. He welcomed friendship. He sincerely enjoyed renewing old acquaintances.

Maybe other high office holders are like that but I haven't known any. A year or so ago his office called and set up a breakfast get-together. Fine. It was a particularly pleasant visit because by unspoken mutual consent we didn't talk about national affairs—just family and people we both knew in Everett, Longview and Bellevue.

Everett was Jackson's home town and he loved it. He liked to reminisce about the Best family, which owned the Everett Hearald. "Ma" Best was the publisher when he was a kid and got a Herald paper route. With the bag on his shoulder he reminded someone of a paperboy in a comic strip whose nickname was "Scoop." They started calling Henry Scoop. It stuck and he liked it. He was elected at an early age to the exalted office of Congressman and he was Scoop. Later a United States senator, Senator Scoop Jackson. It sounds perfectly natural to us. We wonder how it sounded to heads of state in Europe who had dealings with him.

I can't remember if I supported Scoop Jackson the first time he ran for the Senate, but I think so. Our paper didn't back many Democrats in those days. They were a scruffy lot. Mon Walgren. Martin F. Smith. A lot of others. But Jackson was a different kind of Democrat. He wasn't self-conscious about it. Nobody ever accused him of being anything but a good politician, but he always came across as having something more worthy on his mind than manipulating the voters.

One time he made a resounding Fourth of July speech on the banks of Lake Sacajawea in Longview without once referring to a note. I asked him afterward how he did it. The speech was so well organized, so well spoken. He grinned and looked at me sideways and just said: "That's my job, the way I earn a living."

Scoop Jackson was thoroughly professional in the way he operated. His life and daily schedule were as well organized as the text of his speeches. Even those who may not have liked his politics had to admire him, many so much so that they voted for him. In at least two elections I suggested he file in the primaries on both tickets and win them both, as Hiram Johnson did once in California. Again he just grinned.

It was bad luck that kept Jackson from being president. He was John Kennedy's first choice to be his running mate in 1960. But the campaign pros said that just couldn't be. It had to be a Southerner to guarantee the Southern vote. Jackson was from the wrong state. So Lyndon Johnson was nominated and, by a quirk of fate, became president.

Jackson was philosophical about this. If he had been the vice presidential candidate, he said, Kennedy very likely would not have won.

Scoop Jackson was a national and international figure who was involved in the highest order of affairs. But he never forgot that he came from the state of Washington and that Washington came first. The people at home were his friends. They trusted him and they elected him and he did not neglect them or let them down. Those who knew him well are left deeply sad and sorry that this eagle among us has been struck down.

[From the Everett (Wash.) Herald, Friday, Sept. 2, 1983]

HENRY JACKSON, 1912–1983

Sen. Henry Jackson died Thursday at 71 doing what he did best: serving his country with courage, conviction, intellect and integrity. He did that for 44 years, for six terms in the House of Representatives and seven in the Senate. He did that as a major candidate for president.

Henry Jackson died in the place he loved best: here in Washington, in Everett, the city where he was born and grew up. They knew him from boyhood as "Scoop," the industrious kid who faultlessly delivered each and every Everett Daily Herald. And they knew him as Snohomish County prosecutor in 1938, and congressman in 1941, and senator-elect in 1952.

The nation knew Jackson as an early opponent of the McCarthyism, the redbaiting that blighted American politics at the dawn of the cold war. Jackson, moreover, was an early proponent of protecting the environment. He was the father of the Environmental Policy Act, the law that established national procedures to safeguard all living things and the places they live.

Americans also knew the senator for his rare expertise in energy and national security matters. He championed the public interest in limiting the economic power of the oil industry and fostering healthy competition in the energy marketplace.

What's more, the senator made invaluable contributions to the cause of strengthening national security—an effect that included not only building a strong military posture but also building a framework for better relations between East and West. In all of that, Jackson's clear and constant focus was to promote a climate for peace in the world.

And the world will miss him.

[From the Bellevue (Wash.) Journal American]

JACKSON'S DEATH IS OUR GREAT LOSS

When Senator Henry Jackson ran for re-election to the U.S. Senate in 1982, the big question wasn't whether he would win (he did, easily), but whether he would run again in 1988, when he would have been 76.

It is a great misfortune—to his family, his friends, his colleagues in Congress, the state and the nation—that death took that decision away from Scoop Jackson Thursday night.

With Warren Magnuson, Jackson formed one of the most powerful delegations ever to represent one state in the Senate. They brought project after project to their home state—to the point that some citizens complained that too much federal largesse was pouring in.

When Magnuson was finally defeated (by Slade Gorton) in 1980 after 44 years in Congress, Jackson became Washington's senior senator, at last. But many of his perquisites were lost in 1980 when Ronald Reagan was elected president and the Republicans captured control of the Senate. Instead of being chairman, Jackson was only ranking minority member on his most important assignment, the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Jackson held his convictions firmly, unwaveringly. There was never any question where he stood on the primary issues: Communism, civil rights, the environment. His popularity cut across the traditional lines of liberal or conservative. The result was easy re-election, every six years.

Jackson exuded honesty. For example, all his speaking fees were donated to a foundation.

He was the personification of probity. He didn't smoke, seldom drank, displayed little wit or humor. His speeches were straightforward but not noted for their grace or felicity. He gave the impression of a bulldog, chewing presistently at an issue, or sometimes of a tugboat, plowing determinedly ahead with little regard for the shoals ahead.

Jackson, although a Democrat from the start, parted company with many of his colleagues over the war in Vietnam, which he supported vigorously. So vigorously, in fact, that Richard Nixon offered him the post of secretary of defense, which Jackson turned down for fear he would become the scapegoat of the Vietnam debacle.

For younger voters, their memory starts with Jackson taking unyielding stands for strong national defense. It is hard for them to realize that Jackson was once seen as liberal and progressive. So he was—on domestic issues. But he had become rigid in foreign affairs and seemed less willing to concede there might be two sides to the armament issue.

Henry Jackson was first elected to office in 1938, when he was chosen prosecuting attorney in Snohomish County. He subsequently was elected to the U.S. House for 12 years, and was serving his sixth term in the Senate.

He never lost an election. It is our joint sorrow that he never will have the opportunity to decide whether to run one more time.

JACKSON PUT PRINCIPLE FIRST

There is a touch of irony in the timing of Sen. Henry M. Jackson's unexpected death Thursday, coming as it did while the nation and the world were expressing outrage at Jackson's most bitter antagonist, the Soviet Union.

Only hours before his fatal heart attack, Jackson had denounced the Soviets' shooting down of a South Korean jetliner in predictably strong terms. It amounted to "barbarism," said Jackson whose deep distrust of the Russians had marked his lengthy public career.

But Jackson, the third-ranking U.S. senator in terms of seniority at the time of his death, was far more than the red-baiter and defense hawk some of his critics alleged while he was alive.

He was, in a word, a pragmatist. A fierce anti-communist, yes, but he was among the first to recognize and openly deplore the tactics of Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

He was a conservative when it came to defense matters, aligning himself almost always on the side of increased military strength and against conciliation to the Soviet Union. His strong advocacy of better relations with the People's Republic of China—which he had visited only days before he died—underscored his belief in keeping the Russians off guard.

But on domestic matters, Jackson's policies were more in keeping with his fellow Democrats' liberal inclinations. He was a powerful friend of labor and supported social programs designed to assist the underprivileged.

He was the author of the National Environmental Protection Act but was known to seek a balance between economic development and ecological safeguards.

Even now, as the tributes and expressions of shock pour in, the terms in which they are couched are evidence of "Scoop" Jackson's greatest political strength—he shunned party doctrine and addressed himself to issues according to what he perceived were their individual merits.

While he was alive, some of his harshest critics were liberals within his own party who believed his foreign policy attitudes were unacceptable. It is to Jackson's credit—as it is to the credit of any public luminary—that his rivals in life were able to spar with him over philosophy while maintaining a healthy respect for him as a worthy adversary.

From a more parochial perspective, Jackson's death marks another step in the profound restructuring of Washington state's representation in the Senate. Following as it does Republican Slade Gorton's defeat of Warrent G. Magnuson in 1980, Jackson's death completes a turn from the most senior delegation to one of the most junior, from two Democrats to (assuming Republican Spellman does as expected and appoints a fellow party member to succeed Jackson) two Republicans.

So far, Gorton is proving to be a capable senator with immense potential, largely because of a trait similar to Jackson's—he is willing to stand for what he believes in, even if it means breaking party lines.

That is a proud tradition to which Henry Jackson has contributed immensely.

THE NATION'S LOST A VALUED FRIEND

There was everything to applaud and little to criticize in the life of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, whose death Thursday night shocked and saddened friends and political foes.

Scoop Jackson was a man all of us can emulate.

He was one of those rare political specimens, a man dedicated to the service of his state and country, a tireless worker—some would say a workaholic—a skilled legislative craftsman who could bring both sides of the aisle together in compromise, a man of integrity and principle who would sooner quite public life than alter his basic beliefs and values in favor of political expediency.

And in a political career spanning nearly 45-years beginning with his election as prosecuting attorney in Snohomish County, there was no hint of scandal, no tarnish.

In the past two days, one official after another has lauded that one predominant trait in Jackson, the fact that whether or not you agreed with him on a particular issue, his word was everything. You trusted the man.

Through the years, his peace-through-strength philosophy and his ever-suspicious view of Soviet intentions fell in and out of fashion, but he never betrayed those values. And it was those beliefs which prompted him to visit Red China, his fourth visit, during the last half of August.

On that trip, Jackson wore himself out campaigning for better relations between the two countries, something he strongly felt was vital to world stability.

Quite literally, he died in the line of duty.

The 71-year-old Jackson returned from the two-week trip with a heavy cold he caught toward the end of the tour. Despite the nagging cold and a cough which punctuated his conversations, he maintained a full schedule of appointments, telephone calls and a press conference Thursday to express his shock over the Soviet Union's jet fighter attack on a civilian Korean airliner.

His last press conference, fittingly, was vintage Scoop, with his expressions of deep-felt moral outrage over the Soviet act and a call for a firm response mixed with restraint.

He then went home, complaining of a tightness in his chest, and retired early. The heart attack probably came when he was asleep.

His death is a unestimatable loss for the people of the state; as the third-highest ranking member of the Senate, he wielded tremendous power and influence advantageous to Washington. The nation, too, has lost a strong, unflinching voice for world peace through strength.

And all of us have lost a valued friend.

HENRY JACKSON, A SENATOR WHO LOVED THE GRIND

(By John Marshall)

It was just another Monday morning for Sen. Henry Jackson, a clear February day in 1980 that he would spend in the Eastside suburbs. But for the reporter covering him, the assignment was less routine: the chance to observe a legendary political whirlwind in action for hours.

I had covered other major politicians, including Jimmy Carter, Gerald Ford and Richard Nixon. But never had I watched one who took such singular delight in the mundane minutiae of a politician's life as Jackson did.

Being a United States senator might seem to be a glamorous life to many people, especially those who have never watched one up close. To them, being a U.S. senator is an endless stream of people currying your favor and seeking your counsel, reporters beckoning, limousines waiting, parties galore, plus worldwide travel and free postage. What a life!

But much of being a U.S. senator is a never-ending replay of a dull script that would drive most people to distraction. For hours on end, it is one more meeting to attend, one more face to recognize, one more hand to shake, while being constantly watched, constantly on stage. The only time to catch one's breath is in the car between meetings, or perhaps in the privacy of a lavatory stall.

It was that kind of Monday for Jackson—a breakfast speech followed by a plant visit and a press conference, followed by a newspaper interview, followed by a luncheon speech. But it was a Monday that would show why Jackson was such a politician's politician, a master of the trade. There seemed to be no person too insignificant, no detail too trivial for the senator's full attention.

To secretary and senior vice president alike, Jackson gave a look straight in the eye and a firm handshake. To a crowd of reporters, Jackson concluded a press conference with a cheery "Got all you need, troops?" To a news photographer, Jackson flashed an unexpected, impromptu wink.

LITTLE THINGS THAT PEOPLE REMEMBER

They were all little things, really, things Jackson had no doubt done thousands, if not millions, of times. But they were also the kinds of little things that people would remember, especially at election time. They were what separated Jackson from the politicians who were just going through the motions, doing what was expected.

Jackson, it was obvious, did all that because he loved it. He so reveled in being a senator that he seemed born to the position. If much of the job was dreary detail work, so much the better. Jackson was the Protestant work ethic personified and refined to its ultimate expression: a no-nonsense, nose-to-the-grindstone Norwegian.

He had gotten up that Monday at 5 a.m. in his house in Everett, the beginning of another 19-hour day that most other 67-year-olds would have the sense not to attempt. But there was more than just his usual devotion to duty motivating the senator that morning.

For one thing, Jackson's first week on the Scarsdale Diet had knocked 10 pounds off his frame and it was much easier now to button the vest of his blue suit. For another thing, Russian tanks rolling into Afghanistan in the last two months had made Jackson a vindicated man, perhaps for the first time since Vietnam went sour and his hawkish views fell from repute.

COLLEAGUES ALL PLAY CATCH-UP

Behind him were the months when he had been a lonely Democratic voice decrying the "inequities" of the SALT II agreements when "detente" was a sacred word for many. Now his congressional colleagues were all playing catch-up to the "Senator from Boeing," a bunch of born-again hawks expressing shock at the Soviet aggression.

Jackson kept his "I told you so" smirk under control, but did say at every stop: "There's no surprise about the Russians going into Afghanistan. What's new about the Russians lying? Just ask the Chinese. The Russians have been lying to them for the last 400 years."

And buttressing Jackson's credentials as the country's most persistent Soviet critic was a press secretary well-stocked with year-old Jackson speeches about the Russian threat in Afghanistan. Plus, wonders of wonders, a yellowed clipping of a newspaper article Jackson had written 25 years ago about that very same subject.

Yet Jackson was no single message man that Monday either and that said something about why he never lost an election in Washington. He was careful to spread bouquets wherever he went, with some subtlety but unmistakable persistence.

WORRY ABOUT THE FIRST AMENDMENT

At Roccor headquarters in Redmond, the completion of a gasohol contract gave Jackson the chance to publicly praise the company and its employees. At the Journal-American newspaper in Bellevue, a meeting with the publisher and top editors gave Jackson the chance to worry aloud the future of newspapers and the First Admendment.

Along the way, too, Jackson gave glimpses of his encyclopedic mind, his Facts on File memory. Pointing his finger for emphasis, Jackson was the stern father professor, who remembered every trip he'd ever taken to some obscure corner of the globe, who remembered direct quotes from every history tome he'd ever read. He was only too happy to share the insights he'd gained.

And for good measure, Jackson sprinkled in tidbits of trivia, gleaned from his decades in office that death, not the voters, would ultimately end.

Jackson spewed forth a torrent of facts, figures and opinions with oracle-like authority that February morning. And he displayed the distinctive talent that was the secret of his success: Cover so much territory that everyone likes something you've said.

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 8, 1983]

SCOOP SAID WHAT HE BELIEVED, AND STUCK TO IT

(By Elliott Abrams)

Scoop Jackson came to Washington in an earlier era of American politics, and to the end he reminded us of its virtues.

He had the courage to propound his fundamental beliefs in the teeth of political fashions. During the period of "detente," he warned of a Soviet military buildup; during the years of cheap energy, he talked of the potential energy crisis.

He believed conscience had a place in politics and world affairs when that view, too, marked him for attack: He was an early, visible, effective opponent of Joe McCarthy and the Jackson Amendment on freedom of emigration was the most significant example of modern human rights legislation.

Scoop was above all, a senator, and in this age when the presidency has seemed so often to overwhelm all other elements of our national government, he showed us that it need not be so. Hard work, for him a matter of theology, was joined with commitment to principle to create of a single senator what seemed at times an alternate government.

Fighting the Nixon administration on SALT I or the Jackson Amendment, he embodied a very different view of American politics and government from that of the White House. Jackson, like LaFollette or Taft, showed that a senator could play a public role as large as that usually reserved for presidents.

Scoop came to lead a wing of the Democratic Party—indeed it was eventually named for him. The "Jackson Wing" claimed descendance from Truman and John Kennedy and, allied with George Meany and later, Lane Kirkland, combined New Deal beliefs in government's role as a problem solver with a deep distrust of the Soviets and dedication to military strength as a prerequisite for peace.

Jackson, who with these views had been at the center of the party from the 1940s, felt by the late '60s that he was fighting to keep it in the center. Intellectuals, supporters of Israel, labor leaders coalesced around Scoop as their natural leader.

He did not seek this position; it fell to him to assume it, and he did so with energy and integrity, never in the process developing grandiose visions of himself. There is no one in the Democratic Party who can fill the terrible gap his passing leaves.

Ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee (and perhaps its next chairman, had he lived), Scoop was passionately dedicated to protecting our nation's security. There would be no peace without preparedness, he believed.

He used to talk of his father's native land, Norway, and remind us that its just and democratic society could not resist Hitler. His absolutely staunch support of Israel, too, reflected his understanding that strength and will safeguard peace, while weakness invites others to create crises, conflict and war.

Scoop was, in his personal affairs as well, from another time. In the 1970s, Washington's scandals led to new financial-disclosure requirements aimed at deterring vice. In Scoop's case, their effect was to expose virtue.

For 20 years, he had lived on his salary and anonymously donated every cent of earnings from speeches—sometimes $50,000 a year—to a charity. He had established a scholarship fund in honor of his late sister, a teacher, and it provided help for students in his home town, Everett, Wash. They never knew who their benefactor was, and all these facts were never disclosed to Scoop's staff—much less Washington's voters—until federal law required it. This extraordinary act of private, even secret, charity gives a flash of illumination as to the character of Scoop Jackson. Charity, like religion, was something he never talked about, but it was something he practiced.

He was like that. He was accused of being stubborn, or old-fashioned or narrow because he had the older virtues. He said what he believed, and stuck to it, and he treated people well, and over time he became a public man of enormous influence. Last Wednesday, after a hard day's work—much too hard for a 71-year-old with a bad cold—he went home to his wife.

It was just Scoop to live like that, and to die like that.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 4, 1983]

JACKSON: HE STOOD IN THE OPEN

Henry M. Jackson reflected much of his native Washington state in his independent manner of thinking and in the objects of his thought and concern. The Democratic senator, who died Thursday at 71, was the product of a state with an active, vocal labor-union constituency and fiercely protective environmentalists. He spoke for them and for staunch advocates of a strong national defense throughout a distinguished career spanning more than 40 years.

You may not always have agreed with Jackson—and we didn't always on the best ways to deal with the defense budget and with the Soviet Union—but you always knew where he stood, and you respected the thought and integrity that had gone into his position. Jackson was at times called the "senator from Boeing" because of the presence of the major aircraft builder in his state, but even a critic such as former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy had to acknowledge that Jackson would have taken the same stands on defense no matter where he was from.

Jackson was a man of foresight who saw the energy crisis coming well before it happened. A skilled legislator, he was a conservationist years ahead of the rest of the country, wrote the Environmental Protection Act and resolutely defended the natural legacy as the chairman of the Senate Interior Committee for many years.

There are certain politicians who have a manner about them that makes them truly senatorial—a sense of authority and intelligence, yet of helpfulness to younger colleagues and others who follow the intricacies of government as well. Henry Jackson was one of those people.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 6, 1983]

THE FALLEN GIANT

Occurring amid the other horrors of the day, the sudden death of U.S. Sen. Henry Jackson may not rank in the top of the headlines. But it is a major loss to us, to his home state of Washington and to the Republic. In his unpretentious way, Scoop Jackson was an undisputed giant of the Senate and worthy of the presidency he twice unsuccessfully pursued.

Sen. Jackson was a decent, just and above all clear-sighted man. We disagreed on some issues like energy policy where his social Democratic background led him to a different analysis than ours. But even then he was "our favorite senator." And his contribution to national defense was unparaelleled. As a descendant of Norwegian socialists, he inherited the best elements of a humane political tradition and a vivid awareness of what can happen to decent countries without an adequate defense. As one of the first Americans to see Auschwitz after World War II, he knew firsthand the most horrible possibilities of the 20th century.

In a sense, his passing is part of the fading of the World War II political generation, which learned so many lessons the hard way in a very short time. This common experience underlaid a bipartisan foreign policy that served this country, and the world, extremely well. By the time Sen. Jackson came to run for president in 1972 and 1976, however, this memory was lost in the wallow of Vietnam, and much of his Democractic Party was busy repudiating its own distinguished past.

Daily events are now confirming that Scoop Jackson was right about the Soviets and his critics were wrong. But this unwelcome validation of his views provides bleak replacement indeed for his rich experience and warm, homespun personality. We'll miss him badly.

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Sept. 6, 1983]

JACKSONIAN DEMOCRACY—"SCOOP"-STYLE

Not many senators have had a political species named for them. Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington did. A "Jackson Democrat" has for years been as identifiable as a "Taft Republican" used to be, when rock-solid conservative Robert Taft was the last previous senator whose name was similarly enshrined.

In the midst of the eulogies to Senator Jackson, following his sudden passing last week, it might be noted that the kind of Democrat he was could not be separated from the kind of man he was. He was in the American grain of the immigrants' son who became a hard-working paperboy, a union member, a working-his-way-through-college dishwasher, a law student, a lawyer, and on into public life.

Here were the roots for Jackson the Democrat. Protect this glorious land that can do so much for so many. More than enough military might is better than the risk of too little to keep the nation safe. More than enough government is better than the risk of too little to keep the rights of the people secure, meet their needs, preserve the environment in which they live.

This simplified version of Henry Jacksonian democracy hardly suggests the difficulty of affixing the conservative and liberal labels that were always being thrown at one side or another of what he said and did. Allowing for all the political considerations in a political career, Mr. Jackson seemed to seek the difficult path of judging each decision on its merits. Sometimes this made it equally difficult for the same people to agree with him twice in succession. Unless, of course, they were Jackson Americans.

[From the Seattle Weekly, Sept. 13, 1983]

THE SCOOP WE KNEW

(By Gerry Hoeck)

The newspapers will say that Henry Martin Jackson was laid to rest this week. Don't you believe it. For those of us who had the good fortune to live and work with that remarkable man, the thought is unthinkable. Scoop never rested. The papers are wrong.

Sixteen hours a day, seven days a week, for 45 years, he pursued with joy and zeal his only goal—the helping of others.

In February 1976, we were in Los Angeles filming a five-minute network TV show to announce his second try for the presidency. We had him alone in David Wolper's studio and decided to fire a few simple questions to throw him off his guard, to get candid, off-the-cuff answers. That was usually Jackson at his best.

The first question: "Why in heaven's name do you want to be president, Scoop?"

There was not a second's hesitation. "To help people."

As flat as that. Corny, sure. A cliche, sure. With 99 out of 100 politicians, it would be a self-serving declaration that you could take with a large tablespoon of salt. But with Scoop, it was straight and honest. He meant it, brother, he meant it.

That was the trouble with Scoop. He was so decent and direct and honest that many of his critics misread him. There was not an ounce of deceit or deception in his body. I felt sorry for people who kept looking for a mean motive.

Last fall we were shooting a series of television spots around the state for Scoop's reelection campaign. We drove down to Grays Harbor one morning to do a sidewalk spot about the impact of high interest rates. A few miles short of Aberdeen we stopped at a small gas station in the woods.

While the tank was being filled, Scoop started talking to the operator. The usual questions—how's business, how long have you had the station, etc. Finally Scoop sensed the man was a little nervous or embarrased. He stuck out his hand and said, "I'm Scoop Jackson."

"I know who you are," the man said. "I was in the service overseas and my mother was very sick in Tacoma and you got me home. I know who you are."

Yes, the people of the state of Washington knew who Henry Jackson was. He was their friend. They never forgot it. All you had to do was look at the numbers on election night.

Later that morning we finished filming Scoop on the streets of Aberdeen and looked for a place to catch a sandwich. There was a small sidewalk cafe on the main street, with two or three tables, and the owner rushed out and set up the chairs for us. Later we learned the owner had been driven out of his lumber business by the sagging economy and he and his wife had opened this hole-in-the-wall restaurant to make ends meet.

Then it began. The parade of people. They came streaming from all over town. Our visit had been unannounced, but they had all suddenly heard that Scoop was in town. Scoop is sitting at a table downtown on Main Street—right now. . .the telephone grapevine had been working.

They came by the dozens—housewives, labor leaders, Democratic committeemen and women, bankers, businessmen, reporters, plain ordinary citizens. They wanted to talk to one of their favorite people. A few had problems they wanted to talk about—like a harbor project Scoop was working on—but mostly, they wanted to shake his hand, say hello, talk about their families. And Jackson knew their names, remembered the old gettogethers, and asked about friends.

It is perhaps my favorite memory of Scoop. Sitting there at that sidewalk table in Aberdeen, laughing, talking, the sun on his face, surrounded by his people, trying to drink his milk and munch down a sandwich. Later the restaurant owner brought out some fresh hot wild-blackberry pie. And it was perfect.

I had told Scoop going down in the car that the latest survey showed him getting a maximum of 62 percent of the vote in November. He just smiled. Five weeks later he got almost 70 percent of the state vote.

That September day in Aberdeen there were no computerized mailings going to residents, no sophisticated telephone banks alerting Aberdeen to Jackson's presence, no clever television spots spinning an aura about the man. It was unnecessary. They knew Jackson. What they knew about Jackson was based on performance and years of observation. And they trusted him. He was their guy.

It gives strength to the hope that the American public will always be able to sort through the non-sense associated with elections and select the best man or woman for an office—based on ability and integrity. Not on all the silly paraphernalia.

That scene could have been duplicated anywhere in the state of Washington. The sidewalk table could have been moved to Othello, or Winthrop, or Wenatchee, or Duvall, or Fourth and Pike in Seattle, and the same spontaneous outpouring of respect for Scoop would have occurred. Because Scoop was one of them. It's that simple.

Son of emigrant Norwegian parents in Everett, he never forgot his roots. But he grew. God, how he grew, Picture a snowy night at Union Station in Washington DC in January 1941.

Two wide-eyed 28-year-old men from Everett, Washington climbed off a train. Their names were Henry M. Jackson and John L. Salter. Neither had ever traveled east. They were green and untested but they had managed to get Scoop elected to Congress.

They picked up their bags, walked out into the night, and shouted to a cabbie: "Where's the Capitol?

"Right over there, you dummies," came the answer.

Three blocks away the Capitol dome was ablaze with lights. I wonder if that cabby ever found out what happened to those two young men. In 20 years they were shaping a major part of the policy coming from Capitol Hill—and even influencing events at the White House.

They were a great combination—Scoop and John. Scoop, with his hard work and dedication to the job. Salter, with his sharp perception of people and his Irish gregarious nature. They complemented each other—much the same as Maggie and Scoop complemented each other in the Senate. Tom Foley said last weekend that he doubted that any state would ever again have a pair of senators as powerful and effective as Scoop and Maggie. I believe that's true.

Scoop matured steadily through the first 20 years. He did his homework. He learned more about issues and more about Congress than most of his colleagues. It is true he was not a member of the Club—he was not one of the boys. But members on both sides of the aisle respected his intelligence, his steadfastness, his rock-granite honesty. He was never bitterly partisan and they trusted his word. So he became one of their leaders.

By the time 1960 rolled around, Scoop was a leading candidate for the vice-presidential nomination at the party convention in Los Angeles, Jackson and Salter were friends of the Kennedys, and Bobby was openly for Scoop. He gave us marching orders on which delegations to talk to. Bobby's loyalty to Scoop went back to the time when Joe McCarthy fired him from his committee and Scoop quickly said, "Come on, Bobby, go to work for me." Bobby never forgot.

A few days before Jack Kennedy's nomination in Los Angeles, Kennedy told Jim Bishop, the writer who was documenting the presidential story, that Scoop would probably be his choice. So Bishop joined us in Scoop's suite the morning after Kennedy's nomination, fully expecting Jackson to be the nominee.

The call came.

"Scoop, this is Jack. I'm sorry, but I have decided to go with Lyndon. If you will, I'd like you to be national chairman."

Scoop said, "Of course, Jack. Whatever you want me to do."

He came that close.

There were many other memories that those of us who worked for Jackson will long remember. Like the buoyant night in Boston in 1976 when we won our first presidential primary.

We had set up phones in a special hotel room to get early vote counts from key precincts. As phones started ringing and we tallied the results, it became obvious. We were going to win.

I walked down the hall to the Jackson suite with the figures in hand. The election party was just starting. Pat Moynihan was talking in the middle of the room. I sat down beside Helen Jackson and said quietly, "Helen, Scoop's going to win."

She said: "Thank God. He's worked so hard."

Yes, he'd worked so hard. And she had, too. Few wives of men in public life have given more of themselves than Helen Jackson. She and Scoop raised two marvelous children—Anna Marie, who entered Stanford last year, and Peter, a senior in high school who is working this summer on the Enumclaw weekly. It wasn't easy with the time demands of two presidential campaigns and the normal rigors of senatorial life. She's a magnificent lady.

Last Friday afternoon a group of us gathered in a favorite Everett bistro—shocked, benumbed, tears in our eyes. John Stalter was there and we reminisced.

John said something that many people do not know. He said, "The key event was Buchenwald. It changed him." As a young congressman in 1945, Henry Jackson had walked through the gates of Buchenwald a few days after that horror camp was opened. He was never the same. He not only championed the cause of Israel throughout his life but he detested bigotry and prejudice and cruelty in every form. He demanded fairness, equality, freedom. It shocked him that people could act uncivilized. It explains his perfect civil rights record. It partly explains his attitude toward the Soviet Union.

So there you have it. Scoop Jackson was not a perfect man. He had his flaws. But he was a supremely kind and unpretentious man. He traveled with presidents and prime ministers but he drove an old Chevrolet. He never worried about his clothes or material things. He spent his entire life working for other people and fighting for what he believed—never wavering. What more can you ask of a man?

After Scoop's re-election last fall, there were some of us who felt he should never run again. Go out ahead. Give yourself a rest. Enjoy life. We never said anything to him and, to my knowledge, he never mentioned his future intentions.

But I must make a confession to Scoop today. If he had rung the bell once more, if he had asked us to mount one more campaign in 1988 or whenever, all the troops would have come running. They'd leave their husbands and wives and children, they'd climb on those lousy buses and airplanes, they'd drag out their old typewriters, they'd sleep on those busted-down beds in crumby hotels, eat the tasteless food, and give up a thousand hours of decent sleep.

And do you know why they'd do it, Scoop? I'll tell you why.

Because—damn it—we loved you.

JACKSON EULOGIES REPLETE WITH PRAISE, MEMORIES

Henry Jackson's family, his closest friends, and colleagues filled Everett's First Presbyterian Church at noon Sept. 7. This is how they remembered Jackson the father, Jackson the statesman, Jackson the man.

ORGAN PRELUDE BY ORGANIST ALAN VILLESVIK

Invocation by Rev. James R. Hervey, associate pastor, First Presbyterian Church:

Our help is in the name of the Lord who made the heavens and the earth. It is he whom we worship. Honor and majesty are due his name. Let us pray together. O great and eternal God who loves us with an everlasting love and has turned the shadow of death into the brightness of your glory, help us now to wait upon you with reverent and submissive minds and hearts. In the silence of this hour, speak to us of eternal things that through the patience and comfort of the scriptures we may find hope and be lifted above our darkness and distress into the light and peace of your presence, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Congregation, accompanied by church choir, sang the hymn, "Joyful, Joyful, We Adore Thee."

Rev. Hervey:

Helen, Anna Marie, Peter, members of the family, staff and associates. I speak on behalf of friends of this church, community, the state, nation, yes, even the world when I say that our deepest sympathy and concern is with you. Our prayer is for God's comfort and strength in your lives as you experience this grief and this loss.

From my own perspective, Senator Jackson had no difficulty in finding his place in life. He seemed to be able to take charge, to set others at ease. Whether talking with the former head of state or helping a pensioner from this community with a Social Security problem. Whether expressing sympathy to a grieving neighbor or sharing the joy of Christmas with a group of neighborhood carolers.

National and international in his concern and commitments, his influence and his prestige, Scoop was also a hometown American. While we all join you in mourning his loss, we cannot help but be just a bit envious of the treasure of memories which you share as you celebrated life together with him as a family.

We have all read and heard much of his honesty and his integrity, his concern and his compassion. But perhaps his greatest legacy to you, and to us all, is that he is a man who lived out the ancient motto "to be," rather than "to seem to be."

Helen, Anna Marie, Peter, may God bless and comfort you as you treasure his memory in your minds and in your hearts. Amen

Old Testament readings: Psalms 46:1-3 and 11; Psalms 24:1-5.

Anna Marie Jackson:

Most people knew my father as a public personality—in his official role. I, however, knew him as a very special person—a father who always made time for his family and who knew how important a father-daughter relationship is.

He was the kind of father that would leave from in the middle of one of his important meetings to take time to make a phone call and talk to me and answer some of the questions that I was having trouble with in one of my political science classes.

I remember one night when he called me from New York, after a tiring day of speeches, while trying to recuperate from a cold. He insisted on staying right on the phone—as he said, no matter if it would take all night—until I understood the history of the New Deal backwards and forwards. That particular phone call took 2½ hours.

He was a proud father as well. This past Christman he flew out to my debutante ball even though the Senate was in session and there was a possibility that he might miss a vote. And one thing my father did not want to do was to miss a vote.

But he told me the debutante ball was a very special moment in my life and he wanted to be a part of it. What I recall most vividly from that evening was waltzing with Daddy, and he kept stepping on my toes. But he whispered in my ear and said: "Keep smiling, we make a good team."

Peter Jackson:

It's impossible to summarize how much the guidance, love and understanding of a father means to a son. And it's going to take some time to fully realize what Dad in his long, productive life means to me.

But above all, I knew him as a compassionate father dedicated to his family. When I was 5 years old, my dad learned that I had memorized a list of all the presidents of the United States.

He was so enormously proud of my accomplishment that he would often stop photographers and voters at random, forcing them to stand still and endure my recitation of every one of the presidents from Washington to Nixon. When it was all over he would say: "This is my son Peter and everything he does makes me proud of him."

I'll always recall our hours together Saturday mornings at the Senate gymnasium. It was our special time for relaxing, swimming and just talking. Whenever anyone came by. Dad would stop, put his hand on my shoulder and say: "This son of mine—he's pretty special, don't you think?"

Perhaps what I'll miss most is our long discussion on political and foreign-policy issues. I would go to the library and thoroughly research a topic he was deeply involved with. On returning home I would quietly sit down in our library and explain to him why I thought Ralph Nader was right on nuclear energy.

Immediately his eyes would light up. There was nothing he enjoyed more than engaging in an active, lively debate. Nevertheless, no matter how much research I did he always came up with better arguments. He told me: "Equip yourself with the facts, be honest and be a good listener, then you'll receive respect."

When I think of my dad I'll always best remember that advice, in our spirited debates. I realize that he was not only a generously caring father, but also an experienced and skillful teacher.

New Testament reading: portions of Romans 8 by Dr. Edward L. R. Elson, chaplain emeritus, U.S. Senate.

Special music: "America Our Heritage" by Helen Steele, sung by the Northwest Boy Choir, directed by Steve Stevens.

Warren G. Magnuson, former senator and long-time Jackson colleague:

First of all I want to join with Helen and the family and the people of the state of Washington to welcome our guests who came from far and near today to pay tribute to Henry Jackson.

This is a sad occasion, but we welcome you to the state of Washington—Scoop's beloved state. And Helen, I know that the hearts of all of us turn towards you and your family in this time of your greatest grief.

I naturally was shocked and stunned when I was informed of Senator Jackson's death—untimely as it was. I often thought of Scoop as being indestructible. His personal habits, his way of life just made him that indestructible to me.

It's almost unreal, that as I stand here . . . well, I couldn't sleep that night. I tried to go to sleep, hoping I'd wake up and it was just a dream. But it's real. As I stand here beside the casket, I know it's real.

He lived a great life. But he's going to leave a great void that I doubt any person can fill. It's going to take a big man to fill even partially his shoes.

We served together in the House and the Senate almost a half a century. That's a long, long time. We worked as a team, shoulder-to-shoulder, on different projects and different contests and such and such.

Now that team is dissolved. I don't know when it will ever come back again—44 years in the Congress of the United States and 28 years in the United States Senate. It not only is a long, long time, but it brings back many episodes and memories to me, that if I tried to list them all I'd have you here all afternoon. So we mourn his loss and that void. I don't know when it's ever going to be filled.

There was a funeral in Rome years ago in which a prominent Roman stood up and said, "I've come to bury Caesar, not to praise him." I'm going to paraphrase that and reverse it: "I come not to bury Henry Jackson, but to praise him." Because his achievements, his contribution to world peace, to human rights and to the people of this state and the nation will be going on and on forever, and he'll be immortal by them.

His private and personal life, and his political life, were almost immaculate. And do you people realize, like I do, that there's never been one breath of scandal that's ever hovered around Henry Jackson in half a century of public service? That's something in this day and age.

I was always amazed and marveled at his knowledge and grasp of foreign affairs. And I watched him over the years grow up to be a giant, not only in the Congress with my colleagues over there, but in international affairs. And he geared his defense posture to foreign affairs.

He always said to me over the years, I'm going to vote tomorrow—whenever the vote would be in the Senate—to what I think is in the best interest of these United States. Sometimes he was criticized for it, but he never wavered; he never swayed to the winds of popular opinion.

And people sought and went to him for advice and wisdom on foreign affairs. He was almost a prophet—a prophet in his time. He was pretty nearly always right, and that's what made him what he was.

But there's another side of Scoop that I knew very well. That is his human side. There never was a problem in all the years we were together, never too small for Scoop not to take time out of his busy world to help that person. And there's scores of incidents, hundreds, that I went through with him.

He used to drop by my office—we officed down the hall from one another—pretty nearly every morning when we were in session. "He'd say "who's in trouble today? Who at home is in trouble? Who can we help?" And we'd get together and work it out the best we knew how.

So, when the headstone is written, I hope they'll say, well, he was a humane, compassionate man. I hope they'll say "Here lies Henry Jackson, a decent man, a loyal public servant—but above all, a man of the people." God bless you, Scoop.

Daniel P. Moynihan, democratic senator from New York:

Helen, Anna Marie and Peter, may I continue what Maggie has so well begun? Last evening in the National Presbyterian Church I had occasion to recall an old belief in the Judaic tradition that at any moment in history, goodness in the world is preserved by the deeds of nine just men who do not know that this is the role the Lord has given them.

It is a thought to which one has returned these last days, for if it be so—and of course in the large sense, it is so—Henry M. Jackson was one of those men. There could be no more telling evidence than that this would never had occurred to him.

He lived in the worst of times—the age of the totalitarian state. It fell to him to tell this to his own people and to the world and he did so full-well knowing that there is a cost for such truth-telling. But he was a viking also and knew the joy of battle. Of all things human, the only emotion he never knew was fear. The only weakness he could never comprehend was the love of ease.

The poet Yeats wrote once of a man who was blessed, and had the power to bless. Scoop was such a person also. To know him and to love him as generations of men and women in American public life have done, is to have been touched by that abounding grace which he brought to the affairs of the republic. He never took; he only gave. And he never stopped giving.

To Helen, to Anna Marie, Peter—wishing in no way to intrude—we would even so say that as we shared your love of him we share your loss. And yet, now it is over, we may celebrate his life as much as we mourn his death.

The third item in the public papers of John F. Kennedy, following the inaugural address, following the briefings to the Soviet leadership, is the transcript of the remarks at the meeting of the Democratic National Committee on Jan. 21, 1961. At this meeting, Senator Jackson stepped down as chairman of his party, a post he had assumed in order to run the campaign to win the election for his friend and colleague who now, as president, recounted and thanked him and ended saying, "so I hope we will all stand up and give a good cheer to Scoop Jackson."

Let us do that in our hearts and may the echo linger. And leader, farewell.

Edward M. Kennedy, Democratic Senator from Massachusetts:

Those of us who had the joy of sharing Scoop's life must now share the sorrow of his loss. Yet after the time of requiem has passed, we will remember with gratitude the life of this great leader, whom all of us knew as a good man.

His legacy lives in the lesson he taught us that national defense means not only a strong military but a just society. He was an advocate of modern weaponry and great security. But he never believed that he could or we should pay for a missile or a bomber by taking food from a hungry child or hope from a jobless worker. He was a champion of labor, even when unions are said to be out of style. He was a tribune of civil liberty even at the McCarthy era. Some said he lacked charisma. In reality, he had a special charisma of conscience.

An so his legacy will live as well in the great causes that were his abiding concern. There was no greater friend of Israel than Scoop Jackson, who helped the Jewish people as much as any American ever had to hold their promised land. Some individuals have planted a tree in Israel: Scoop helped to plant an entire nation.

He heard and heeded the cry for liberty from countless human beings who are the victims of Soviet tyranny and who depend on us to defend their human rights. And he was always there for his beliefs, despite the trends of the moment or the tides of a political season.

I like to think one reason we were close all these years, even though we sometimes disagreed, was because we both knew what it meant to sail against the prevailing winds. Scoop did not wish it this way. He would have preferred to be president. But he would not, could not, be false to his own vision of what was right.

And through it all he kept his sense of perspective and of humor. During his 1972 presidential campaign there were reporters who complained that Scoop's voice was a monotone. Eight years later, when I was running and the reporters claimed I was shouting too much, Scoop and I conferred on the Senate floor. Maybe, he suggested, we could take an average of our speaking styles and claim the perfect modulation.

I first came to know Scoop in the early years of my brother's presidential campaign when I was traveling to the state of Washington and of course, the West. And from that moment on, for nearly half of my life, Scoop Jackson was with me and with my family in the best and darkest of days.

And on that day that Jack died, he was a friend who comforted me. On more days than I can count I felt his happy clasp on my shoulder, I saw his crinkled smile. I enjoyed his counsel and his company. We talked frequently of our families and, more than any piece of legislation or political achievement, he treasured Helen and Anna Marie and Peter. The three of you kept him young at the age of 71 until the very end of his days. And I believe he loved you more than he could ever say.

Others will recall Scoop, and history will record him for his significance and his stand of national service through the terms of nine presidents from Franklin Roosevelt to Ronald Reagan. For his service encompassed more than a fifth of the entire existence of this great republic. We all knew that and we honor him for it.

But in this dark time for his family when suddenly we must say our farewill, I recall and salute Scoop, most of all, as among the best of friends.

Rep. Thomas S. Foley of Washington state, a member of Jackson's staff in the late 1950s and early '60s;

Among the great number who honor Scoop Jackson's life, who mourn his passing, are many special people. The family—Helen, Anna Marie and Pete—the heads of all the branches of our state and national government, his beloved fellow citizens of Washington and of Everett, the friends of his childhood, those in public and private life in great office and great position, to whom he gave counsel and received it.

But among those that feel especially close to him and especially close to one another are those who, at some time in their lives, had the great honor of sharing his life in service with and for him.

The Jackson staff, present and past, has grown rather large. He was in public life for over 40 years. And they span generations, and they are scattered, in many cases some retired, some in universities, in the professions, some in other positions in public and private life.

But all join, particularly at this time, by the great sense of honor and pride that they have in spending part of their life with this great man. For as he was to his family, he was to his staff—not a lonely leader, but a teacher.

And he taught mainly by example. The example of a man of tremendous integrity and commitment, of constancy and courage. A man who infused the professions of a long public service which he had chosen with the greatest dignity. A man who cared for his staff and who received from them in return a fierce loyalty, because for all of us who served him, it will remain to the end of our days a matter of enormous pride. (I guess you're never too old to shed a tear for a friend.)

And so many people today owe so much, as I do, to Scoop Jackson, that can never be repaid. There are millions in fact who scarcely know his name, but have reason to bless his memory.

There will never be another Jackson staff. There will never be another generation of young men and women who will have an opportunity to learn the best of our country, its institutions and its great leaders—from this man.

He is gone, but his work continues. And, as Scoop would be the first to have us realize, life must go on. He gave his life to the security of his country, to the maintenance of peace, to the protection of the physical treasures of our nation, to the protection of the young and the old, those who were disadvantaged and destitute.

He fought for a just society, a fair society. He fought for a better world, and he believed passionately that government could be an instrument of that improvement.

I think we can best remember him by carrying the lessons of his life and character, of his commitment and belief, forward. I think he would understand if we believe that the best memorial to Scoop is to carry on his great work.

And he would be the first one to say that there is much to be done—that there are tasks to be finished, there is a peace to be maintained, a country to be made more secure—not just by weapons and strength, passionately though he believed that—but by strengthening its institutions, by protecting its future, by supporting its economy, and by most of all speaking out everywhere at home and abroad for the rights and the spirit and dignity of humanity.

He would understand, perhaps, if we pause today to remember his memory. But as those who work for him will assure you, Scoop would remind you that if you were going to carry on an important work, tomorrow is a working day. Farewell, Scoop, God bless you.

Chaplain Elson:

Let us pray. Almighty God, father of mercies and giver of all comfort, deal graciously, we pray thee, with all who mourn this day, especially Helen, Anna Marie and Peter. That casting every care on thee, they may know the consolation of thy love, the healing of thy grace and the companionship of thy presence.

We thank thee, our father, that deep in the human heart is an unquenchable trust that life does not end with death, that the God who made us will care for us beyond the bounds of vision and that our hope has been so wondrously confirmed in the life, the words, and the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We thank thee, our Father, for those quiet moments apart from the clash and clamor and tumult of our days, when the vale is lifted and pure love and thanksgiving fills our hearts.

So it is with us this moment, in this, thy house, we thank thee for thy servant Henry, for the nobility of his manhood, for the integrity of his person, for his sensitiveness and his tenderness, for his love and his joy, for his wit and his wisdom, for his transparent spirituality and for his Christian testimony.

We thank thee for his peerless public service to this state, to the nation, to the multitudes of many races and varied faiths across the world, who this day rise up to call him blessed.

Help us to prize highly and to guard carefully the gifts which his loyalty and devotion to duty have passed on to us. Grant, oh Lord, that we may be true as he was true, that we may be loyal as he was loyal, and that we may serve our country and our God all the days of our lives, and leave the world better as he did for having lived in it through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Oh thou King of King and Lord of Lords, take this nation in thy holy keeping, raise up leaders for every age and endow her with the sinews of the spirit so she may advance thy kingdom of justice and righteousness and peace throughout this world.

Lord support us all the day long until the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and the busy world is hushed and the fever of life is over and our work is done. Then in thy mercy, grant us safe lodging and holy rest and peace at the last through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The congregation repeated "The Lord's Prayer" and then stood and sang the hymn, "God of Our Fathers" with Sue Shawger providing trumpet accompaniment.

Rev. Hervey followed with the benediction. The dignitaries filed from the church, and the pallbearers escorted the coffin to the waiting hearse.

SCOOP

His life was noble, and the elements so mixed in him that Nature might stand up and say to all the world:
"This was a man."

And when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garish sun.

Henry Martin Jackson, United States Senator from Washington State, died last Thursday. Those of us who had the privilege and the job of working with Scoop Jackson learned a lot about him and even more from him.

Short, grey-haired, youthful and vigorous at 71, and frequent wearer of the "Jackson uniform" (blue blazer, grey slacks, blue button-down shirt, striped tie, and black penny loafers), Scoop dearly loved his wife, Helen, and his children, Anna Marie and Peter. He took great pride in his children's accomplishments. He also practiced diagnostic medicine without a license.

Scoop taught us how to remember things we had to do by writing them on many little slips of paper that are kept folded together in your pocket. He taught us how to maintain a quick-retrieval file system using brown manila envelopes that are kept stacked on your desk and chairs. He regularly demonstrated that it was possible to hold, simultaneously, three different meetings and two telephone conversations—each about different subjects—and achieve remarkably coherent results all around.

Scoop believed that the study of history and English literature were the best preparation for a political career. As he once put it: "History teaches us how things got the way they are, and the great writers give us insight into human nature and behavior. Both help us make better public policy."

He consistently reminded us of the need for thorough professionalism in an all too often hurried and slapdash world. When we performed well, he gave us the ultimate Jackson accolate: "Good work, troops!"

His national reputation came from his magnificent record on defense, foreign policy, economic, environmental, human rights, energy and natural resources issues, and two tries for the Democratic Presidential nomination. But when asked what he regarded as his single most important accomplishment, Scoop said it was when, in 1960, as Democratic National Chairman for John F. Kennedy's successful Presidential campaign, "We put an end to religious bigotry as a major factor in American politics."

Scoop was not our boss, he was our leader, our teacher, and above all, our friend. He showed us how to disagree without being disagreeable. He believed that civility is not a sign of weakness, and that character is as important as competence. He taught us to lower the level of rhetoric and raise the level of reason. That willingness to compromise is not capitulation.

He demonstrated that one can accomplish more by openness, patience, and persistence than by cunning and surprise. He taught us that in government, good people are even more important than good policy, and that idealism is still a viable force in the frequently cynical world.

Most importantly, he reminded us that honor and decency are essential ingredients of a truly civilized society. That each man and woman, regardles of his or her station in life, is entitled to be treated with dignity on the basis of our fundamental equality as human beings.

Our work with him exemplified John Kennedy's view of public service as "a proud and lively career." We respected him, we admired him, and we loved him. When he died, we cried, not for Scoop, but for ourselves and for our country.

From now on in whatever we do, if we follow the lessons Scoop taught us, we may not always be winners, but we will never be losers. And, from time to time when we have done our professional best, I'm willing to bet that we will hear a distant, but still penetrating voice saying a cheery: "Good work, troops!"

REMARKS OF GRENVILLE GARSIDE AT MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON, WASHINGTON, D.C., SEPTEMBER 6, 1983

Those of us who worked with Scoop over the years find it hard to believe he is gone. We thought he would live forever.

Scoop did nothing to discourage this thinking. He was proud of his Norwegian ancestry and took pains to remind us that longevity was part of this heritage.

And, of course, he had the looks, the vitality and the intellectual curiosity of a man of fifty, with a wonderful wife and two lively children to keep him young.

You would think that a man—after 45 years in public life—would succumb to cynicism and fatigue, but not Scoop. He practiced the art of politics with vigor, enthusiasm and hope right to the end.

And he was a born politician who thrived on people and the hurly-burly of public life. His constituency spread far beyond the borders of Washington State. Five years ago, on a freezing February afternoon, I watched him campaign through the Shengli oil fields in China. Had an election been held that day, he would have been elected to the Central Committee in a landslide.

His life in the Senate seemed at times chaotic and disorganized but it worked. He was invariably juggling three meetings and two telephones and the subject matter might range from a new charter for the CIA to someone's missing social security checks.

He had a personal filing system—consisting of dozens of brown manila envelopes—which defied repeated attempts at organization. We will never know what vital bits of history disappeared into those envelopes.

He was—some of us thought—almost too accessible to everybody. He had the disconcerting habit of seeking policy advice from people with no known expertise on the subject. And his sources of information were legendary. It was a rare moment when you could surprise him with fresh information.

He was always talking to his colleagues—in committee, in the cloakroom, in Capitol hideaways, on the Senate subway, and this was a crucial element in his success. He had a tremendous ability to work with his fellow Senators. He always seemed to know their special concerns and problems and how to accommodate them.

Much of his most successful work was accomplished in the Senate gymnasium. It was an ironclad rule that Scoop went to the gym in the late afternoon every day. He went there, I am convinced, for three reasons: to get away from us; to exercise, and most important, to wheel and deal in the privacy of the steam room.

We joked with him about his role in the decline of the legislative process but he left behind a remarkable record of legislative achievement.

Scoop's influence on the defense and foreign policy issues of the past thirty years was immeasurable but his contributions in other areas of national policy will also be long remembered.

One thinks, for example, of his leadership in achieving statehood for Alaska and Hawaii in the 1950s, at the time not a simple matter at all. Or, in the 1960s, his skillful leadership in securing passage of controversial legislation to create the National Wilderness System, the great Redwoods National Park in California and the magnificent Cascades Park in his home state. More recently he crafted the compromises which made possible the monumental Alaska Lands Act. No one else had the credibility to do it.

Scoop thought the government should be more concerned about the impact of its actions on the environment and so Congress enacted the National Environmental Policy Act, certainly the most significant environmental legislation of our time.

He thought we ought to have a Strategic Petroleum Reserve to protect our economy from foreign oil embargoes and Congress acted to create one.

He thought we ought to give young people a chance for productive work in our national parks and forests, and so Congress enacted the Youth Conservation Corps to do just that.

The list is much longer but the point is clear. Scoop's legacy touches our lives in many ways. It spans the continent and stretches to the farthest reaches of Alaska and Hawaii. We are all the richer for his creative use of the legislative process.

Emerson wrote that the "high prize of life, the crowning fortune of a man, is to be born with a bias to some pursuit which finds him employment and happiness, whether it be to make baskets or broadswords or canals or statues or songs. . . ."

It was Scoop's crowning fortune—and ours—that he was born to the pursuit of politics, a pursuit which found him happiness and fulfillment over a remarkable career in public life. Those of us who had the chance to join him on this happy journey mourn the loss of our leader and friend.

(By Pat Chapman)

SEATTLE, WASH.—The loss of Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson will be felt here in Washington and in our Nation's Capitol for years to come.

Mostly, he will be remembered for having the courage of his convictions. Scoop Jackson never swayed with ideological or political currents. His views concerning the Soviet Union never changed throughout his political career. At the same time he was championing the cause of the military, Senator Jackson was also working hard on progressive environmental issues in the Interior and Energy Committees. Doing what he thought was best: That's how Scoop Jackson approached his job.

It was a credo based on hard work and determiniation. The Senator's expertise in foreign affairs was widely respected whether one agreed with him or not.

With Senator Jackson, there was never a facade put on for political purposes. What you saw was what there was. And his commitment to people ran over into his personal life. Throughout his career, all proceeds from speeches went to a special scholarship fund.

It is ironic, given recent events, that we need Scoop Jackson now more than ever before.

HENRY JACKSON

When Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson first took a seat in Congress, Franklin D. Roosevelt was President. It was January 1941. The nation still suffered from the Great Depression. The name Pearl Harbor would remain unfamiliar for another 11 months.

Since then, America and the world have undergone vast transformations. Throughout them all, Scoop Jackson played a continuous leading role in guiding this nation. He died suddenly of heart failure at age 71 on Thursday. Before death ended his 43 years of distinguished service, Henry Jackson compiled a record of achievement and influence seldom equaled in the history of American Government.

On foreign affairs he was a hard-line conservative, and it was for those views, perhaps that he was best known. A profound, undeviating distrust of the Soviet Union made him one of the most consistent champions of Cold War hostility toward Moscow. That same conviction fueled his enthusiasm for a strong national defense, achieved by generous spending for weapons and armed forces.

After the Nixon Administration negotiated SALT I with the Soviets, it then had to negotiate it anew with Henry Jackson. Before he gave his assent—necessary to win Senate approval—he forced concessions. He later denounced the SALT II accord as "appeasement" and was instrumental in blocking Senate ratification of it. His unstinting support of U.S. intervention in Vietnam and espousal of the "domino theory" alienated him from many of his fellow Democrats, but Henry Jackson always insisted that he, not they, was the true adherent to Roosevelt-Truman-Kennedy liberalism.

And liberal he was on domestic affairs, consistently. He was a proud New Deal Democrat; he believed in Big Government. He was pro-civil rights: His children attended integrated public schools, and he first gained national notice by leading Senate critics against the demagoguery of Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

He was pro-labor and pro-consumer: Unions could count on his vote, and he fought tirelessly to restrain energy prices and to impose a windfall profits tax on oil.

As chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, later named the Energy Committee, Senator Jackson was perhaps the big oil companies' most formidable foe during the 1970s.

He was pro-environment: He authored the 1969 National Environmental Policy Act, which created the Environmental Protection Agency and is perhaps the nation's most important environmental law. He was skilled at balancing environmental needs against requirements for economic growth.

No official in Washington was more dedicated to Israel. He also co-authored the Jackson-Vanik Amendment, which denied the Soviets trade concessions unless they eased Jewish emigration.

The list of his achievements, lengthy as it is, could not show what a political professional Henry Jackson was. Voters in Washington state never gave him less than a mandate. His peers in Washington, D.C., marveled at his skill as a legislator, a powerbroker, a builder of coalitions.

President Kennedy considered making him his running mate. President Nixon asked him to be his Secretary of Defense, but was turned down. Henry Jackson himself twice sought the Presidency, in 1972 and 1976, but the times did not match the man. Though never President, Scoop Jackson influenced America perhaps as much as any recent leader outside the Oval Office. His leadership will be missed.

HENRY M. JACKSON, R.I.P.

(By George Weigel)

In his now-classic essay on Tolstoy, Sir Isaiah Berlin discussed the difference between the hedgehog and the fox. Most of us are foxes; we are interested in many things, driven by no one compelling passion, content to bounce from issue to issue and concern to concern, rarely worried about how it all fits together. The hedgehog, on the other hand, is slower, uglier, much less romantic. But the hedgehog knows one great thing, and sticks doggedly to that truth in and out of season, to both praise and criticism. A world comprised only of hedgehogs would not be a very attractive, or even healthy, place. But a world without hedgehogs is perhaps in even greater peril.

Henry M. Jackson was a hedgehog in an era dominated by political foxes. The one great truth he knew—that totalitarianism was the most dangerous form of tyranny known to human history, and that the Soviet Union uniquely incarnated the totalitarian antiethic—was popular in the 1950s when Jackson first came to national attention, unpopular in the late 1960s and early 1970s when he tried to become president, and on the comeback in the 1980s when Jackson was taken from us so suddenly.

There is a kind of savage irony in the now-unbreakable linkage between the day of his death and the confirmation of his direct warnings about the nature of the Soviet leadership, which had just sacrificed 269 innocent travelers' lives on the altar of its xenophobia.

The consistency of Jackson's resolute anti-communism almost certainly helped cost him the presidency. For, in an age dominated by the politics of accommodation, Henry Jackson could come across like the legendary fundamentalist minister who was once haranguing a congregation about the evils of sin and the pains of hell. After an hour of fire and brimstone, the minister ended with the familiar Gospel text, "There will be great weeping and gnashing of teeth!" At which point an old woman said in a loud stage whisper, "But I don't have any teeth." To which the minister replied, "Teeth will be provided!" This is how much of the media post-mortem on Jackson is being written: Jackson as anti-communist fundamentalist, the "last Cold Warrior," the consummate "hawk."

There can be no doubt about the depth of Jackson's anti-communism and his firm belief that democracy required a stable, effective military shield against Soviet aggression. But to reduce Jackson's worldview and policies to the bumper-sticker level of "last Cold Warrior" is an exercise in laziness, ignorance, or political malice. For Henry Jackson remained, throughout his entire public life, a liberal internationalist as well as an anti-communist.

Like the forces in the American trade union movement with which he was so long allied, Jackson knew that an exclusively military response to Soviet power, particularly in Third World situations that cried out for social change, was certainly bound to fail. Over the past year, Jackson has been bringing this kind of thinking to bear on the tortured region of Central America. He clearly understood the Soviets' stake in a destablized isthmus on our southern borders. But Jackson insisted that the "security shield" we should help erect in the region be shielding genuine social, economic, and political reform, and not the power of the oligarchs.

Those who are ready to dismiss Henry Jackson as merely another hardware-crazed militarist tend to forget that it was Jackson who, with other like-minded Democratic centrists, reestablished human rights as a central goal of U.S. foreign policy (long before Jimmy Carter was visible on the national radar). And it was this commitment to human rights, I think, that was the deepest level of Jackson's anticommunism. Henry Jackson knew, in his heart and in his bones, what totalitarianism did to people; and it revolted him.

Not for him the back-slapping exchanges with the masters of the Gulag in which so many "conservative" businessmen have engaged. Henry Jackson was willing to do business with the Soviet Union; but political business, the business of blunting the course of Soviet power and getting agreement between our two countries on the rules that would govern international behavior.

Jackson's genius, too often obscured by both his rhetoric and the national media's stereotyping, was to understand that the problem of Soviet power and the urgent problem of war were inextricably linked in our age. One had to face the full measure of the Soviet threat; but one also had to consider (as he would surely have had us consider in the wake of the Korea Air Lines crime) that other-than-military responses to the threat were often most effective. Neither accommodation to Soviet power nor hysterical dis-engagement from dealings with the U.S.S.R., but a careful, long-term effort to change the way the Soviet leadership dealt with the world, so that the words "international community" would mean something more than bland piety; that was the Jackson perspective and prescription.

That wisdom, which Jackson at his best represented better than any other public figure, must not be allowed to die with him.

HENRY 'SCOOP' JACKSON

The death of Sen. Henry Jackson removes one of the giants from the national legislature.

The Democrat from the state of Washington was not among those flamboyant legislators who are more froth than substance. He was solid, hard-working, honest—one of those men who forms the backbone of Congress.

It was a mark of the respect in which he was held that he had strong support from elements ranging across the political spectrum. Organized labor, the Jewish community, civil rights activists, hard-liners on defense, staunch anti-communists—all liked the cut of his job. Democratic and Republican presidents alike sought his counsel.

Jackson's diligence accounted for the acquisition of his nickname. As a 15-year-old in Everett, Wash., he delivered so many copies of the hometown newspaper without complaint from subscribers that they started calling him "Scoop."

Many of his political colleagues thought Jackson was among the most qualified Americans for the presidency. But that job eluded him, though he tried for it twice.

He was an expert on energy matters, a staunch supporter of Israel, a friend of organized labor. He was a strong supporter of civil rights; it was typical of Jackson that he quietly sent his children to public integrated schools while many other politicians who bragged about their civil rights records sent their children to private schools.

Perhaps he is best known for his support of a strong defense. He knew the nation needed it in a world in which one of the superpowers was the Soviet Union. He once said the Soviet leadership reminded him of "burglars walking down a hotel hallway, trying every door."

A friend who is a heart specialist said Jackson's anger over the Soviet's downing of a Korean commercial airliner may have contributed to his fatal heart attack. Just hours before, he had appeared at a press conference in Everett to denounce the Soviet attack.

Jackson's presence will be missed on Capitol Hill. He was a superb legislator. He also was one swell fellow.

WASHINGTON'S SENATOR JACKSON DIES

Death has robbed the U.S. Senate of an eloquent voice for a strong national defense in the passing of Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson, D-Wash., in his home state Thursday.

One of the most influential senators on the Democratic side of the aisle, Jackson twice sought his party's nomination for the presidency. He was an articulate friend of Israel and was instrumental in the creation of the Environmental Protection Agency.

On a personal level, he had a tie to Albuquerque and New Mexico. His widow, Helen Hardin Jackson is a former Albuquerque resident. She and Jackson were married in Albuquerque in 1961 after Jackson met her working as a receptionist for the late Sen. Clinton P. Anderson, D-N.M.

Considered one of "the last of the cold warriers" by his colleagues, Jackson died shortly after holding a news conference to condemn the Soviet Union for shooting down a civilian airliner.

His death leaves a void in the national leadership that will not be quickly or easily filled.

FOND MEMORIES OF SCOOP JACKSON

(By Eileen Grevey Clifford)

In 1973-74, as a staff member on the U.S. Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I came to know Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson. It was a rare privilege that stirs fond memories of him in the wake of his unexpected death last week.

Sen. Jackson, as the Tribune noted editorially, was a true giant in Congress. He generally took on only those issues in which he was very knowledgeable and to which he was extremely committed.

Once involved, he would doggedly pursue his objective, even if it took years, to its successful resolution. It was this tenacity for "doing his homework" and then getting the job done that earned the respect of his colleagues and made him one of a handful of powerful senators.

Ironically, the same qualities that made him so effective as a senator kept Scoop from being a viable presidential candidate. He was a man of substance, not charisma, and he was neither interested in nor capable of image-making.

Through two bids for the presidency, Sen. Jackson handicapped himself by refusing to go the last mile with the image makers. He would not master the glib cliches that can get a candidate through a subject he wants to avoid.

While quite warm in person, Jackson came across as very somber on TV. Well-wishers often suggested he should smile more in front of the cameras.

I was there once when someone made this suggestion to him and he replied: "Look, I'm not running for cheerleader. I'm seeking the office of president of the United States and in general, that's pretty serious business."

One of the few concessions he did make to television ended in abject, if somewhat humorous, failure. It involved the design of a man's suit so that when he has a long sit-down interview, the suit collar doesn't bunch up in the back, making him appear hunched over.

Such a suit was tailored for Scoop. The only problem was that this suit was dark blue and not easily distinguishable from most of his other suits. Somehow, Scoop always managed to wear the sitting-down suit when standing up and standing-up suits while being interviewed sitting down.

Is it possible that such shenanigans could have cost him—and the country—this chance to be president?

Through he was generally considered liberal, Jackson was known as a hardliner on defense. When questioned on this, he would reply, "I don't know if I'm a hawk or a dove. I just don't want my country to become a pigeon."

How sad that the author of this remark should die within hours after delivering publicly a scathing attack on the Soviet Union for downing a civilian jetliner.

The nation has suffered a great loss in the death of Sen. Jackson. However, it is my sincere belief that his legacy is a government that is stronger for his having been a part of it.

[From the Palo Alto (Calif.) Times Tribune]

A BIG GAP IN THE SENATE

Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson was a profound asset to his fellow Washington state residents, nine U.S. presidents and the masses of America during his 43 years of congressional service.

The lawmaker's death last week at 71, shortly after his return from an exhausting mission to the Peoples Republic of China, has brought a torrent of tributes from those who knew the man and the politician best of all. The best of these eulogies fittingly have been devoid of partisan overtones.

Jackson deserves this nation's everlasting praise and respect for a lifetime of unswerving patriotism and demonstrable concern for Americans at all economic levels. He was an unbudging hawk on military readiness and outspoken against this countries enemies. But liberalism also was prominent in his long elective service, for his basic humanitarianism was never in doubt.

A Senate colleague, Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., perhaps summmed it up best in a simple eulogy to the son of Norwegian immigrants:

"There is a great emptiness in the Senate with him gone."

Jackson, a two-time contender for the presidency, made huge contributions in the Senate and far beyond its confines.

I'LL MISS THE CALLS FROM SCOOP

(By Miner Baker)

No doubt hundreds of individuals knew Scoop Jackson better than I did. Many will chronicle his legislative accomplishments, his tireless campaigning, his political acumen, and his power.

I write of a man who made me his friend and revealed a facet that may not have been immediately apparent to the others. Does this account of Senator Jackson belong in the business section? You bet . . . because no one in public life had a more thorough understanding of the practical operation of the American business system. No one was a better friend of business, as he was also a friend of labor and consumers. He saw that the whole was greater than the parts.

Friends and foes alike marveled at Scoop's ability, with a voting record as liberal as any in the Senate, to maintain an almost unparalleled base of personal and financial support from corporate executives. He could do it becauses he did not dissemble. He was straight-forward about the need for legislation on environment, working conditions, civil rights and welfare.

He was working to improve the system not change its nature. He respected the business establishment as he cherished the United States Senate. He got things done for the business establishment but he was never a flunky.

FIRST CAMPAIGN

How do I know these things? Scoop and I were contemporaries at the University of Washington but I didn't know him then. I met him first during his first campaign for Congress, and I was moved by his sincerity. The feeling was reinforced by later occasional and always brief encounters.

During my years as economist for the bank, he sometimes sent me an item of interest—a clipping with a scrawled note, "Maybe you should look into this. Scoop."

His staff made appointments for me when I wanted access to the leading economists in government. Once I had lunch with him in the Senate dining room. He talked mostly about the remarkable ability of Hubert Humphrey, then vice-president, to juggle nine or ten political balls at once without a miscue. His praise for a fellow-pro was fulsome and sincere.

This was the sum total of my association with Henry Jackson before my retirement from the bank four years ago. But I felt he was a friend. And the little dibdabs of correspondence revealed something of what was on the senator's mind.

Not many months after we settled into our new home in the foothills, he called from Washington. "This is Scoop Jackson." I would have said, "You're kidding," but I knew the voice. He asked about personal things, said he hoped we'd get better acquainted now, then rambled a bit about some current legislation.

A WILLING BACKBOARD

The next time it was Tora who answered the phone. My wife is not easily awed but she said, "Oh, Senator Jackson!" "No," he said, "this is Scoop." What did he want that time? My opinion about a prominent economist.

This was all very heady for me. Each time Scoop called I was afraid I wouldn't hear from him again. Two, three months later he would call.

I kidded about this, told my friends that Scoop would call and tell me what he thought, then say, "That's right, isn't it?" And if I agreed, then it was right; and if I disagreed, then it was still right.

But it wasn't really like that. Like all of us, the Senator had some uncertainties in his mind, and it was my good fortune that he found me a willing backboard against which to bounce his ideas.

He was concerned, as every political figure should be, with resolving the apparent contradiction between security for individuals and incentives for business.

Scoop has been described as a workaholic. That's not an appropriate term, because his work was also his recreation. He worried about adjusting to life without that work. Was his death untimely at 71? For us, yes. For him, I say thank God he didn't have to retire.

[From the Yakima (Wash.) Herald-Republic, Sept. 4, 1983]

JACKSON'S DEATH SHOCKS THE STATE

He was the stuff which legends are made.

With the passing of Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson last week certainly an era in state, national and international politics ended. During the course of an illustrious career that began with election as Snohomish County Prosecutor at age 26 and subsequently spanned 43 years in the Congress of the United States, Scoop Jackson served his state and country well.

It would take reams of paper to chronicle that unbelievably effective career as a public servant. But what is unquestionably the most noteworthy accomplishment is the reputation Scoop Jackson built as a fearless campaigner for human rights, a champion of his country and for just plain being an honest, hard-working, no-nonsense solon of unquestioned integrity.

It was always somewhat amusing when referring to that long-time Senate delegation from this state to point out Scoop Jackson was the "junior" senator until after the 1980 election. That, of course, was because the "senior" man was venerable Warren G. Magnuson, who won his trip to the Senate several years before Jackson moved over from the House in 1952. But for the decades that followed before Magnuson's defeat in 1980, the Magnuson-Jackson team in the U.S. Senate was to become, hands down, the most powerful, effective tandem in the history of this nation. There was nothing "junior" about Jackson's performance and record.

As newspaper folk, we were keenly aware of Jackson's accessibility when in the state. On numerous occasions the Herald-Republic editorial board discussed local, state, national and even international issues at length with him and we were always impressed with his grasp of those issues.

Jackson was something of a paradox in his legislative career. He was an unabashed liberal on social issues, a man who could spearhead the writing of the nation's first major piece of environmental legislation—the national Environmental Policy Act in 1969. At the same time he was one of the Senate's most outspoken hawks on defense matters, a man who could block Senate ratification of the SALT II treaty because he thought it was weighted too much in favor of the Soviets. Dubbed one of the last of the cold warriors, it was ironic, but perhaps fitting, that on the day he died Scoop Jackson held one last press conference to denounce the Soviet Union for shooting down an unarmed commercial jetliner Thursday.

Soon the scramble to replace him will begin, with the task of appointing a new senator falling on Gov. John Spellman. Then will come the election in November to pick a permanent replacement. But in the meantime, before politics as usual, let us honor the memory of a man who was indeed a legend in his own lifetime.

A Washington State congressional delegation with neither Magnuson nor Jackson? Somehow it just doesn't seem possible . . .

HENRY "SCOOP" JACKSON: A LEGEND AND A LEGACY

(By Mayor Frank Ivancie, Portland, Oreg.)

The title on the door was: "Henry M. Jackson, United States Senator, State of Washington." And, indeed, for 43 years he served that state well.

He brought irrigation and reclamation projects to the eastern part of the state and defense contracts to its western cities. He helped bring the shipyard to Bremerton, the nuclear reactor to Hanford, and the navy base to Oak Harbor. He looked after his own.

The door could have had other titles. It could have said: "Henry M. Jackson, United States Senator for the Pacific Northwest." It was his understanding, his knowledge, his determination that, in large measure, were responsible for bringing regional projects like the Columbia River hydroelectric system and the 40-foot channel to completion.

The door could have had a third title: "Henry M. Jackson, United States Senator for the People of the United States." He had a fervent dedication to a strong nation and a nation that spoke with authority and firmness. He also had a fervent dedication to the environment, parks and energy independence. He was the driving force behind the Environmental Quality Act of 1968 and the establishment of Washington State's North Cascades National Park and the Alaska pipeline.

Finally, the door could have had the title: "Henry M. Jackson, United States Senator for the World." He had a compassion for the dispossessed, the hungry Third World nations and human rights.

He was a quiet man, serious without being stern. Hardworking. The son of Norwegian immigrants, he worked his way through college and law school during the heart of the Depression as a dishwasher and waiter. He was only 28 when first elected to Congress in 1940. As a liberal Democrat, he served six terms in the House of Representatives—with time out for Army duty during World War II—before beginning his long term in the Senate in 1953.

He was one of the very powerful political figures of our time—and certainty one of the least pretentious. The working man could approach him as easily as the president of a corporation. He was more given to action than rhetoric. He was a strong supporter of labor (his father had been a union man and so had he, in his youth), of civil rights, of the American Indian, of the poor and the unemployed.

For many he represented the American dream—the son of an immigrant laborer/carpenter from a small, smokey mill town on the Western frontier (that was Everett at the start of the century). He was a United States senator and almost became president of the United States. He wanted very much to be president and he would have been a good one.

He lost his bid for the presidency twice. It saddened him. But it didn't sour him or slow him down. He was a great senator.

He was also a friend. When I needed help, it was Henry M. Jackson who came to my rescue as speaker for my fundraiser. When I visited Washington, D.C., his door was always open and I took advantage of it. He was an inspiration. It was an education to discuss regional, national and international affairs with him. I shall never forget the sincerity and earnestness of the man.

The monuments to Henry M. Jackson are his accomplishments and the public service legacy he leaves behind. Miss him, we may; but we should give thanks for his time among us.

Washington state claims him as a native son. The Democratic party claims him as one of their own. But, first and foremost, he was a great American.

[From the Gilroy (Calif.) Dispatch, Sept. 9, 1983]

"SCOOP" JACKSON: ONE OF THE BEST

It seemed oddly apt, if unfair, that Henry Jackson died in the shadow of a major news event that all but obscured his passing. For more than four decades, Jackson toiled in public service and achieved a great deal without gaining the public notice he deserved. His bland, straight-arrow style may have been partly responsible for that.

No hint of scandal or double-dealing ever tainted Jackson, but honesty was not his only strong suit. Early on, he fought Joseph McCarthy at a time when that took great courage. He authored legislation creating the Environmental Protection Agency. And he wrote the Jackson-Vanik Amendment, which forbade the U.S. from granting trade concessions to countries restricting emigration, an act aimed at Moscow's treatment of Jews that foreshadowed Jimmy Carter's human rights policy. Jackson was not a wealthy man, but he donated all his earnings from speeches to a scholarship fund for needy students.

Critics called him the "senator from Boeing," a jibe Jackson took in stride. The fact the manufacturer is the largest employer in Washington state obviously had something to do with it, but so did the senator's unshakeable conviction that the Soviet Union is an untrustworthy adversary and that the best guarantee against war is a strong defense establishment. He also endorsed this country's participation in Vietnam, a position that forever deprived him of support from the left wing of his party, a price he paid willingly for holding—as he always did—to his convictions.

Henry Jackson never achieved his highest aspiration—the presidency—but his long and distinguished career, and his uncompromising dedication to the principles he held, constitute an enduring memorial to one of the finest United States senators of our time.

[From the Port Angeles (Wash.) Chronicle, Sept. 7, 1983]

HENRY M. JACKSON: 1912-83

(By Del Price)

It is hard to believe that Sen. Henry M. Jackson is dead. "Scoop" has been part of our lives for so many years that it seemed he would go on forever. Even at 71 he appeared healthy and vigorous. He took care of himself with good living habits and regular exercise. While we mourn his death, we can give thanks that he died suddenly and at his home in Everett, close to family and friends. It would have been tragic to see a man of such outstanding qualities and intellect linger on, perhaps incapacitated.

Scoop leaves many friends here on the Peninsula as well as throughout the world. Only a few days ago he sent a letter of condolence after the death of Mary Brown, his long-time friend and supporter in Sequim. He always remembered old friends like Mary, Emerson Lawrence and Frank Feeley. People who campaigned for Scoop in the early days before his band wagon grew into a political juggernaut.

He liked people and they like him. The lopsided victories at the polls proved that. He greeted people with a sincere, straightforward manner no matter what their station in life was. Perhaps it was part of his working class roots that gave him the ability to mix comfortably with world leaders and ordinary folks alike.

He took his work seriously from the time he delivered newspapers as a boy in Everett, to the time he became one of the most powerful members of the U.S. Senate. While his serious nature endeared him to Washington state voters, it hampered his two presidential bids. Scoop just did not make it in national politics where twenty seconds of television time turns voters on or off.

Thousands of words have been said about Scoop Jackson since his death Thursday night. His life and his accomplishments will fill history books, and students will read about an era in Washington state history that will never be matched. The years of the "Gold Dust Twins," Jackson and Magnuson in the U.S. Senate were extraordinary, but now they are gone.

We join in thought and spirit the many friends and relatives at his funeral today in Everett. He will be missed by all.

SENATOR WILL BE MISSED

(By Father D. Harvey McIntyre)

The death of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, understandably a deep loss to his family, also constitutes a significant void for the people of Washington state and the nation.

Senator Jackson's continued service in Congress, stretching well over four decades, has elevated him to senior status on the Hill, which earned him key committee assignments. As a result, issues of deep concern to Washington citizens received more attention and response in Congress because of his influential advocacy. Just as the absence of that influential voice brings a void into the promotion of concerns for the general community, so too will it bring a void into the promotion of several issues within the church community.

While the senator's positions were not consistently in harmony with church organizations like the Catholic Conference or Network, a Catholic lobby for social justice, his office was always just as accessible to discuss those areas of disagreement as those where there was agreement. The senator held an opposite position to the Catholic Conference on abortion, and lately has held some differences on tuition tax credits. In recent years the divergency on defense issues became much wider. At the same time, on domestic social issues, the senator was frequently on a common footing with the Conference and Network on such federal issues as the budget, jobs, legislation, voting rights and immigration.

My first personal experience of the senator's influential advocacy on behalf of social programs occurred in the 1960s' anti-poverty programs initiated by the Economic Opportunity Act (EOA) during President Johnson's administration. As a founder of Project CARITAS, located at St. Peter Claver interracial Center, I served as a member of the Seattle-King County Economic Opportunity Board. When national funding for the EOA legislation was in jeopardy, I was sent by the local board to lobby the state congressional delegation for support. Senator Jackson offered total support for the legislation and called other members of the delegation off the floor of Congress to meet with me in an effort to solicit their support. Congress supported the necessary level of funding for the Economic Opportunity Act.

My last experience of the senator's concern for the social needs of our society occurred March 30 of this year when he was endeavoring to respond to the emergency housing requirements of the needy in Washington state. He invited me to join with a dozen community leaders, local government officials and military officers he had assembled in an effort to secure the use of all available military facilities as temporary emergency housing sites.

Washington state indeed will notice for years to come the absence of this energetic, influential voice on Washington, D.C.'s Capitol Hill.

Archbishop Raymond G. Hunthausen has issued the following statement concerning the death of Sen. Henry M. Jackson:

"Sen. Jackson was an outstanding public servant, an uncommonly dedicated and capable political leader. His passing is a severe loss to the people of this state and of our nation as well. He will long be remembered as a man of courage, compassion and unswerving conviction. His wife and family have my heartfelt sympathy and prayerful support at this difficult moment."

The archbishop sent a telegram of condolence to Mrs. Jackson on behalf of the people of the Archdiocese of Seattle.

[From the Pierce County Herald, Sept. 6, 1983]

A STATESMAN PASSES

With the passing of "Scoop" Jackson last week, the country lost another of a rapidly disappearing breed—the statesman.

America has a long history of political statesmen. They spend their lives as revered, even loved, members of their constituencies, becoming almost legendary in reputation. Their characters are almost above reproach—even their foibles are remembered with humor instead of disgust—and if you disagreed with their opinions you at least had to respect them. A statesman, after all, knows about such matters: "You keep the shop, we'll take care of the ship of state."

Sometimes the rarely checked power of a member of Congress can ruin a character and wipeout a career of public service—some people are not cut out to be statesmen. But Washington residents were fortunate enough to have two unquestionable statesmen serving them in the U.S. Senate concurrently: Henry Jackson and Warren Magnuson.

As many have noted since Jackson's death last Thursday, it is strangely ironic that Magnuson, 78, was retired by Washington voters in 1980 largely because they perceived the elder statesman was in poor health and was getting too old to be effective despite his mammoth clout in the Senate. Jackson, then 68, in comparison was almost a health fanatic, seeemingly indestructible. Voters made the choice to replace Magnuson with Slade Gorton; after all they still had Jackson's prestige and seniority, and most likely would have had it for at least five more years. Fate, however, blinds the foresight of men.

Barring a remote scenario in which Magnuson is restored to the Senate, Washington now has less than two years of political experience in that body and, more important, only two years of seniority. It is truly the end of a powerful era for the state. Truthfully, much of what Washington is today has depended on the Congressional influence of Magnuson and Jackson.

Beyond Washington's loss, though, Jackson's passing means the country will have one less free-thinking public servant. The senator's grip on the Washington electorate allowed him to speak his mind without fear of reprisal at the polls. Over the years his most remembered posture was his fierce mistrust of the Soviet Union and the intentions of its government. A frontline "cold warrior," Jackson alternately drew praise and scorn for what many felt was a pro-military philosophy of government.

In actuality, however, many claim Jackson was much more pro-freedom than pro-military or anti-Soviet. It was his love of the freedom his country afforded him that spurred his attacks on the Soviet Union according to those who knew him best.

Now that he is gone, Washington state will be hard-pressed to find another of his calibre. During a time when paranoid presidents lie to protect themselves and their office, when members of Congress use their position for personal monetary or material gain, when the media is full of stories questioning the moral character of our elected leaders, it was nice to have good old steady, cantankerous "Scoop" Jackson around to look out for our interests.

Now he's gone. As a senator, the state must replace him. As a statesman, he cannot be replaced.

[From the Peninsula Times-Tribune, Sept. 7, 1983]

[From the Reporter, Sept. 6, 1983]

LIFETIME OF SERVICE WON'T BE FORGOTTEN

Even in this community where the GOP traditionally reigns supreme, Scoop Jackson was a sure-win in the ballot box. Islanders gave him close to a 2-to-1 edge over Doug Jewett in 1982; in 1976 he did even better than that against George Brown.

That really doesn't come as any surprise; this state's most popular vote-getter spent most of his adult life serving the people of Washington. In those decades of service, he touched the lives of many, as tributes to the senator in recent days have indicated. It says something about the man that those fond remembrances and words of sympathy have come from near and far: the Reagan White House; neighborhood taverns in his hometown of Everett; world capitals; the Seattle chapter of Hadassah.
